LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, March 30, 1971, being the first day of the fourth session of the 28th Parliament of the Province of Ontario for the despatch of business pursuant to a proclamation of the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant Governor of the province.

TUESDAY, MARCH 30, 1971

The House met at 3 o'clock, p.m.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, having entered the House and being seated upon the throne, was pleased to open the session with the following gracious speech.

Hon. W. Ross Macdonald (Lieutenant Governor): Pray be seated.

Mr. Speaker, and members of the legislative assembly of Ontario, I extend warmest greetings and a sincere welcome to each of you.

Since this Legislature last met, we have witnessed significant developments in the political life of our province. On behalf of our Sovereign, I extend congratulations to the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) and cordial greetings to the new ministry.

Je tiens à vous souhaiter à tous une bienvenue des plus chaleureuses.

Depuis la dernière réunion de cette assemblée, nous avons assisté à des changements importants dans la vie politique de notre province. Au nom de notre Souveraine, je présente mes félicitations au Premier Ministre et mes vœux les plus cordiaux au nouveau cabinet.

The responsibilities of the new ministry will be many. Challenges of a nature and complexity unknown to us only a few years ago now affect the daily lives of the people of Ontario whatever their interests or pursuits, wherever their place of residence. A sense of rediscovery and reappraisal reaches to the foundations of our society. We pray that the members of this Legislature will be given strength and wisdom so that your decisions will yield greater benefit to all the people of Ontario and, in so doing, enhance the vitality, maturity and unity of Canada.

The demands and pressures upon us all during the 1970s will differ markedly from those of past decades. The men and women of Ontario are establishing fresh values to apply to the quality of their lives and to attain for their children a legacy which goes far beyond older criteria of attaining personal material goods. To this end, the people of Ontario have indicated their preparedness to work, participate and make sacrifices.

This search for new values stimulates and challenges government to match the zeal of the citizenry. The structure of government must evolve accordingly so that the instruments of public service will continue to be perceptive and sensitive to the needs of the people and responsive to the requirements of responsible democracy. The government and the new ministry are committed to such evolution.

During this fourth session of the 28th Parliament of Ontario, the government will place before you an extensive programme in response to the requirements of life in Ontario during the 1970s. The ministry will listen closely to the problems of the people and will act swiftly to resolve them. Policies will seek to expand and nourish individual initiative and private responsibility.

The current unconscionable levels of unemployment which have been forced upon the Canadian people will be combatted with every means at the disposal of this provincial government. The budget will be presented on April 26. Its purpose will be to restore the inherent vitality of our economy so far as this is within provincial competence. This vitality is of extreme importance to the economic prospects of all areas of Canada.

Already several programmes, providing 12,000 immediate new jobs in Ontario, have been announced as part of the government's drive to relieve unemployment. The resources of many departments will be directed to providing further employment opportunities.

To combat unemployment and to provide for the needs of our people, the government will commence a new home construction programme. Using funds generated from the private sector and the governments of Canada and Ontario, one half billion dollars will be injected into the economy of the province. This will establish a potential for 132,000 jobs during the next year, the construction of 30,000 units of housing and shelter for 90,000 people.

Summer employment for students will also require increased government assistance. Programmes have been created to enable students to demonstrate their personal initiative, respond to their concern about the environment and acquire funds which will permit their education to be continued. Some 14,000 young people will be employed this summer by the Ontario public service, a substantial increase from previous years. Among these will be 2,000 participating in the Students Working in an Environmental Enhancement Programme. As participants in this programme, to be known as SWEEP, young people will clean up land, streams and lakeshores, plant trees and maintain parks.

Maintaining a healthy climate for both Canadian and foreign investors is essential to the economy of Ontario and the full employment of our working force. At the same time, the government believes that the people of Ontario should have at hand the means whereby our own economic, cultural and social objectives and priorities are determined in Canada by Canadians.

So that we may more clearly understand the effects of participation in our economy by non-Canadian investors and companies, and so that solutions in this clouded area do not race ahead of adequate and unemotional analysis, the government will convene a conference on foreign investment. Representatives of all segments of the community and the federal and other provincial governments will be invited to take a full and active part in the deliberations. Through this conference, the government seeks to bring together the knowledge and experience available from all possible sources in the assessment of the implications of foreign investment.

Immediate steps will be taken to enhance opportunities for Canadians to participate in the development of Ontario. The government will give preference to Canadian-owned businesses seeking grants and loans under the various incentive programmes. To further encourage Canadian enterprise and ownership, a venture capital fund will be established to assist in the financing of small businesses which have exceptional potential but which involve greater risks than are acceptable to conventional lending institutions. Additional assistance will be provided to small businesses to develop technology and products. Increased emphasis will be placed on helping industries in such areas as environmental services, transportation, and data processing.

Existing regulations and standards of the Ontario Development Corporation and the Northern Ontario Development Corporation are being revised so that assistance will be more readily available to small Canadian-owned businesses and to certain segments of our service industries. A programme of immediate assistance has been launched to improve or relocate tourist establishments.

An advisory committee drawn from Canadian-owned industries will be formed to assist manufacturers in such matters as tariff policy, the changing structure of ownership of industry and multi-national corporate activities.

Detailed consideration of one area which could have a major bearing on our cultural development is now under review by the royal commission on book publishing.

To further preserve our heritage, Crown lands will henceforth be made available only on a lease basis. The government will thus retain control over ownership. Canadians will be given preferential treatment when Crown land is to be made available for cottage lots. Canadians will have one year to lease the property before it is offered to others.

As the last decade has demonstrated, and the 1970s will reinforce, the full enjoyment of our daily activities is closely related to conditions within our cities—ease of and access to transportation, equality of services in rural areas, adequate housing, readily available recreational facilities and the elimination of pollution. The government will take those steps within its power to create an atmosphere in which a high quality of living and other special and enviable characteristics of life in Ontario are available to all.

Present programmes will be intensified and new approaches will be sought to eliminate pollution and prevent further contamination. By court and other actions, the government has already indicated its determination to enforce its policies and is examining other means by which those who pollute can be made to pay for the damage they create. To achieve this objective, all provincial programmes involved in environmental conservation, management and protection will be brought together in one department. Key branches of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, together with specific functions of the environmental health services branch of The Department of Health will be integrated with the existing Department of Energy and Resources Management. All will be reconstituted as The Ontario Department of the Environment.

The government proposes to introduce a comprehensive bill to deal with all matters related to environmental conservation. Among the many benefits which will result from the creation of this new department will be the ability to mount a stronger programme to preserve our recreational lakes and rivers. Closely related to the new department will be the appointment of an environmental council to investigate and report upon potential new pollution hazards.

The government is determined to assure the adequacy of our energy supplies for the future. It will ensure that the energy is used as efficiently as possible and that its use will not adversely affect the environment, health or life. The government will strive to maintain a choice between the various types of energy to match them with those uses for which they are best suited. To this end the committee on government productivity has been asked to review the function, structure, operation, financing and objectives of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. The committee has also been asked to advise the government with respect to the long-range energy requirements of the province.

The rapid and convenient movement of people, goods and information is central to the social and economic well-being of the residents of Ontario. The government will give increasing consideration to the creation of functional, integrated and balanced transportation systems encompassing those types of public and private transportation best suited to the needs of each area.

To accomplish this objective, the existing Departments of Highways and Transport and the facilities and services of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission will be brought together in a Department of Transportation and Communications. The new department will develop and employ ways to move large numbers of people and goods and stimulate the economic growth of the province, while being more sensitive to the environmental and aesthetic sensibilities of our people.

The Department of Transportation and Communications will be called upon to achieve a better balance between public transit, commuter services and motor vehicle traffic. It will take steps to integrate road, rail, air and water services throughout the province. It will continue to expand and improve our road system. Special emphasis will be given to the total transportation system of the larger cities and their surrounding commuter areas. To help accomplish this, assistance will be given municipalities for the development of transit facilities.

An immediate function of the new department will be to undertake a review of the costs of transporting goods into and out of northern Ontario.

The Department of Transportation and Communications will also develop a telecommunications policy for Ontario. This policy will ensure that the interests of the people are fully represented in the developments associated with radio and television broadcasting, educational television, cable and special-purpose video, data transmission systems, telephone and telegraph services, and the use of the Telesat communications satellite.

The provision of a sound and efficient system of education is essential to the well-being of the people of Ontario. During the last decade unprecedented expansion was required to meet an enrolment which doubled during a span of 14 years. Very large expenditures were needed for additional accommodation, more equipment and larger teaching staffs. During the 1970s the population of our schools can be expected to drop somewhat, allowing the government to concentrate its efforts and resources on the quality of our educational system and to ensure that every child will have the opportunity to achieve his or her full potential.

A major development will be the concentration of all post-secondary education within a reconstituted Department of Colleges and Universities. The responsibilities of this department will include, in addition to universities, colleges of applied arts and technology and such other institutions as Ryerson Polytechnical Institute. Ryerson, which over the years has grown in stature and achievement, will be authorized to award a new type of degree which will reflect a pattern of accomplishment in which work experience is required in addition to the regular programme of study. This would appear to be consonant with the main thrust of the work of the commission on post-secondary education. The government looks forward to receiving, within the year, the report of the commission dealing with the further development of post-secondary education in Ontario in the 1970s and 1980s.

It is imperative that our resources be husbanded so that full value is received for the investment made in all levels of education. Current restraints are now stabilizing the operating costs of the school system. As the province assumes a greater share of the local cost of education and provides increased money to post-secondary schools, further steps will be taken to ensure that our financial resources are used to the best advantage to provide a continued high standard of education. This is a goal that is both essential and practicable.

The government is concerned about the problems encountered by the people of rural Ontario as our countryside changes in response to population pressures, technology, urbanization and recreational demands. Steps will be taken to resolve the difficulties relating to farm assessment and inequities in property taxation. To help relieve these inequities, the government will continue its efforts in co-operation with its municipal partners to lighten the burden of real estate taxes. The capital grants programme of The Department of Agriculture and Food will be expanded and revised to more adequately reflect the requirements of Ontario farmers.

One of the crucial tasks in the coming decades will be to ensure that the land of the province, particularly in and around urban and recreational areas, is preserved in the interest of future generations. The government intends to create a new land bank programme. This will be a major instrument in the implementation of regional development, recreational, housing, transportation and urban development plans.

It is the government's conviction that the expanding regulatory and administrative apparatus of the state must be accompanied by continually expanding safeguards for the civil rights of individuals. Measures to further enshrine such rights in the statutes of Ontario will be brought forward. These will be related to procedures and the rights of individuals before the boards, commissions and tribunals established by the Legislature and the exercise of administrative discretion.

The government will accelerate its programme of consumer protection to provide assistance and guidance to our people in dealing with today's complex market place. Uniform interprovincial legislation is being developed, as are policies and practices in the area of consumer protection, securities and insurance legislation.

New policies designed to promote a more efficient economical and comprehensive system of delivery of health services will be brought forward during this session.

In a society which has concentrated on material and economic growth, the development of our culture must also be encouraged.

Living in Ontario are people of virtually every national and cultural heritage, including our native people, all sharing their strengths with others to create a dynamic family of people. The government proposes to convene a congress of ethnic culture to encourage greater communication and interaction between all groups within the Ontario family, and between these groups and the government.

Government can be successful in serving its constituents only if it is able to adapt and respond to their needs. Fundamental changes are planned to enable the Executive Council to meet the challenges of the 1970s and beyond, and will be based to a substantial degree upon the detailed analysis now being undertaken by the committee on government productivity.

Initial attention is being given to the activities and structure of the Executive Council itself. To confer reasoned flexibility upon its policy-making and management capacities, a number of committees of cabinet will be created to deal expeditiously with the co-ordination of policy in a number of related areas. Two major committees will be established by statute. One will deal with policy and priorities and will ensure, by continual review, that established policies and expenditures remain relevant to the needs and wishes of the people. This committee, assisted by a strengthened secretariat, will provide a vehicle to deal thoroughly with specific policies.

The other committee will incorporate advanced management techniques and the traditional role of the Treasury Board. In this way the Legislature will be guaranteed levels of administrative accountability and executive competence fully commensurate with the sophistication and complexity of these times. In addition, a small number of functional committees of cabinet will be created to better integrate the multitude of government programmes in broad fields of policy.

The changes in departmental responsibilities which have been described are the beginning of restructuring of the departmental design of the government of Ontario which will be undertaken in the months and years immediately ahead.

Priority will continue to be given to constitutional review. The ministry will work with other governments to produce early agreement on a revised constitution and mechanism of amendment which will be fully compatible with the needs and conditions of Canada in the 1970s and beyond.

The highlight of this session will be the opening of Ontario Place, now being completed on man-made islands in Lake Ontario. Ontario Place is a showcase of the achievements and aspirations of the people of our province. It will be a major cultural and recreational centre for all of Ontario. At the request of the government I extend a warm invitation to all members of the Legislature and all residents of Ontario to join in ceremonies on May 22 to officially open Ontario Place.

As this address has indicated, the new ministry is fully aware of the existence in Ontario of many problems of a serious and urgent nature. Measures to deal with these matters have been described.

In conclusion I ask the members of this Legislature to assign proportion and balance to their assessment of problems by remembering the enormous evidence of accomplishment that is the handiwork of all the people of Ontario. In Ontario, successive ministries have created machinery and implemented programmes which have contributed substantially to the advancement of our society. More importantly, each individual has combined his intellect, skills and labour in the eternal search for a better and more rewarding life for all. But in acknowledging our problems, let us also take pride in our accomplishments. Let us have confidence in our capacity to meet the challenges of today and tomorrow.

May Divine Providence guide you in your deliberations.

God bless the Queen and Canada.

The Honourable the Lieutenant Governor was then pleased to retire from the chamber.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that to prevent mistakes, I have obtained a copy of His Honour's speech, which I will now read.

(Reading dispensed with.)

THE WILLS ACT

Hon. Mr. Davis moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Wills Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves that the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor to this House be taken into consideration on Thursday next.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, prior to some brief discussion from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), I would like to take this opportunity to welcome all members of the House back to the session. I would like to assure them it will be a very constructive one, a very progressively conservative session, and one that I am sure will indicate to the people of this province the desire of all members of this House to find solutions to the problems that we presently face.

I would also like to take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of all members of this House, and I would like to think on behalf of our guests here on this occasion, to express a very simple thank you to the member for London North (Mr. Robarts) for the contribution he has made to this province over the past number of years.

Mr. Speaker, to give some indication to the members opposite of the work that will evolve from the Throne Speech of the next few days, I have given a motion to the Clerk of the House requesting that Monday of next week be set aside to debate the very serious problem of unemployment that exists in the province of Ontario.

I will also tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, as has been the tradition, introduce a resolution with respect to the striking committee. I am also indicating on this occasion that we will move ahead with the report as it relates to the standing committees and their restructuring, which I would feel would warrant some discussion in the next sitting of this House.

Thursday, as the notice of motion indicated, we will immediately move into the consideration of the Throne Speech. Of course, I expect the members opposite will wish to move ahead with this on Friday, and Monday is set aside for the debate on unemployment.

Mr. Speaker, once again I welcome all members here, and our guests. As I said, I look forward to a very, very constructive session.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have this opportunity to extend our congratulations to the hon. member for Peel North on this first occasion when he enters the Legislature as leader of the government. I am sure he will realize that all of us, on all sides, watched the selection of the new leader of the Progressive Conservative Party with a great deal of care and interest. I am sure that in the days that lie ahead there will be a number of occasions when we can comment on this in some more particular.

I think, sir, also that you will consider it a truth and a part of your own experience when I say that members on all sides welcome the statement that the Premier has made that this is going to be a working session—because we are here to work for the development of a better community in Ontario. As far as that goes, we on this side wish the Premier and his new cabinet every success.

Another matter that I want to raise just briefly, is to add my comments to those already put before us by the Premier on the new capacity of the member for London North in our midst. When we left this chamber a few weeks ago he was leading the government and the House. I do not say that it is a real demotion that he now occupies seat number one immediately to your right. Certainly I want to join with all members in expressing our appreciation for his career in public service and also for his personal friendship which has been extended so freely to us all.

There is just one area in his career, of course, which I feel has been a substantial omission, and that is that he has never had any experience in opposition. I do not know who is responsible for that but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that this is one omission that we do not intend to be a part of the career of the present incumbent.

I appreciate also the Premier's statements ordering the business in the first few days of the House. I look forward to participating in the debate on Thursday on the speech which His Honour delivered to us, and also in the special debate on Monday next. With these thoughts in view, we look forward to the work of a productive session.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): As part of the gilding the lily ceremonial, Mr. Speaker, may I express on behalf of my party in the Legislature our great pleasure in seeing the new occupant of the premiership in his place, conducting himself in the fashion to which he will become accustomed for a time and to which others of us aspire. We are indeed pleased that the next few weeks will be vigorous weeks, albeit a brief and passing interlude in the life of this government. We are extremely happy to see the order paper used as the Premier has indicated and look forward to the next few days.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, as well, for all of us here, and it is deeply felt, that the presence of the member for London North in the Legislature today—and, I hope, a great many days hereafter—is an immense contribution to the life of the Legislature. We appreciated his leadership of the government when he was here and we trust that he will participate hereafter to some considerable extent.

With that, let us proceed with the battle of political life in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on that very happy note I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 3:55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon as our guests, we have in the west gallery students from St. Leonard Separate School in Willowdale; and in both galleries students from Haliburton Highlands Secondary School in Haliburton. Later this afternoon we will have students from Westdale Public School in London and Central Park Senior School in Oshawa with us.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, each year at this time the Minister of Health has the great pleasure of welcoming to this House as a visitor, Timmy, the representative of the Ontario Society for Crippled Children, whose annual 1971 Easter Seal campaign is now under way.

Timmy symbolizes some 14,500 afflicted children in Ontario. In real life he is Denis Lapalme, the 11-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Orval Lapalme of 263 Kent Avenue in Timmins. Denis is a grade 7 student at St. Gerrard School in Timmins.

Some time ago in an accident Denis' legs were so badly injured that both had to be amputated below the knee. But his is a real success story for the society and the Easter Seal campaign which supports it. Timmy now skates again and plays hockey. In fact he plays centre for his school team in Timmins. He advises me that his favourite hockey team is Boston and his favourite hockey player Bobby Orr.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to introduce 1971's Timmy, Denis Lapalme.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, as Timmy comes from my riding, whether I could join with the Minister of Health and the other members of the House in welcoming him to Queen's Park and in commending him for the very wonderful job he is doing as Timmy this year, as an example of a young person who has overcome a great handicap and, as the minister stated, as a valuable member of his own hockey team in Timmins.

Along with the minister, I would like to urge all in the province to support this worthy cause and to pay tribute to Timmy, Denis Lapalme from Timmins. Welcome.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food has a statement?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the Speech from the Throne, His Honour the Lieutenant Governor stated that the government of Ontario would be expanding the provisions of the capital grants programme for Ontario farmers. Today I wish to outline the more important aspects of these changes, which become effective tomorrow, April 1, 1971. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the capital grants programme was introduced by this government in 1967 as a 12-year programme to assist commercial farm operators in Ontario in financing the farm improvements necessary to lower their production costs and improve their income. This programme has served a very useful purpose. Thousands of Ontario farmers have benefited from the programme and we have gained valuable experience.

However, times and conditions change in agriculture as in other industries. We are moving to expand this programme to meet these new conditions.

The capital grants programme is available to all farmers in Ontario, including fur farmers, who are able to meet the minimum rule of eligibility, which is an annual gross income from his farm operation of $3,000. If the farm is leased, the owner may apply for a grant if the tenant can demonstrate an annual gross farm income of $3,000. Farmers who lease their land from ARDA are also eligible.

Grants have been made available for a number of capital works, such as farm structures, drainage, farm water supplies and field enlargements through fence row removals. Until today the maximum grant that any farmer could receive was $2,500 for any project or combination of projects.

As of April 1, the maximum amount of the grants will be increased and the range of capital works eligible for assistance will be expanded. Specifically, the changes in the programme are as follows:

1. The maximum amount available to any one farmer under the programme has been increased from $2,500 to $3,000, and all grants paid to farmers since the programme was initiated in 1967 will be included in this calculation.

There is, however, one major chance respecting these maximum grants. We recognize that more and more farm families are consolidating their holdings, entering into partnerships and incorporated farm businesses. Therefore, when two or more persons form a partnership or incorporated farm business, and are each actively engaged in the operation of the farm, the partnership or corporation will now be eligible for double the grant available to a single individual, in other words $6,000.

2. Whereas in the past capital grants have been based on varying percentages of the cost of the works provided, as of April 1, 1971, all grants will be based on 40 per cent of the cost.

3. The farmer himself decides whether he will use all of his capital grant allotment for a single project, or if he wishes to spread it out over the several classes of projects available for grant purposes. However, any individual is limited to $1,500 on the projects assisted by ARDA; for example, field enlargement, farm water supply and orchard removal.

4. A number of additional items are included in the classification "Farm Drainage and Farm Structure" effective April 1, 1971. These include maple syrup structures; fixed equipment such as piping, plumbing, stabling, pumping equipment, bulk milk tanks, permanently installed livestock scales; fixed equipment that is part of a manure storage or waste disposal system; electrical wiring and natural gas installations other than for farm dwellings; bridges and culverts.

5. The "Field Enlargement and Water Supply" section of the programme which has been provided under ARDA has also been amended and expanded. The uniform 40 per cent cost figure will apply on all of these projects in the future. "Field Enlargement through Fence Row Removal" has been expanded to include the removal of old orchards, but it does not include land clearing.

The "Farm Pond" section of this programme has been expanded to include the cost of piping, plumbing and pumping equipment as an allowable expense.

The "Farm Wells" section has also been expanded to include as an allowable expense the provision of piping, plumbing, pumping equipment and where necessary electrical wiring to service such wells. Cisterns for farm use are also included in the expanded programme.

6. Two new classifications have been provided for eligibility as recipients of a capital grant for Ontario farmers. The first of these is "Farm Vacation Hosting." It has been demonstrated that many urban persons are anxious to spend vacations on farms. We see this as a potentially important source of new farm income.

In an effort to encourage and enable farm owners to engage in the farm vacations business, capital grants will be made available under ARDA for the provision of certain facilities necessary to bring the farm home up to a suitable standard for these purposes. These facilities, now eligible for capital grants, include plumbing installations, electrical wiring, structural renovations and the provision of fire exits.

It must be demonstrated that present facilities are inadequate. The husband-and-wife team must have attended a training course, or be considered capable of hosting vacationers, and have made a long-term commitment to the programme. The family must also agree to maintain accurate records from this venture.

Grants for this purpose shall be on the basis of 40 per cent of the cost of the facilities, to a maximum of $1,500 per family. It should be pointed out here that this is a special research project of our ARDA branch.

The second of the new classifications is a programme to assist in the removal of diseased and dead elm trees. For some years Ontario has assisted municipalities in the work of removing trees suffering from dutch elm disease and we are currently involved in an extensive seasonal employment programme along our major traffic arteries. This extension of the programme will extend the same kind of aid to farmers.

Under this section of the programme farmers will receive $5 per tree to a maximum grant of $500 per farmer. To qualify, the farmer must apply to our department and have the affected trees marked. The wood must be disposed of or piled in a satisfactory manner. The grants made for diseased and dead elm tree removal are in addition to the maximum amounts available under the other sections of this programme.

The capital grants programme for Ontario farmers will continue to be administered by

The Department of Agriculture and Food. Application forms are available from our county and district offices and assistance will be rendered to the applicant by our staff. Our agricultural engineers will be available to advise on the best facilities and the proper installation procedures. When the work is completed and the necessary receipts and receipted invoices have been assembled, our staff in the county and district offices will proceed to inspect the work.

We urge that every farmer who seeks to participate in this capital grants programme consult with our extension staff and our engineers before the work is begun. In this way we can ensure that the greatest benefit to the farmer can accrue from the programme and the applications can be processed quickly and accurately.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to distribute to each member of the House a copy of this statement so he will have an accurate description of the programme at hand.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to announce a new programme under the $1-million tourist loan fund administered by the Ontario Development Corporation which will substantially increase financial—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): From nothing!

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Peanuts!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —assistance to the tourist industry in Ontario.

The programme is in two parts:

(a) Performance loans—I should point out, Mr. Speaker, that performance loans are what have heretofore been known as forgivable loans and there is a good reason.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Why did the minister change the name? Would he like to explain it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would be glad to explain it to the hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Stanley, is there any place you would rather be?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Anywhere the hon. member wants to go, I will buy the ticket.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Let us have the statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is obvious the opposition members presume this is going to be a good programme because it annoys them.

Mr. Lewis: The minister's perverse kind of logic!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I presume this is evidence of the opposition's interest in the tourist industry.

Mr. Pitman: Certainly!

Mr. Lewis: It is indeed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, why do they not sit and listen?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The new programme is in two parts:

(a) Performance loans will be provided for tourist attractions, such as ski hills, convention centres, snowmobile trails and other amenities which will attract and retain tourists in the off-season. By improving their annual occupancy rates, these central facilities will help area resort operators increase profitability. Applicants for performance loans must demonstrate that the project is viable and will be a benefit to existing tourist operations in the area.

(b) Recognizing that many tourist operators experience difficulty in financing needed improvements, interest rates and repayable loans for the tourist industry will be at the same rate as the government borrows long-term funds. Currently this rate is 7.75 per cent. The maximum loan under the tourist loan programme, which is presently $50,000, will be increased to $75,000.

These measures will go a long way to easing the financing problems of tourist operators and help create a stronger industry. Repayable loans for tourist operators are normally available to winterize, renovate and generally upgrade facilities. Loans are also available to tourist resort operators for antipollution measures.

The tourist industry has historically encountered difficulties in either obtaining loans or obtaining loans at reasonable rates of interest. This dual-purpose programme will do much to improve conditions in the tourist industry and make financing more easily available to the smaller operator.

Mr. Stokes: The minister's department has issued two in the last year.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Right!

Mr. Pitman: The government collects $250 million through taxes.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Whatever happened to Stanley Randall?

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

Mr. Ferrier: He had some flair.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): More flair than substance but now we have neither.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

PROPOSED CONFERENCE ON FOREIGN INVESTMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier.

Can he report to the House when the proposed conference on foreign investment will be held and what the guest list is expected to be at this time?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure that the term "guest list" is quite appropriate. We propose to hold the conference during the latter part of May or the early part of June, and I shall be in a position to announce further details to the House in about two weeks.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: I wonder if the Premier is prepared to inform the House whether or not individual members or representatives of the three parties will have an opportunity to present their views at the conference?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure at this point whether the members of this House will have an opportunity to present their views. Certainly they will have an opportunity, shall we say, to join in or listen to the discussions. From my own personal standpoint I think it would be appropriate for members to make some contribution and we will endeavour to build this into the format.

COST OF ONTARIO PLACE

Mr. Nixon: I have another question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

Can he now report to the House on the expected completion cost of Ontario Place, to the opening of which he invited us all in six weeks?

Mr. Stokes: $20 million.

Mr. Nixon: Is he aware that the costs have escalated already from $13.5 million to $19 million, and it is expected that they will end up at about $25 million?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to get the actual cost for the Leader of the Opposition, but I would suggest with respect—and I want to make this point right at the outset—that on those matters that are under the very direct responsibility of certain ministers, those questions might more appropriately be addressed to those ministers.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, Mr. Speaker, knowing the Leader of the Opposition's very real interest in this, not only from the cost standpoint but the very positive contribution Ontario Place will make to this province, I will endeavour to get those figures for him.

Mr. Stokes: It will be very useful to the people in the north.

Mr. Lewis: He has not changed at all.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Is it a supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question on a matter over which, I would say, the Premier does have specific control. Is he now prepared to announce that the former Minister of Trade and Development will in fact be invited to operate Ontario Place? Or must he continue to wait for the Premier's call?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can only say to the Leader of the Opposition that I really appreciate his concern about the members on this side of the House. I am sure that there will be some very meaningful involvement, that the former minister will find some situation in the not too far distant future, and I will be delighted to let the hon. member know when that happens.

Mr. Nixon: Somebody has got to look out for him.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That same situation.

Mr. MacDonald: How long?

Mr. Lewis: Be careful of being too precise.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Is the report correct that the firm for Ontario Place is to cost some $3.5 million, which is in excess of the cost of "Tora! Tora! Tora!?"

Mr. Lewis: And I hope it is significantly better.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): It might be better than "Tora! Tora! Tora!"

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not seen "Tora! Tora! Tora!", nor do I know the exact cost of that particular production. I can assure the member that the cost has not quite reached $3.5 million, and I shall get the exact figure for him. But once again, with respect, it might be more appropriately addressed to the minister responsible.

Mr. Singer: What does the Prime Minister know?

Hon. Mr. Davis: A great deal

FUNDING OF HOUSING PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: A further question—leading from yesterday's speech from his honour—that I would like to put to the Premier. Can he give us any further details on the funding of the housing programme that was announced again yesterday? In what specific ways does it differ from a similar programme that was announced by the former Minister of Trade and Development some months previous?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I propose to make a comprehensive statement with respect to the new housing programme tomorrow afternoon in statements from the Ministry.

Mr. Singer: Some day we will get the Premier to answer one question head on.

CLEAN-UP OF MERCURY POLLUTION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Can the minister inform the House more clearly as to what use would be made of the $10 million that he would receive from Dow Chemical if he were successful in his suit against that corporation, in order to clean up the mercury pollution in the Great Lakes system; and particularly in the St. Clair River?

If I might just put an additional question along those lines. Does the minister now believe that technology does permit the clean-up of this type of pollution without any additional risk of distributing it further in the Great Lakes system?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Yes, Mr. Speaker, $10 million is the estimated reclamation cost for the St. Clair River and the Lake St. Clair area.

We are satisfied with the scientific and technical evidence that we have had and which has been made available to the law offices of the Crown, that it is safe to take certain reclamation steps and use certain reclamation methods that we require under the statement of claim.

Mr. Nixon: In essence, would these methods simply be dredging; and can the minister assure us that if this money was spent on the clean-up, or the reclamation as he calls it, that the mercury pollution would be removed from the system?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, it involves a form of dredging with retention booming, and also a form of neutralization of the mercury in the bottom of the river.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has a supplementary?

Mr. Ben: Yes, I had written a request to the minister outside this House: could we be supplied with details of the system that has been advocated to the minister for removing this mercury?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: As I have indicated in my answer, Mr. Speaker, these are very scientific and technical methods that would be used by whatever body or agency would undertake reclamation methods, or that Dow, for example, if required to do so, would engage in. Any information given to the hon. member would have to be very broad, very general in its scope, but I think that type of information could be supplied to him.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. Ben: It will be supplied then, will it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary of the minister.

Does the minister plan on taking any action or implementing any type of project concerning the dredging in the Detroit River as a result of mercury pollution on the part of the Wyandotte Chemical people?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This is a possibility, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): But the government did not sue Wyandotte. How could it be a possibility? Be realistic!

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member can have the opportunity of a supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have not heard what the hon. member has said.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is so ridiculous. It is difficult to contain yourself when you listen to this garbage. Did the government not sue Wyandotte?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, as it turns out, of course, the amount of the accumulation of mercury in the bottom of the Detroit River nowhere near compares with the accumulation in the St. Clair River.

Mr. B. Newman: How does the minister know?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We have tested that. We know by our sampling and testing that the greater accumulation in that part of Ontario is in fact in the St. Clair River.

Mr. B. Newman: Can the minister assure the people of that?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, we have that information. There is no question about that. I believe the federal government also has that information.

Now I have forgotten the member's question. Oh yes, he dealt with—

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): The minister's span of concentration is fantastic.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Really, unless there is an extraordinary accumulation of mercury in the river bed, it is doubtful if we will undertake reclamation processes or procedures.

I think we will concentrate on those areas, such as in the Dryden area and the St. Clair area; at least initially.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Rainy River has a supplementary?

Mr. T. P. Reid: The minister mentioned Wabigoon. May I ask by way of further supplementary if the government envisages also dredging the Wabigoon and English River system in northwestern Ontario and if this is feasible also?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It may be possible, Mr. Speaker, that we would undertake some form of reclamation this summer, in Clay Lake particularly, and in some parts of the Wabigoon River.

Mr. Lewis: At public expense?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is very doubtful if we would be involved in the English River.

Mr. Lewis: At public expense?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not necessarily.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary: Is the minister prepared to maintain his position, notwithstanding the statement by Mr. Justice Harlan of the Supreme Court of the United States, when he delivered, on March 23, the majority of the opinion of the Supreme Court of that country to the effect that there was no known system of ridding the Great Lakes, or any other water system, of mercury pollution?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that was obiter dictum.

Mr. Singer: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It was obiter dictum. It was not part of a decision.

Mr. Singer: But he said it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It was not part of his decision.

Mr. Singer: No, the minister does not understand.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It really was something that he had been told. He is a judge, not a scientist, and the main part of that decision, of course, was to refer it back to the state court.

Mr. Singer: He is wrong and the minister is right.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary!

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, I think to this theme, Mr. Speaker, how did the minister arrive at the $25 million figure?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, that was arrived at by the law officers of the Crown. I did not draft the statement of claim. That was an estimated amount drawn and concluded by the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister say that I should direct my question to the Attorney General or to the Premier? To the plaintiff?

Mr. Sopha: To the plaintiff!

Mr. Lewis: To the plaintiff! All right, I will wait.

Mr. Speaker: Has the leader of the New Democratic Party questions?

THRONE SPEECH PROPOSALS

Mr. Lewis: Yes, I would like to first ask the Premier how it is that neither he nor his Minister of Trade and Development had particular details of the economic cornerstone of his Throne Speech yesterday; namely the employment and housing prospects.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I go back to my days in my former ministry when the member for Scarborough West—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Great days! —was always anxious to have any announcements of this kind related to the members of this House first. As I indicated just a few moments ago, it is my intention to relate these matters to the members of this House tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the Prime Minister hold a press conference to give the details then?

Hon. Mr. Davis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, in that I assume that is a question, or perhaps a supplementary, from the member for York South who is usurping his leader's time, I am sure I did not convene a press conference. As a matter of fact, the press were given copies of the Throne Speech and I went to explain certain portions to them.

An hon. member: Explain? Not to explain!

Mr. MacDonald: The Prime Minister's verbal gymnastics have been dulled by the campaign.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, will the Prime Minister's answer tomorrow indicate the number of dollars from the private sector, the number of dollars from the government of Ontario, the number of dollars from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the number of new jobs to be created by this programme and how many housing units we will, therefore, have in total this year as compared with last year, and as compared with the government's current target figures? Will all those areas be covered with precision in the Premier's own way?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in my own way and with precision. When I say comprehensive, it will include all of those items.

Mr. MacDonald: He may live to rue those words tomorrow night.

Mr. Singer: Stan would at least pretend he had an answer.

Mr. Lewis: May I address a question to the Provincial Secretary? Is the Provincial Secretary here? I am sorry, I do not see him.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Second row.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. Sopha: He has been demoted also.

Mr. Lewis: To Provincial Secretary.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I am starting the whole process a second time around.

Mr. Lewis: He certainly is.

Mr. MacDonald: That is what the Indians are afraid of.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: And with his finesse it will be a coup.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I have outlasted five leaders of the opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Why quarrel with success?

GRANTS TO INDIAN GROUPS

Mr. Lewis: Right. Might I ask the minister through you, Mr. Speaker, when will he be confirming the grants requested by the Indian Friendship Centre in Thunder Bay and the co-operative pulp and paper industry in Moosonee?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I was under the impression that all of our grants had been dispensed. I will take up those specific questions and get the answers for the hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, it was well before the end of the fiscal year that the minister assured the Indian Friendship Centre in Thunder Bay, or the department assured the Indian centre in Thunder Bay, that the grant was under serious consideration—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader might ask the question.

Mr. Lewis:—and the minister says that this is not now available?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I am not sure. To which grant is the hon. member referring?

Mr. Lewis: The Indian Friendship Centre in Thunder Bay, which has made repeated requests from this government for grants.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: For what purpose?

Mr. Lewis: For the purpose of friendship.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I would point out to the hon. members that the question period is their period and if it is used for other than asking and answering questions the members are the losers thereby. Therefore, I would request that we give a reasonable opportunity to the members to ask questions and the ministers to answer.

I would also request that there be, and I shall—

Mr. Singer: How do we know which ones they will answer?

Mr. Speaker: I think we should prevent this. There should not be an exchange across the floor unless a question is asked. Whether it be of the Prime Minister or the Provincial Secretary, if the supplementary question is not asked properly, I shall call it out of order from now on. When the turn comes for a supplementary question you will ask it. You will not ask it across the floor of the House.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic Party has the floor for a continuation of his questions.

Mr. Stokes: A supplementary to the same minister: Did the minister not, in fact, meet with a delegation from the Indian Friendship Centre two weeks ago? Did he not have his picture taken with them powwowing in front of the building? Did they not ask him to match dollar for dollar the $60,000 that they have for a building project that will cost in the neighbourhood of $150,000? Does the minister not recall that less than two weeks ago those events took place?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, there is a member who knows the questions to ask.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the Thunder Bay Indian Friendship Centre was the second on the scene in Ontario, the first being in that great municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

The Thunder Bay Friendship Centre has through the years received, starting from my first ministry, substantial numbers of grants, which they have requested and received in full.

What the hon. member is referring to is that the Thunder Bay Indian Friendship Centre has plans—very ambitious, very commendable plans—for a large community centre. This department does not have the funds available to provide capital grants in that area. We have been meeting with that group; we have been trying to assist them in various means. In the discharge of one of our responsibilities of communicating, we have been in touch with The Department of Agriculture and Food to see whether the—

Mr. MacDonald: They just asked for equipment.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko:—community—some day I will outline for the hon. member the programme of the department so that he may become aware—I am now directing my answer to the person who questioned me.

We have tried to see if we can bring them under the general community programmes branch of the Province of Ontario. We have suggested to them that instead of trying to fund the total capital project in cash at one time, they seek ways and means of obtaining partial loans. I even offered to sign a guarantee on a mortgage for my particular share.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: We have suggested all of these avenues in order to assist them above and beyond the present responsibilities of this department.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, the reason I know so much about this particular Indian Friendship Centre is that I became the first honorary president of an Indian Friendship Centre of this organization during my last ministry.

REVISION OF OMA FEES

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker:

Inasmuch as the Ontario Medical Association's revised fee schedule comes into effect—I guess it is tomorrow, April 1—what is the government's decision on whether or not to meet the increased rates?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I will announce that decision when it is made.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry—when it is made?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: When it is made.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, how is it that the minister has reversed the policy of his predecessor who promised us an answer well in advance of the fee schedule coming into effect?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not know what my predecessor promised—

Mr. Lewis: We had a guarantee from the government.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I can really add nothing more than to say that as soon as the decision is made I will announce it here.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, one final question of the Minister of—

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: A supplementary of the Minister of Health: What is the minister doing about the confusion that will develop tomorrow with the new fee schedule, inasmuch as it has not yet been printed and it is not available to doctors?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The fee schedule itself is an internal production of the Ontario Medical Association.

Mr. Shulman: They do not have any.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: That is not, as far as I understand it, my business.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South—a supplementary?

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Speaker, have negotiations been going on between the government and the OMA about this fee schedule?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Not negotiations; I would say discussions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? Has the leader of the New Democratic Party concluded? The member for Simcoe East. The member for Simcoe East has a question?

TIME LIMIT ON UPGRADING FOR CAAT STUDENTS

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education.

Is the minister aware that some of the students of Georgian College in Orillia—and I assume that this same problem may apply to other students of colleges of applied arts and technology throughout the province—are forced to discontinue their educational upgrading due to the 52-week maximum time limit that is allowed for academic upgrading? If so, can the minister offer any suggestions as a solution to the problem?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, the programme referred to by the hon. member is one purchased by Canada Manpower and I understand one of the terms, and it is a fairly rigid term, is that it cannot exceed 52 weeks. I would suggest—and indeed this is something that is within the framework and the terms of the Act covering the Canada Manpower programme—I think this is something the hon. member might want to make representation about to the government of Canada to see whether there cannot be some flexibility introduced into this type of programme.

Mr. G. E. Smith: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister would agree that perhaps the federal guidelines are a little too rigid; could they be a little more flexible?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can just—

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Did the member and the minister have lunch together?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, in fact we did not. I think this just goes to underline my comment earlier, Mr. Speaker, that in negotiations or in discussions with the government of Canada there could perhaps be some flexibility introduced into this type of programme to take individual cases into account. I would think if the hon. member had the names of the students involved it might be wise to discuss them directly with the officer of Canada Manpower who was in the first place responsible for assigning the students to the college for the upgrading programme.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville had a supplementary?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, a supplementary of the minister: Would the minister consider providing the services so that the student would be able to complete grades 9, 10, 11 and 12, within the 52 weeks rather than the 64 weeks as at present?

And a second alternative: would the minister consider combining the total amount of time to two years, both for upgrading and for skill training, so that the first portion, the upgrading, could take the 64 weeks and the skill training would only have to take the balance of the time, and they would still complete the programme within the two-year prescribed period?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat the fact that the qualification for this type of course rests in another jurisdiction, under another statute. We simply provide the training at the community college in the area where the qualified person lives.

I am now being asked a question as to whether or not, from an educational point of view, it is possible to compress the upgrading programme of four years into two. I would have to have some advice as to whether this was possible.

I can recall, during the period immediately following the Second World War, apparently it was possible to devise some type of a programme for the returned service men to accomplish this type of programme in a shorter period of time than it took in the normal route. It might be wise to investigate that. Certainly I can assure the hon. member that I would be very pleased to look into that particular matter.

Mr. B. Newman: A second supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister consider the second alternative that I mentioned? That is, in the upgrading programme where skilled training is involved the 52-week period also applies. But generally, the skill training programme is completed in a shorter period of time and where you combine the two, you would still have the two years or a 104-week period. But as it is today, after 52 weeks, the student can only get two weeks or four weeks of grade 11 and then is cut off benefits, and is not eligible for the skill training the next year.

Mr. Speaker: This should be a question.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be glad to take that into consideration.

Mr. Speaker: Further supplementaries? If not, the member for Kent has the floor.

FARM TAX REBATE PAYMENTS

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Is the minister aware that there is a considerable number of farmers who have not received their farm tax rebate yet? Could the minister inform us why and when they will receive these tax rebates?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that most of the cheques for the rebates went out at the end of last year, but there may be some that have not gone out. Certainly there have been letters that I have dealt with since I came to the department.

I think there is some problem at the moment as to whether lands were assessed for farm purposes or not. I am endeavouring to look at that particular problem to see if we can clear up the difficulty.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: How long will it take to change this from properties that have been assessed as residential instead of as farms?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, you have to measure the type of problem and the means at hand to change it, if it needs to be changed. I am dealing with it directly at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Spence: A supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? It will be the last one.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, what if a farm consists of 400 acres and is classed as residential?

Hon. Mr. Bales: The assessments from all of the areas of the province were brought into the department; they were using a different type of coding for different lands in different areas. The staff endeavoured to bring some uniformity out of the coding.

There may have been some that have been missed in that operation because it was done very quickly and we are trying to straighten it out.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North has a supplementary?

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A supplementary: Would the minister now promise to act to amend the order-in-council which created this problem under the farm tax reduction programme? Where—

Mr. Speaker: All right. The hon. member has asked his question now and the minister will answer. If he has a supplementary, he may ask it.

Mr. Good: I have a supplementary. Will the minister amend the order-in-council under the farm tax reduction programme so that farms that have been erroneously assessed and have been admitted to having been assessed improperly by the area assessment commissioners, could benefit from this programme as do legitimate farmers?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that I will use the simplest way available to correct the problem.

Mr. Bullbrook: The hon. member cannot expect anything more.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary? The member from Essex has a supplementary.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Is the minister aware that correspondence is going out from his officials in charge of this programme demanding that the people sign a form to the effect that they have grossed more than $2,000 income off the front portion of their farm, which may be in a defined water area and only 500 feet deep?

I think this is the whole crux of the matter. These people are honourable people and they cannot sign this form in good conscience, but they do feel that this is part of their total farm and are entitled in fact to the government's programme.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the particular instance to which the hon. member is referring. Certainly, in reference to the $2,000, it applies when it is under the 10 acres, but I will take note of that.

Mr. Good: This is the problem.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Timiskaming has a supplementary? No? Then the member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker! Is the minister aware that the subsidies branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs is notifying farmers that, where they have been improperly coded, it is their responsibility to get in touch with the assessment department and make the correction? Does the minister think this is fair?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, this matter came to my attention just very recently and that is the reason there has been a review of it with the officials. They were looking at it. We are trying to straighten it out and I hope it will be done within a week or 10 days.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview. This will be the last supplementary on this question.

Mr. Singer: No. It is not a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Then the member for Timiskaming has the floor.

CLOSURE OF COBALT REFINERIES

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs.

In view of the fact that today is the last day that Cobalt refineries will accept ore, can the minister give the House some indication of the present status of negotiations between his department and Cobalt refineries and the various mines in the Cobalt area?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice and report back.

Mr. MacDonald: It will be closed before then.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this company is going to close today, surely the minister must have something to communicate to the House?

Mr. Speaker: The minister has given his answer to the question as he is entitled to do. It is his responsibility. The member for Port Arthur has the floor.

NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION COSTS

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Highways referring to a paragraph in His Honour's Throne Speech yesterday, which indicated that a review would be made of the cost of transporting goods between northern and southern Ontario.

Could the minister tell the House when this review will be made? How intensive it will be? Will it be the review to end all reviews? How much co-operation there will be with the federal government and to what extent the people most seriously affected, the people of northern Ontario will be involved in this review?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not too sure whether the hon. member is quarreling with the purpose that was described in His Honour's speech yesterday. I think it is time this matter was reviewed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The government has had 25 reports on transportation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: My hearing aid works very well. I heard His Honour yesterday just the same as the hon. member did. May I say to the hon. member that the review process has already begun.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I should hope so.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: It should have been.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Port Arthur a further supplementary?

Mr. Knight: May I ask the hon. minister to answer the other parts of that question? Will there be co-operation with the federal government? How intensive will it be? And will the people of that area indeed be involved in this review?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Speaker, let me see! It is about 24 hours since His Honour made his speech in this House yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is going to make a full statement tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Patience, patience, patience! I have already indicated that the review process has been undertaken. It will be intensive in character. It will be done in depth in the usual form and manner that we do things in this department. At the appropriate time, sir—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Is that the study for northeastern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton:—at the appropriate time, even in intermittent stages, we may well inform the House as to its progress.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: By way of supplementary, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the review will include investigation into the conduct of a government which fixes and permits the discrimination in the price of beer?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I rather think that question should be appropriately directed to the minister who has the responsibility for those matters, sir.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Rainy River a supplementary?

Mr. T. P. Reid: No, not off hand.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East has a question? A supplementary from the member for Thunder Bay?

Mr. Stokes: I would like to ask the minister: Is it not true that this has been a study that has been ongoing for several months and that the results of that study are now before cabinet for their consideration?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. The study that was made reference to by His Honour yesterday is a study that will be part of the new department when the new departmental Act is introduced into this House and made law. It will be part of that, but we are anticipating that so we are starting now.

I cannot speak with respect to the senate to which the hon. member makes reference. I have no particular knowledge of it myself. I do say that I, plus the two departments as they presently exist and the new department when it is constituted, will progress this study with—

Mr. Sopha: With diligence?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: With diligence. That is a good word. Thank you very much. Due diligence, Mr. Speaker. Thank you for the word. The hon. member is quite correct—due diligence.

Well, it may not be a new idea but it is a new study as far as I am concerned.

Mr. Stokes: A further supplementary: Is it not a fact that the minister, when he was the Minister of Treasury and Economics, promised, when he unveiled the Design for Development in Thunder Bay, that a study had already been put under way to discuss the high cost of transportation in the north and that within very few months of that date that a report would be coming back? Is it true that the minister is denying any knowledge of that study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Speaker. This is being processed in rather unusual form. Of course I recall. The study was referred to when we presented the regional development programme for northwestern Ontario, but I am talking about a study that will be undertaken by the two departments as they presently exist and by the new department when it is constituted.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am talking about the study that was referred to in His Honour's speech.

Mr. Speaker: That is right. The supplementary questions are on that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It will be carried out by the two departments that are presently under my administration and in companion terms with any other studies that have been made. We recognize the importance of it. Since other associated elements have now been described and will be developed, certain other means will probably be at our disposal to pursue this matter. I simply suggest—and I hope the House will accept it—that it will be pursued, and I go back to my hon. friend and thank him for the words, with “due diligence.”

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has the floor for a new question. We have had enough supplementaries on that.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON EDUCATION

Mr. T. Reid: A question of the Minister of Education: Does the minister intend to support the unanimous report of the standing committee on education presented by the Conservative Party chairman from Hamilton Mountain (J. R. Smith) over a year ago, on May 15? I quote:

Your committee recommends that its terms of reference be extended to permit it to initiate studies in education and in the economics of education and to report thereon.

Does the minister intend to support the committee and its requirements?

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member that this is a matter of government policy, but the floor is the minister's to answer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I was about to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think the whole question of the role of the standing committee in terms of reference would be a subject to be dealt with by the Prime Minister in due course.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister prepared to have a body outside of his department investigate the costs of education in this province; and if so will he ask the standing committee to do it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the member to say “a body outside of the Legislature”?

Mr. T. Reid: A body outside of the minister's department, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What does the hon. member think his role is? I thought the people of his riding sent him here along with 116 others of us to examine the spending estimates of the department once a year?

Mr. T. Reid: I said a body outside of the minister's department of civil servants. Will the minister authorize and support the standing committee investigating the costs of education in this province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to my answer. This is a matter which is subject to the scrutiny of this House once a year.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I might ask the Minister of Education whether he has as yet framed a reply to the secondary school teachers who were trying to get in contact with him last week?

Mr. Speaker: That is not supplementary to the original question. In due course the member can ask it. Are there further supplementaries to this question?

Mr. Pitman: Under the cost of education?

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary from Sudbury East?

Mr. Martel: No.

Mr. Speaker: Then the member for Peterborough may now ask his question, if he wishes, as a new question.

REPRESENTATIONS BY SECONDARY SCHOOL TEACHERS

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Education if he has had an opportunity yet to frame a reply to the secondary school teachers who were trying to get in touch with him last week?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am glad this question has been asked because the Minister of Education met for an hour with the president and the executive of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation on March 22, the day before the letter arrived, and at that point this particular matter was not discussed.

Mr. Pitman: Was or was not?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It was not. It was not discussed. I called the meeting to respond to another particular matter that was concerning them. The letter arrived on the Wednesday with some specific questions. In my absence the Deputy Minister replied, and I would be very happy to send the hon. member a copy of that particular reply.

It is my hope to have the opportunity to meet with the executive of the OSSTF to review the factual information that they require in order to assess the whole question of the ceilings and the spending levels for ordinary expenditures.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary. May I ask the minister to table the reply?

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I might ask a further supplementary, Mr. Speaker, as to whether the minister would be prepared to have the OSSTF come before the appropriate committee of this House in order that all members of the Legislature might be able to discuss this matter with them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is my intention to meet with the executive of the OSSTF to respond to the particular matters that they raised in the letter, and that is as far as I am prepared to make any comment today.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask one further supplementary question? Could the minister indicate, in relation to the contents of that letter, whether any guidelines have been presented to the board along with those steps that would ensure the quality of education will not be affected by these steps in the areas such as special education, professional development and so on?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, this minister takes second place to no one in the province in his interest and his concern for quality education.

Mr. Pitman: That was not the question.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He is also quite satisfied that the school trustees of this province are very competent people, elected by the people in that area to manage education.

Mr. Speaker: Those are sufficient supplementaries from this member. Does the Leader of the Opposition wish to ask a supplementary?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in response to an earlier question, I am tabling a copy of the reply.

Mr. Speaker: That is what the Leader of the Opposition was asking for?

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is the turn of the member for Grey-Bruce. If he defers, we can give it to the—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That will be the day.

RAILWAY SERVICE IN BRUCE PENINSULA

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): A question of the Minister of— Why do you not hang some signs around their necks with their new jobs?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Would the minister advise what his plans are in his new Department of Highways and Transport to reactivate the railroads in my part of the country?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that it is a very interesting question. I think the hon. member is aware that every rail line abandonment that has been proposed by either the Canadian National or Canadian Pacific railways has been dealt with, as they appeared, by The Department of Transport before the committee of the Canadian Transport Commission.

Mr. Sargent: That is this government's stand now?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The decisions to abandon these rail lines are made, of course, by the railways with the concurrence of the Canadian Transport Commission, but I suppose I should remind you, sir, if that is necessary, that it is an emanation of the federal government. Interventions are made in each instance; briefs are submitted on behalf of the communities of this province wherever this occurs. But if it is decided, in the wisdom of the Canadian Transport Commission, to allow these abandonments, then there is very little this government can do about it. So we are going to pursue these matters again with increasing diligence.

Mr. Sargent: A supplementary: Is the minister aware of the new Railpax setup in the United States and is he going to pursue the weak-kneed policy of Irwin Haskett in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: The question period has now expired. I would point out that the debate would be much better if we referred to members by their official designations, not by their personal names.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave—

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member wait? The Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs has the floor first and he is entitled to present his report.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. It gives me pleasure and privilege on my first official act of this new Legislature as the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs to table the department's annual review for 1970, copies of which have been placed at each member's desk.

An hon. member: The minister's picture is not there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, mineral production in 1970 shattered all previous records at $1.63 billion.

Mr. Nixon: The minister was not supporting Lawrence, was he?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes.

According to history, the annual review is one of the first departmental yearly summations to roll off the press. It is written in two parts, the first dealing with the vast mining industry in the Province of Ontario and the second with an equally expanded Department of Mines and Northern Affairs.

Mr. Nixon: What a payoff!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would be remiss, Mr. Speaker, if I did not acknowledge that my predecessor, the hon. member for St. George (A. F. Lawrence) was responsible for much of the expansion in the department. I also wish to congratulate my entire staff for having produced such a report in such a short time.

Mr. Bullbrook: His predecessor is going to wish he was back in that department.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I am told that in the newspaper trade this is akin to stop press writing.

Mr. Singer: The minister was just saved by the Speaker today.

Mr. Bullbrook: We are going to find out how much law he really knows.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: All the material, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order; order!

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I would point out to the members, Mr. Speaker, that all the material here had to be garnered from December 1 on.

I think that you, Mr. Speaker, and all the other hon. members here today will concur that the review speaks for itself. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker: And the Provincial Secretary's report?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following reports. The 1969-1970 report of the Provincial Auditor for the Province of Ontario, the public accounts of the Province of Ontario for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1970, and the financial statements of the University of Western Ontario for the year ended June 30, 1970.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I beg leave to present the annual report of the Department of Energy and Resources Management for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1970.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if a monitor will check the PA system. It is not working at the members' desks. There was no report from the minister on our amplifying system.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): That is to our advantage.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves that Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports of debates and speeches in the amount of 3,000 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor, to Mr. Speaker, to the Clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, to each member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, to the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province as approved by you, Mr. Speaker; and the balance to be distributed by the Clerk of the assembly as directed by the Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: Is the Prime Minister's picture going to be on them?

Mr. Sargent: Point of information: Would the Prime Minister advise why—

Mr. Speaker: There is no such thing as a point of information.

Mr. Sargent: Well, how do we talk about this?

Mr. Speaker: When the motion is presented then it may be debated.

Mr. Sargent: Okay.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Davis moves: That

Mr. Speaker be authorized to arrange for the printing of the reports of debates and speeches in the amount of 3,000 copies daily, copies of such printed reports to be supplied to the Honourable the Lieutenant-Governor, to Mr. Speaker, to the Clerk of the legislative assembly, to the legislative library, to each member of the assembly, to the reference libraries of the province, to the press gallery, to the newspapers of the province; as approved by Mr. Speaker; and the balance to be distributed by the Clerk of the assembly as directed by Mr. Speaker.

Now, if the hon. member wishes to speak to the motion by way of debate, he has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Mr. Speaker, my point always has been that if Hansard could be available to the people of Ontario at large, it would be one of the 10 best sellers, if they could put this on the market.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is kidding.

Mr. Sargent: If in some way we could tell the people they can buy Hansard—buy some advertising space, Mr. Speaker—and say to the people, "you can buy Hansard". It would be a new venture in democracy for them to see what goes on in this place. They know only what these people in the press gallery tell them, that is all. Everything is censored up there.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): It is just as well the hon. member is censored.

Mr. Sargent: I do not mind, I do not mind. Somewhere along the line there should be more than 3,000 copies of Hansard printed.

Mr. Speaker: Any further debate?

Mr. Sargent: Why not?

Mr. Speaker: Motion agreed to.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Carruthers moves the standing committees of the House for the present session be appointed as follows:

1. Procedural affairs committee, to which will be automatically referred the applications for private bills for report as to compliance with the standing orders governing such applications. This committee may, in the discretion of the House, also have referred to it any matter relating to standing orders and procedures in the House, or the committees thereof, and any matter relating to the privileges of the House and the members thereof, or of the election of such members.

2. Legal administration committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House any bills, estimates or other matters relating to the Departments of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Justice, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Provincial Secretary and Citizenship. To this committee also will be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments.

Committees 1 and 2 combined under the chairmanship of the chairman of the legal administration committee will function as the private bills committee.

3. Human resources committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House, any bills, estimates, or other matters relating to the Departments of Correctional Services, Education, Health, Social and Family Services and University Affairs and to which will also be automatically referred those boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments.

4. Natural and physical resources committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House, any bills, estimates, or other matters relating to the Departments of Agriculture and Food, Energy and Resources Management, Highways, Lands and Forests, Mines and Northern Affairs, Tourism and Information and Transport and to which will also be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments.

5. Estimates committee.

6. Public accounts committee.

7. Regulations committee, as ordered by Revised Statutes of Ontario, chapter 110, 1968-1969.

Committees number 1 to 4 inclusive may have no conflict of membership with one another, nor may committees numbers 5, 6 and 7 have conflict of membership with one another.

Which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and enquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House, and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereof, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Carruthers moves: That

Standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed as follows:

1. Procedural affairs committee, to which will be automatically referred the applications for private bills for report as to compliance with the standing orders governing such applications. This committee may, in the discretion of the House, also have referred to it any matter relating to standing orders and procedures in the House, or the committees thereof, and any matter relating to the privileges of the House and the members thereof, or of the election of such members.

2. Legal administration committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House any bills, estimates or other matters relating to the Departments of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Justice, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Provincial Secretary and Citizenship. To this committee also will be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report to the ministers of those departments. Committees 1 and 2, combined under the chairmanship of a chairman of the legal administration committee, will function as a private bills committee.

3. A human resources committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House any bills, estimates or other matters relating to The Department of Correctional Services, Education, Health, Social and Family Services and University Affairs; and to which also will be automatically referred those boards and commissions which report to the ministers of those departments.

4. Natural and physical resources committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House any bills, estimates or other matters relating to The Department of Agriculture and Food, Energy and Resources Management, Highways, Lands and Forests, Mines and Northern Affairs, Tourism and Information, and Transport, and to which also will be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report to the ministers of those departments.

5. Estimates committee.

6. Public accounts committee.

7. Regulations committee, as ordered by Statutes of Ontario chapter 110 of 1968-1969.

Committees number 1 to 4 inclusive may have no conflict of membership with one another, nor may committees 5, 6 and 7 have conflict of membership with one another.

Which said committees shall severally be employed to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in many years that a substantial departure from the regular ordering of the business of the House has been put before us without previous consultation. Surely the construction or the reconstruction of these committees might very well have been a subject for discussion among the whips before the motion was put before us.

It is true that the motion that is put by the whip of the Progressive Conservative Party was taken from a report which, as I understand it, was prepared for the whips by the Clerk of the House some months ago—but there was no agreement at that time that this was going to be the basis of the restructuring.

It is only by virtue of the fact that my colleague, the member for Waterloo North, happened to have one of those papers available from previous discussions more than six months ago that we could even follow the resolution as it was put forward. I think it would have been useful if we had had an opportunity to discuss this matter before it came before the House as a resolution.

I really feel that it is an imposition for it to be put this way, Mr. Speaker, and I must say in all conscience to the whip of the Progressive Conservative Party that I personally feel that he is not serving the House properly in putting the resolution this way.

There may be an opportunity for him to respond to that a bit later, but I can tell you, just in listening to what he has had to say, that the constitution of the so-called committee number 1 deals with the applications for private bills for report, as to compliance with standing orders, but it does not appear to me to be a form in which a discussion of private bills and an approval can in fact take place.

If the Prime Minister would care to comment before I continue, it might be possible for us to adjourn this matter even until tomorrow if there is other business we could proceed with, until we at least get a copy of the resolution as it has been put forward on behalf of the government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just to reply to this very briefly. I quite frankly did not take an active part in the discussion of the proceedings of the standing committees of this House in the past four or five years.

My recollection is that the representatives from the various parties, together with the Clerk of the House, prepared just the phraseology that is presently before us on this occasion. This was known to the members opposite, and the procedures that are being set out here surely fall into line with many of the discussions we have had in this Legislature.

To me it is a very significant step forward; it means that committees can now function at the same time without any conflict of membership, and I would have thought the Leader of the Opposition would have welcomed this with a very substantial degree of enthusiasm.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I could go further with respect to the procedural affairs committee, which will be dealing with matters of private bills, that it would still continue this same function that the private bills committee did, that it would have the right to approve and report back here to this House.

Mr. Nixon: All right.

An hon. member: The Leader of the Opposition has got to talk to his whip.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: May I just point out for a moment that this is a debate in the House and normally a member speaks but once in such a debate.

Mr. Nixon: I might draw to your attention, sir—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition asked if the Prime Minister wished to reply, so perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will complete his remarks on this particular debate now.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Thank you. In response to the comments—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Completely unprepared.

Mr. Nixon: In response to the comments made by the Premier I would simply point out to him, as I really already have, that I am aware the whips discussed this six months ago. But I would tell you sir, that there was no agreement that I am familiar with, nor that my whip is familiar with, and I simply feel that it would have been in the best interests of having a reasonable debate at this time if the whips, under the chairmanship of the government whip, had undertaken to discuss this and get the kind of agreement that might have been possible, and I am sure that it would have been possible.

Well now, sir, I want to continue, because I do agree that the committee system needed, and does need, reform. One of the complaints that has come from all sides has been that with the eight or nine or 10 separate standing committees it has been practically impossible for an individual member of the House with membership in several committees to meet his responsibilities as adequately as we would all like to do. So certainly this approach is acceptable. My point simply is that it should certainly have been a matter of consultation before it had been presented here in the House. I say again we still do not have a copy of the motion that has been presented by the Conservative whip and I say that we ought to have a copy of it.

Mr. Speaker, if I might continue—having entered that objection—proposals for committee reform have been substantial and the former Minister of Education, as he himself has said, has frequently not taken an active role in that, having been occupied with his heavy duties elsewhere. But now that he is leading the House it is a matter of prime concern, and I am very glad that he is giving it his attention. I would suggest to him that it might have been worked out a little more effectively to include us all in the final decision that might be made.

I would call to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that there have been changes in the committee system over a number of years. The estimates committee itself was proposed by the Liberal Party since 1967, and finally this was acceded to by all parties. I do recall that with the amendment that we offered in 1967 and 1968, the NDP opposed it because they felt it would not lead to effective debate.

My point is this, that it has been necessary over a number of years to put the difficulties that we as private members have experienced with the committee system before the government, and there have been changes, and I feel that the committee system has in some respects improved because of it. I feel that if we can eliminate duplication of assignments—as this proposal I hope will do—then of course it will be in the best interests of all of us serving our responsibilities as we see them.

I should draw to your attention, sir, that over the last eight years the responsibilities of the committees have been substantially downgraded, and I feel that this is one of the serious shortcomings that is the responsibility of the immediate past Premier. I do not want to spend a long time on this, but since the Minister of University Affairs is in the House

I know that he would feel badly if I did not repeat again my comments about his great days when he was chairman of the education committee back in the early Sixties. In those days that standing committee met every week without fail. Also, in those days the Premier was also the Minister of Education and he was even prevailed upon to attend on some rare occasions. I well recall that the then chairman—

Hon. J. White (Minister of University Affairs): The member was more constructive then than now, I recall.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I recall that the then chairman of the education committee, who is now the Minister of University Affairs—and the present Premier, as did his predecessor, has gone to great lengths to make room for that particular gentleman around the council table—but he used to use public funds to have a bus pulled up at the door and we as members of the education committee would travel around the province, sometimes on jaunts that were not very useful.

On the other hand we got so that we could call the chairman of the board of the University of Western Ontario at least by his first name and become acquainted with some of his broader political views.

The point surely is that the education committee, more than any other, should have the facilities available to its members to really become immediately acquainted with those leaders in the education system of the province, and certainly to obtain a better understanding of what these problems are.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it would be wise to recall to you, sir, that on May 15 last year a resolution came from the first meeting of the standing committee on education that was held during the whole session, calling upon the government to authorize the sum expenditure of that particular committee and giving it some authority to investigate costs of education and to call before it those people who had some expertise in that area.

My colleague, the member for Scarborough East, raised this just this afternoon, and my colleague from Sarnia raised it in the standing committee on education a year ago. But the government under the leadership of the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) did not see fit to respond with the funds and the initiative that would have permitted that sort of investigation to take place. I well recall that during the days when community colleges and the policies determining their development were under substantial discussion in the community that the standing committee on education had no meetings whatsoever for five months.

It was almost as bad as last year when there were only two meetings of the standing committee on education—one to pass the resolution requesting funds and special support so that that committee could make its investigations effectively in this House and around the province; and the second meeting of that committee where the Conservative majority reversed itself and quashed the resolution as it had been previously passed. Those were the only two meetings of the standing committee on education that were held during the entire session last year, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: Twice that year.

Mr. Nixon: That is an indication of the level to which the standing committees have dropped under the leadership of the previous Premier. Now we can hope for better things under the present incumbent. But I am still critical of his approach even to this resolution today, which was entered into without the kind of consultation that certainly would have made the position more tenable.

But to trace the development of changes, at least in the standing committee system, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, last year that the standing committee on health did have some rather effective meetings in which it discussed the ramifications of certain government policies and the problems that were faced by the mental institutions particularly in this province. It was only because of the effectiveness of the deliberations in that standing committee that the government of the day saw fit to remove the present Minister without Portfolio and member for Quinte (Mr. Potter) from the chairmanship, replacing him with my hon. friend the member for Hamilton West (Mrs. Pritchard).

There was a great deal of criticism at that time, because it was, I think, properly said that the government was attempting to muzzle one of the standing committees, which is supposed to be an independent adjunct of this House, in its attempts to make free and useful hearings available, not only to educate the members but to educate the people of the province in some of the problems in that particular field of our responsibility.

The public accounts committee is another case in point. One of the improvements in recent years was the establishment of the public accounts committee and the agreement on all sides that the chairman of that committee would be a representative from the opposition.

I notice from the scowls from my friend in the middle of the House here that the public accounts committee, I guess, was functioning before but it certainly was strengthened. I feel it was strengthened by the agreement on all sides that the chairman be someone representing an opposition party. But even that fell far short of the effectiveness that it might have achieved simply because there were no funds allocated for staffing that committee. The very lengthy and difficult regimen of work they undertook had to be carried out without the sort of, I will say, professional assistance that must be a part of any kind of discussion or an investigation of this type.

I was glad to hear, yesterday, His Honour saying that the government was going to have a new departure in policy and that the administration was going to listen to what people said and then act in response. I thought it was a bit trite; it sounded as if the new administration had the same speech writer as the old one had. I do not know whether that is a fact or not. It is always, of course, a good thing to say that the government is going to listen and respond to the views of the public.

But I would say that what we need substantially here is the means to make not only the government but the whole Legislature more responsive to the views expressed in the community. While the government has its own means of increasing its sensitivity, such as the Premier and his colleagues going on tour into the various parts of the province and listening to the complaints that are put to them and him, I feel that the standing committee system is one area in which the usefulness of the members of the Legislature can be substantially improved. For this reason, I would hope that these committees as they are constituted will not be hampered in their investigations by a restrictive attitude on the part of the Premier or the government through the ministers, which in fact will stultify and deaden any initiatives which might come forward from the committee itself.

I recall to your mind, Mr. Speaker, that last year there was an initiative from the standing committee on education which was knocked on the head. They were not given the powers nor the financing to undertake the investigation of education costs which surely were as important even then as they are now.

The second case in point was the removal of the chairman of the standing committee on health. Now that particular debt has been paid off and rectified by his appointment as a Minister without Portfolio. I feel that his price is a bit cheap but that is, of course, his decision and not ours. I am not sure what was put to the Premier to persuade him that the member for Quinte should be brought into the cabinet, but I have my own suspicions.

Nevertheless, I am recalling the fact that government policy last year once again put down any initiative from a standing committee even if it was forthcoming from the Conservative chairman of the committee itself. I feel that this is an occasion when we must give every support to the government in upgrading the committee system. If this approach is going to do it, then I say "Hear, hear" and we would support the basic motion.

I feel, of course, that it does not go far enough. The present Premier and the members of the administration have heard my views previously on some of these areas. But, for example, in the speech yesterday we were informed by His Honour the Lieutenant Governor that there is going to be a special committee designed to examine the matter of foreign control of our economy. This deals with foreign investment in our province—

Hon. Mr. Davis: A conference.

Mr. Nixon: A conference. All right. It is not a committee of this House and this is one of the points that I want to make, Mr. Speaker; because while it might in fact serve some purpose to have a conference of the type that the administration has had dealing with the pollution of the Great Lakes, or the tax difficulties with the municipalities, my experience with both of those previous conferences has been that they have been window dressing—that no specific action has followed from either of them or any of them. I am afraid that this conference is going to be the same.

My point is this, that surely the standing committee system of the Legislature should be flexible enough to give the members of the Legislature an opportunity to examine this—not just in debate in the House, even though that is very important, but on an occasion when we can call before us, by power of subpoena if necessary, those people whose views we should be seeking in getting the kinds of opinions and background which are going to be necessary in the debilitations on new statutes and regulations in this very sensitive area.

The second area in this connection would be an examination of Ontario Hydro rates. I was most interested to see in press reports of the recent leadership race in the Progressive Conservative Party that the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) made it very explicit that he felt there was not sufficient information provided even to the cabinet to approve or disapprove of any rate changes on the part of Hydro. This, of course, was in direct contradiction of the statement made by the former Premier when the whole matter of Hydro rates was under discussion a year ago.

Frankly, I regret the fact that the standing committees of the House are not going to have the power, with the proper professional advice provided, to investigate this matter as fully as we would hope. Instead, the Speech from the Throne said that the productivity improvement programme—that committee that was set up under that title originally—is going to make a thorough examination of the whole basis of the decisions taken by Ontario Hydro.

I welcome the examination, believe me. I think that that is valuable, but I feel that the flexibility of the standing committee system of this House should be such that that sort of investigation can be undertaken in the public interest by the members of the House. It can only come about if the standing committees are provided with the kind of qualified and professional staff that undoubtedly the productivity improvement programme commission is going to have available to them.

As a third example of the sort of area of discussion which our standing committees must undertake, I would recall to your mind, Mr. Speaker, that it has been our contention that the whole area of medical fees should come under the scrutiny of the appropriate standing committee of the Legislature, with recommendations made to the whole House upon which the government can act under its responsibilities which are well known. This is not to be the case unless there is a referral of the OMA fee schedule made in the next few days by the Minister of Health to one of the appropriate standing committees which, undoubtedly, we will constitute this afternoon.

There is a whole area here—not only involving doctors' fees but, for the benefit of a good many of the members of the House, the decisions taken unilaterally by the bar associations of the province in setting the legal tariffs. I think the same can be said in the decisions taken by the farm products marketing boards. My hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture and Food is here, and he knows that they have substantial powers to set fees for services, and, more importantly, costs of foodstuffs at the production level. I feel that those decisions should be reviewed by the appropriate standing committee of the House as well.

I can go on to say that in any area—in any area—where by statute or custom, a monopoly situation prevails, particularly in the setting of fees for service or for products, there should be a direct route by which an appropriate standing committee of the Legislature will have the right and the powers of subpoena to call before it those people responsible for making the decision and to review that decision. It would, on the one hand, give the power of review and recommendation to the government; and on the other hand, give the representatives of those particular disciplines and businesses a good forum to express the views that they have in the financing of their own business or profession.

Another case in point would obviously be the whole insurance industry—not just the automobile insurance industry but the insurance industry at large. In the automobile industry particularly, the rates have been substantially standardized and it is usually by agreement that increases of certain percentages are imposed without any recourse to public control. At least, the government has not seen fit to impose these controls although it does have the powers granted by this Legislature to undertake these controls.

I feel that these rate changes on behalf of the automobile insurance industry should be reviewed by a standing committee of this House. The whole situation associated with the wage situation and the profit situation in large industries in this province should come under its purview as well.

Mr. Speaker, I am simply saying that we support an amendment and, I should say, a change in the basic committee system. Certainly, it can be changed even during this session and amended in sessions to come to improve it; but we have tinkered with it for a good many years—I suppose for more than a century—and we are a long way from having a committee system that works effectively at the present time.

While these four special committees and the two extra committees may serve our purpose in a broad way to deal with the general business of this House, I feel that they are lacking substantially in giving the powers to the committee system to have a general oversight of the economics of the province. In specific terms, I am going to propose an amendment adding an additional committee on financial affairs—economic affairs, I should say—which would have the direction of this House to call before it the representation and the representatives of those areas in the business and the service industry of the province which have, in fact, monopoly powers to set rates and fees.

I feel that it should be in the power of that committee not only to provide a public forum for the representatives of those particular areas to justify their position, but also a forum in which the public interest, through the members of this House, can be represented and recommendations can be made to this House which should be regarded and followed by the government of the day. In the past, there has been an objection that this interferes with responsible government. I do not say that the committee should have the power to impose its decision, but simply to make public recommendations of the type that I have already described. For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I move an amendment to the resolution presented by the hon. member for Durham, as follows:

I move, seconded by the member for Downsview, that there be an additional standing committee appointed, called the economic affairs committee, empowered and instructed to investigate and hold public hearings related to significant cost changes in products or services affecting the cost of living in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, if you will permit me, while the amendment is being put in your hands, I would say that it is essential that not only does this House have the basic and final responsibility of such review, and the power to make recommendation to the government, but that the same review of public endeavours has to be transferred to the standing committee system much more effectively than it ever has in the past. During the question period, certain matters were put to the Minister of Education concerning education costs. This is obviously a matter of prime concern and importance to us all.

In my view the standing committee on education must have—or the committee that is constituted by the resolution put before us must have—an immediate instruction from this House to undertake the sort of review that was envisaged in the resolution that came from the standing committee on education last year. You recall, Mr. Speaker, that the resolution was supported by members on all sides and killed by the government. They were not prepared either to permit it or to finance it. But this is the sort of investigation that we must have.

Mr. T. Reid: The year of crisis—the minister did not even look at it.

Mr. Nixon: I draw to your attention, sir, the resolution on the order paper in the name of the member for Scarborough East, which called for substantial reactivation of the standing committee dealing with education affairs for this precise purpose. It calls for an interim report not later than April 30, 1971, and a final report not later than June 30, 1971. It also provides the instruction to the appropriate standing committee that representatives of the teachers' professional organizations and others be summoned before that committee to express their views in this matter of urgent concern; and that every means at our disposal be made to search out those areas in education where costs can be cut, and not necessarily with the meat-axe approach which interferes with the quality of education in the classroom.

Mr. Speaker, it is not usual for the government opposite to accept the recommendations of the opposition parties. I would, of course, ask them to consider this amendment with care and, hopefully, to support it. I would simply recall to them that while the wording of this resolution is practically identical with a similar one that I put before the House last year, it has been our experience that it will take three or four or five different debates and votes in this House until the government of the day will see that the committee system must be improved. It must be made relevant. It must and can make the government and the House more sensitive to the problems in the community and this is surely what we need, because democracy is a good long way from having achieved any kind of perfection. Perhaps I am prepared to say it would be a lot closer to it if we were over there and the government people were out in the country. That is something that we can settle in another forum and we are prepared to do it in the next few weeks or months.

But I am here to say that whether you are a New Democrat or an old democrat or any other kind of democrat, we must realize that unless we improve the sensitivity of this Legislature and the government then our method of government is becoming substantially irrelevant. We are going to continue to have decisions by the government in response to crisis, that we as members of this Legislature have seen our positions downgraded during the last eight years and we want to serve notice on the present incumbent of the Prime Ministership that we will insist on having a more effective role to play with committees that are going to be meeting regularly and are going to have an effective role to play in the determination of policy.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in perhaps more abbreviated form, I would like to deal with the government resolution. I begin by pointing out that in basic intent the resolution is acceptable to us.

My mind went back to the journals of the assembly; back, I guess, to Friday, November 6, 1970, when this committee's report was tabled in the Legislature. It was a report with which all members agreed, including the representatives of the Liberal Party, and a report which contains almost word for word the resolution which is before us today. Indeed, the only alterations are in the naming of two committees.

It seemed to us then, as it seems to us now, that that was worthy of support. We had participated in the decision ourselves and subsequent discussion reinforced that view.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, subject to certain caveats and to a subamendment I would like to move on behalf of this caucus, we think that the amendments to the committee system are salutary, that they are important, and that if they can be made to work much will be derived from them. I would prefer therefore to dwell rather more on the present than on the past.

One of the things which is lacking—and perhaps the Premier can reassure us on this score—is inclusion in the government's resolution of any reference to unrestricted substitution on the part of members, which was an original stipulation in the report tabled last November. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Premier and his aides will feel it legitimate that members of various parties in the Legislature, with due notice to the House can substitute people in an unrestricted fashion; not the permanent members of the committee but on a day-to-day basis such as is required in order to make the committees work.

With that introductory thought let me perhaps make three separate points:

1. There must, of course, be given to the committee system and preferably these standing committees as designated, the right to have public hearings, not only here at the Legislature but throughout the Province of Ontario; the right to call witnesses by subpoena or otherwise; the right to investigate certain public areas and contentious public issues at will. That right is of course, often supported in the context of a committee by government members as well as opposition members because the committee does not impose upon members the same kind of inhibitions that the Legislature tends to impose. The committee system—and I fully concur with the Leader of the Opposition—must therefore be permitted to examine with painstaking analysis and with the right to report and make recommendations to the Legislature, areas such as the cost of education; and be permitted to call in industrial polluters throughout, let us say, northern Ontario, to bring them to account; to examine a matter like the cutting in Quetico Provincial Park rather than assigning it to an advisory committee; to enter into a full analysis of automobile insurance, not merely the setting of premiums, but also in the settling of claims and the imposition of no fault. In other words, it would take a grip on the most contentious public issues, and confine its activities not purely to Metropolitan Toronto but have hearings throughout the province and allow all members of the Legislature to participate in that procedure as well as the public. In order to do so, the powers of the legislative committees will obviously have to be enhanced significantly.

2. Mr. Speaker, one of the things which this resolution does not ensure—although I would read into it good intentions—is that the most critical of the standing boards and commissions and tribunals of government will not necessarily appear before the standing committees in any order of priority or at a time and with the sufficient analysis to which every one of them should be subject.

I want to make three specific observations in this regard: First, of course, regarding Ontario Hydro coming before that committee which deals with natural and physical resources, let me add this thought, Mr. Speaker: we in this party think it is a mistake to have submitted Ontario Hydro to the analysis of the committee on government productivity. That committee was never designed to investigate a matter as important in terms of the setting of rates, in terms of the rates stabilization fund and in terms of developmental policy, as Ontario Hydro. It is positively ludicrous that that committee should have the authority to investigate energy resource priorities in Ontario over the next several years.

We have an energy board in this province which one would have thought might have some concern in that area. But more important, Mr. Speaker, we have members of the Legislature before whom Hydro should be brought and called to account, giving us the right to summon every conceivable expert testimony to counter their massive, seductive public relations barrage which was characteristic of the last hearing and will be characteristic of every other.

We make a profound error, Mr. Speaker, in thinking that these boards and commissions are improved by analysis which is purely internal. It is unacceptable to us. The committee on government productivity just presented a little report to the members of this Legislature. Some of it was substantial, some of it was fairly trifling, but none of it suggested that this committee had in any sense the capacity to investigate an area of such exceptional public concern—which should be subject to public and open scrutiny, not to another cocktail party analysis behind the scenes. In terms of a public corporation, that does not sit very well with members in this party.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, involves the Workmen's Compensation Board, which must have priority in being called before the legal and administrative committee for precisely the same reason. The Workmen's Compensation Board is given to an essentially anti-democratic process of review. The entire review is internal; it is not subject to external analysis and scrutiny on the part of any body in a consistent fashion. And it is a matter of intense priority that the Workmen's Compensation Board be brought before the appropriate legislative committee, not for an hour and a half but for several sittings if necessary, giving us access to all the material which we require, allowing members to raise all those areas of contention—and God knows they are infinite where the Workmen's Compensation Board is concerned—and subject that board to a more rigorous grilling than it has ever received through the process of debate in this House.

Finally—although more by way of example than by way of a definitive outline—the Ontario Hospital Services Commission must have a similar priority before the committee which is entitled “human resources.” It must have that priority, because in many parts of the province standard ward care now ranges from $70 a day to over $100 a day; the absence of chronic and convalescent care in Ontario is now notable, and the cost of hospital services, and the undue cost of the delivery services of the health system generally should be subject again to public appraisal. That can be achieved in a committee in a way in which it cannot be achieved in this House. It will satisfy both public and members that people are, in fact, called to account—again, not at the whim of government and of an occasional hour but as an absolute priority. The sub-amendment which we propose puts it as a priority as the Premier will shortly hear.

Three, Mr. Speaker, the last point I wanted to make, and it supports others who have made similar points, is that all of this is premised on an adequate staffing, reporting and functioning of the committee. The committee system must have a committee Hansard; the debate must be reported. It is not important that they be published in 3,000 copies—although perhaps that is desirable; they will be memorable graffiti at times here and there in the province—but certainly several hundred or 1,000 copies of the standing committees should be available to members and to the public.

The committee must have counsel, legal counsel. The committee should have, in fact must have, accountants; it must have financial people attached to it. The committee must have the right to call on research consultants; all these committees should have that right when we are dealing with a specific legislative area such as a commission, board or tribunal. Only if you give the committees that kind of staff and substance will they be other than the quieter of discontent.

I do not think I need embroider it further, Mr. Speaker. That makes the points centrally as we see them. Others in my caucus would wish to elaborate.

Mr. Premier, through the Speaker, we want to make the committee system work. We are frustrated and at times a little angered by the way in which members of the Legislature are excluded from the committee process. We understand the purposes of the past, the designs of the past, which prevented us from appropriately exploring hospital problems, costs of education, and related matters.

We assume that this redistribution of the committee system, based as it was on a proposal from all three parties, can be made to work. We are going to move heaven and earth to see that that is achieved and exploit the committee in every conceivable sense over the next number of weeks or months should they ever meet, before the Premier decides to call an election while he wanders amiably about the province.

Mr. MacDonald: Diligent use of review.

Mr. Lewis: Diligent use of the committee system, precisely. We might even want to review the review of transportation costs in and out of northern Ontario at some point in time.

Let me, therefore, move, seconded by the member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick), that the resolution be sub-amended by adding thereto the following clauses. It is hard to resist the proposition of price and wage review offered by the Liberal Party; that amendment can hardly be resisted. I think that my amendments would obviously have some substance. If the first part can be understood, if the legalese can be understood, the others will follow. The clauses:

Which said committees shall severally be empowered on their own initiative, when not otherwise engaged in matters and things referred to them by the House, to examine and inquire into further and other matters and things related to, or in any way touching within their competence, as they in their discretion may determine;

Which said committees shall be empowered to engage counsel and from time to time such other expert staff as may be necessary to enable the committees to discharge their responsibilities.

That the proceedings of the committees be reported by Hansard;

That the Workmen's Compensation Board be called first before the legal administration committee;

That the Ontario Hospital Services Commission be called first before the human resources committee;

And that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario be called first before the natural and physical resources committee.

Mr. Speaker: If no member from the government side wishes to enter the debate at this time, the hon. member for Scarborough East had indicated his desire to speak previously.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would defer to my deputy leader, thank you very much.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, as mover of this resolution, may I simply state that it was based on the report of the standing orders committee of last year. I think it was thoroughly debated; it was discussed by all members of that committee.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: In the House?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please! Is there a point of order?

Mr. Peacock: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I apologize for interrupting the hon. member, but may I have your ruling as to whether this closes the debate since the motion before us is in the name of the hon. member whom you now recognize?

Mr. Speaker: I think there is no limitation on the—

Mr. Peacock: I believe if the hon. member who was putting the motion—

Mr. Speaker: Unfortunately, I have sent the motion out to be photostated for one of the hon. members. I do not have it before me. I believe it was the hon. member who did introduce it. In that case, he does not have the right to enter the debate at this time. I must say that the hon. member for Scarborough East had indicated his desire to speak. If he wishes to defer to the hon. member for Downsview, that is perfectly all right.

Mr. T. Reid: Yes, I defer to the deputy leader.

Mr. Speaker: The hon member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I would think that the Premier has embarked in a most inauspicious manner to try to order the proceedings of this House.

Negligence probably is the best word for it, if it is not arrogance. We have a motion brought in today and, quite apart from any other practices or procedures, first of all there has been no consultation this afternoon or in the days that preceded the convening of this session as to the exact form of the motion.

Second of all, as of this moment the debate having gone on for some minutes, perhaps a half-hour already, there are still no additional copies of the resolution available. In fact, the Clerk has not got one; the Speaker has sent out to have additional copies made. It makes it most impractical and almost impossible to intelligently debate a motion that is brought before this House when neither the Premier nor the government whip has had the courtesy to follow an established pattern in this House—to make copies available to all the members of the House or at least the leaders of the parties before the motion is, in fact, put.

Mr. Lewis: But we have copies.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Copies are here.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I can hear the nattering here on my left which is par for the party on the left. They are nattering because they do not understand what I am about to say. If they will be patient, I will explain to them exactly what has happened.

What has happened was there was a committee, Mr. Speaker, that did consider, with representatives of all parties, certain recommendations.

Mr. MacDonald: We all know that.

Mr. Singer: Now that committee in due course reported to the House on November 6, and the report was received. It was never, in fact, adopted, nor is it part of the policy—

Mr. Lewis: The report came before our caucuses.

Mr. Singer: —Mr. Speaker, of this House. There are all sorts of reports that are tabled from time to time that do not, in fact, become part of the policy of this House. In fact, while I had a brief glance at the original form of the motion that was put, there are several substantial and important differences in the motion that was put and in the form of the report that was tabled by the committee last November 6. Names have been changed; details as to quorums have been changed; details as to interchangeability have been changed—all these things, Mr. Speaker, without either preliminary advice, without consultation, and without even the ability to present to the members of the opposition parties copies of the resolutions that are being debated.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. member should be pleased with this report; he agreed to it at the time.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry about the paucity of knowledge of the leader of the NDP. He has not done his homework again; he is throwing a few more—has he thrown any pamphlets recently to the natives of eastern Ontario to explain his policy?

An hon. member: To the animals!

Mr. Singer: To the animals, yes; do that! Do that rather than heckle in an uninformed way.

Mr. Speaker, let me return to what I have been saying. I would think that if the government wanted to embark in a normal way to substantially change the committee systems of this House, it would have, yesterday or the day before, or even as late as this morning, sent a message to the opposition parties with a copy of the resolution it wanted to introduce. It is most unusual. Certainly when we are debating any bills or anything else, there are copies available. I note that my leader when he moved his amendment had copies available for you, Mr. Speaker, for the Clerk, for the Premier, and for the leader of the NDP.

Mr. Lewis: We were equally vigilant.

Mr. Singer: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that even the member for Scarborough West has a little virtue about him and followed the accepted procedure when he moved his amendment. That is the standard procedure that should have been known at least to the Premier and to his whip. That was not done.

Let me get down to what is really before us. There is a substantial change suggested, and I think that in order to make this committee system work there has to be a viability and an ability given to all of these committees to intelligently deal with the matters that concern the people of this province. No longer can we go on having committees meet only at the behest of the chairman who is a Tory—and the chairman's move is dictated by the government. It is all very well to say that the committees are the place where the work is done, but when the committees do not meet—and when they do not meet at government direction—and when their abilities to inquire are in fact limited or denied, then there is no real democracy in the Province of Ontario.

This is a new government, Mr. Speaker, or so they have been trying to tell us; this is a government that is trying desperately to present a new image. It is the same old Willie. Unfortunately, we had hoped there was going to be a new one. It is even more arrogant than the last government because it brings in a matter for debate and it does not present copies of the resolution to us in order that we can intelligently discuss it.

Therefore I say that the amendment moved by my leader is of the utmost importance, and if this committee system is going to work in a way that will help the people of Ontario inquire into and get information about such things as legal fees, medical fees, insurance rates, hydro rates and all of those other things, then there has to be the kind of additional committee that my leader has put forward in the amendment that he has moved.

What could be more logical and sensible, Mr. Speaker, if this government is serious about amending the committee procedure, than to say that there be a committee—call it what you will, call it the economic affairs committee as we mentioned in our amendment—empowered to investigate and hold public hearings related to significant cost changes in products or services affecting the cost of living in Ontario.

The member for Scarborough West makes a very valid point in his subamendment that is implied certainly in our amendment, that the economic affairs committee be allowed to make these investigations. The member for Scarborough West spells it out in a little more detail, that it be able to do it on its own initiative, and this is the whole key. That certainly is implied in the amendment and if it needs to be spelled out any more carefully perhaps the wording used by the member for Scarborough West is pertinent.

But surely these committees, this committee and all the other committees, must be able to determine by themselves what they want to look into, and not have to come back from time to time to the House and not only be limited to examining into and inquiring about matters referred to them by the House. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that makes sense.

You can change the form of this, and you can surround the committee structure with the kind of restrictions that are talked about. We look at the original report, the one that the member for Scarborough West was guffawing about a little earlier. You will note that the original report has very strict limitations on substitutions. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that was left out of the resolution, apparently—I still have not got a copy of the resolution. Oh, it just came over, I just have it now. That apparently was left out.

Mr. Deans: Now the member knows what he is talking about.

Mr. Singer: Now if everybody knew what happened originally and had been agreed upon; then has this become a part, is the original report, a part of what is implied in the moving of this resolution? If it is, then it is wrong. It is very, very wrong. Because surely it does not make sense. It does not make sense to me that substitutions only be permitted where a member is unable to attend and has arranged for a substitute, or where a member has a particular interest and comes in and is able to find somebody to substitute for him.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it must be the privilege of all members of the House to attend all committees of this House and to say as they deem proper what they think about a particular question that a committee is considering. Perhaps their right to vote should be limited, but surely we are not going to accept by implication the suggestion that it is part of the original report of the standing committee that the right to substitute be so limited and so restricted; apparently the right to attend was to be so limited and restricted! Surely that is not the intention, Mr. Speaker, and we should be told about that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Who was on the committee from the member's party?

Mr. Singer: That is not the point. The point is that you have made a mistake, you have made a serious mistake, because again you have not researched what you are talking about and you have not had the courtesy to detail to the House what you were going to bring before us.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that as a first move of the new Premier, if he intends to democratize the procedures of this House, he should begin to take the opposition into consultation on new moves of this type, he should spell out clearly what he has in mind and he should not try to drag the red herring across the trail as he did for so many years in The Department of Education. He has got a different job now, and he has not changed one whit when he proceeds to introduce this motion in the way he introduced it this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I would urge that the House accept the amendment moved by my leader plus the PS added by the member for Scarborough West, which spells it out in a little more detail. It is a pity the member for Scarborough West has not a little more new thinking in his mind to bring up something new.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the Premier has not changed, we have certainly been reminded of the fact the hon. member for Downsview has not changed either over the winter.

Mr. Lewis: In fact he has deteriorated.

Mr. MacDonald: I am momentarily overwhelmed at the sense of hurt that has been inflicted upon the Liberal Party. This motion was one that I as a member of the committee, including representatives of the Liberal Party, discussed at very great length. The only point of any validity in this political skirmishing is to clarify to what extent, if any, some of the really substantive aspects of that original report may or may not have, inadvertently, been dropped, specifically this question of substitution. It seems to me that the flexibility in having four omnibus committees, plus the three special committees, is one of the merits of the new setup. But it becomes a merit and avoids becoming a strait-jacket, only if we get full right to substitution.

And I suggest to the Premier, or to the government whip who presumably is going to wind up this debate, that either there should be an amendment on their part to clarify that, or some unequivocal statement in the record to indicate that that aspect of the original report is going to be carried through into the resolution of today or at least into the operations of the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make just two or three general points. The Leader of the Opposition suggested that the committee operations in this Legislature should reach out to cover the full spectrum of citizens' concerns from all across the Province of Ontario. In other words, the committee should be as sensitive and as involved in the discussion of everything as is the Legislature itself. I have no quarrel with that as an idealistic objective. But from my years of observation in this House, those are the stars for which we may ultimately reach.

We have got something very much closer to earth to contend with. And it is firstly to get from this government—and maybe we have it, I am not going to prejudge them—a serious approach to committees, because previous governments have not had a serious approach to committees. They have set them up, they have not met. They have been delayed through the obstructionist tactics of chairmen who sometimes were put in, one was led to believe, for the specific purpose of stalling in the operations of that committee. Now if the government is moving with seriousness to try to use the new format of committees to come to grips with the work of the House, fine.

The second and even more important point is that the committees simply cannot be effective if the government is not going to respond to the obvious conclusion down through the years—the need for means to make them effective.

I need not remind the Legislature that some years ago one of my colleagues in this party, and I have forgotten which one it was, made a motion in one of the committees which was unanimously adopted by the committee—

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): It was me.

Mr. MacDonald: Was it? It was the hon. member for Riverdale. I do not want to subtract anything of the historical record to which he is entitled.

The motion was that the government should take the necessary steps to provide the committees with staff and with Hansard records. We have moved to some degree with some of the committees having Hansard records, but we have never moved to the provision of adequate staff.

Mr. Speaker, it is ludicrous, absolutely ludicrous, that you should have, for example, Hydro come in and present an hour's report and give the members of the Legislature an opportunity to ask a few questions, and then to call that an analysis of the operation of the whole administration of one of the biggest businesses in the Province of Ontario. You simply cannot dig in and find out indeed what this government should know—and often I suspect does not know—as well as the members of the Legislature, if you do not have adequate staff to prepare the questions and to dig the facts out.

In short, we have got to have a serious approach by the government and we have to have a provision of the means to make the new committee structure operate before we can give any consideration, in my view, to the broader objective that the Leader of the Opposition has raised about committee concerns being extended to cover the full spectrum of concerns of citizens all across the Province of Ontario, the full spectrum of all of the matters that might normally come before this House.

However, Mr. Speaker, just so that the Leader of the Opposition will not feel that I am being unfriendly to him this afternoon, there was one—

Mr. Lewis: In fact, he has deteriorated.

Mr. Nixon: I never feel that way.

Mr. MacDonald:—one point which he might have mentioned as real rather than just political skirmishing against the government, of how careless and inadequate has been the government's approach to this whole procedure.

May I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that a full year ago we got within reaching distance of a commitment from this government to set up a committee on constitutional affairs. After the Prime Minister of that day dragged his feet for months, they finally set up the committee. Then, for four months we could not get the committee into operation because the chief government whip allegedly could not find out who the members of the committee were going to be. And then—the final affront—that committee was called by its chairman on the last day of the session. I hope he did not collect the $1,000 pay going to the chairman of the committee—just as an aside.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe he was looking into it.

Mr. MacDonald: But it was called on the last day of the session for purposes of considering what we could do or what we should do in the future. I thought that finally when the committee was called, even on the last day of the session, that this meant that the government was serious, that the whole issue of constitutional affairs to which the last Prime Minister gave such high priority and which, according to the Throne Speech is still going to have a high priority, was not going to be shuffled off into the corner. Yet we have a new proposal from the government for the establishment of committees and once again the committee on constitutional affairs has become lost.

I do not know what the government is going to do about it, but if the government is going to prove that it is not playing games with all of the recommendations for an effective committee structure, as far as I am concerned, before we finish this debate there is going to be some sort of a suggestion from the Prime Minister or from the chief government whip as to what they are doing with regard to the committee on constitutional affairs. I, for one, after a full year's battling, am not going to see it get lost in the shuffle as the government comes in with its new proposal and resolution today.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity, as this is the first time I have had to speak in the House, of congratulating the new Premier of the province on what looks like a much better attendance record than he has had the last three years. It is nice to see him in the House regularly.

An hon. member: It is only the second day of the session.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Two days in a row.

Mr. T. Reid: I know he will take his duties very seriously and will be in the House and an active member of it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I always have.

Mr. T. Reid: I only hope that his successor as Minister of Education will be here quite often to answer questions from this side of the House.

Mr. Speaker, the first item I would like to refer to in this discussion is that part of the government resolution which says that these committees which it is setting up will look into "bills, estimates or other matters referred to it by the House." I think I would like to underline that last phrase, "other matters referred to it," which, in effect, in my opinion means other matters referred to it by the responsible minister of the government. I think the committees must have the power to look into matters that they consider to be important and not simply matters that are referred to it by, in effect, the minister of the Crown responsible for those matters.

For example, Mr. Speaker, I refer to the standing committee on education last year which reported on May 15 that the committee recommended that "its terms of reference be extended to permit it to initiate studies in education and on the economics of education." I think that the committee on education last year should have had the right to initiate investigation into education costs in this province. It should not have had to come to the Legislature to request this permission which, in effect, was turned down at the subsequent meeting of that committee.

I think the new committee on human resources, which will include issues relating to education, must have the power to initiate studies into the cost of education, for example, the fantastic increase in school construction costs which have soared from $1,360 in 1959 to $3,580 per student place. I think that the committee should have the right to investigate these cost increases without first, in effect, getting the permission of the Minister of Education to do so.

I would like to say that I was very disappointed with the response of the new Minister of Education to my question this afternoon urging him to refer to the standing committee on education—now the new committee on human resources—the question of educational costs. His reply will bear some examination when it is printed in Hansard, Mr. Speaker, because I suspect and sense a feeling of secretiveness in his replies, a feeling that he is going to protect the departmental officials and that he is not going to open up the debate on the cost of education to the members of this Legislature in the relevant standing committee. I must say I feel a great disappointment in this.

I think that when we examine his reply to my question we will see that he said he is going to meet with the representatives of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation and that they will meet with him only. The clear implication that I got from that was that he would be terribly unhappy, if not unwilling, to instruct and allow the Legislature to call before it representatives of the OSSTF and other groups to examine "other matters referred to it" by this Legislature.

So I think the proposal brought forward by the government is lacking in this respect. I think the committees must become less partisan. There must be a place where individual members can play a role in their private capacity much more than has been the case in the past. I think they should have the right to initiate such studies and that the studies, other than the estimates and so forth, should not simply be the studies that the relevant minister—in my case, the Minister of Education—will allow the committee to look into.

The second point which I feel is important in examining and criticizing, hopefully in a constructive way, the government's proposal, is this. I start, by way of example, Mr. Speaker, by noting that the standing committee on education and university affairs met only twice during the third session of this Parliament. It met only five times in the second session of this Parliament. I think it is imperative that this House instruct the committees or make it possible for the committees, to meet on a regular basis and not simply on a sporadic basis, in effect, at the wish of the chairman—a government member—in cahoots with the relevant minister. I think this is bad. I think the committees must be instructed to meet regularly and that they must be instructed to report, not “from time to time,” but to report regularly to this House.

The third point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the committees ought not to be staffed by civil servants of the departments which may be being investigated by the committee. I refer to the experience I have had with the standing committee on education over the last couple of years. The secretary of that committee has been a senior civil servant in The Department of Education. I think this is bad. I think the committees must be staffed, sir, either by an independent body responsible to the Legislature as a whole or to yourself, sir, rather than by departments which might well be being investigated by the particular committee.

I have never seen any minutes of the standing committee on education. They have never been produced and I would be uneasy that if there were dissension as to the exact wording of a motion put before a committee, it would be impossible to verify because a committee has not had minutes which have been properly adopted at subsequent meetings of the committee.

I am not saying that in the past motions made by opposition members in the education committee, for example, have been altered by a departmental civil servant, but I am saying it is very difficult to understand what has been agreed to unless there has been a record. I think, sir, there should be a special secretariat to staff this committee and that special secretariat might well come under your jurisdiction, sir.

The fourth point I would like to make—and perhaps the government whip could clarify this point for me in his windup remarks—is that I do not fully understand the meaning of the legal phrase, “the power to send for persons.” Does this mean that the human resources committee, for example, could say to the president of McMaster University, “You come up to the human resources committee and explain why 13 of the 18 members of your department of political science are American citizens. Will you explain?” Will the committee have the power to say to someone such as a university president, “You must appear before this committee, and if you do not there will be legal proceedings against you.” I would like to have that point clarified.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is clear.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, I would like to know if that is what it means, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know what happens to a person who refuses to appear before a standing committee. What would happen to the president of McMaster University if he turned around and said, “That committee has no right to call me before it and I will not come.”

Mr. Sopha: Bread and water!

Mr. T. Reid: What are the legal proceedings?

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. member not cross those bridges when he gets to them? It has never happened.

Mr. T. Reid: Because I would like to have the presidents of universities come before that committee and I would like to ask them questions about the de-Canadianization of the universities in this province.

Mr. Lewis: Well, if the hon. member asks them to come, they will come. Do not assume they will not.

Mr. T. Reid: And finally—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do not make a political speech.

Mr. T. Reid: Did I hear something about politics over there?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just a brief word.

Mr. T. Reid: Brief?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Very brief.

Mr. T. Reid: I cannot believe it.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I simply urge the members of this House to accept the amendment that has been put forward by my leader and I would hope that the government party would accept what I consider to be some constructive albeit critical proposals.

Mr. Sopha: I should like to join in the debate firstly by extending the last remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition when he made that very forceful and very trenchant plea that this Legislature become relevant to the life and times of the province.

I am one of those who has believed in recent years that there is a danger of decay in parliamentary institutions if we as legislators do not demonstrate a great deal more alertness and a much more sympathetic spirit toward the needs, the demands, the anxieties and the frustrations of the people that we seek to serve.

I am fortified in that belief when I think of specific examples when that rapport between us and our constituents was, to use a modern argot, very meaningful. My mind goes back to the meetings of the labour committee of last year, which must have marked one of the most intense exchanges between the representatives of the very large group affected by the activities of this House that has occurred in the life of this Parliament. And I think of the many days of sittings that we spent in examining and arguing over the provisions of what I think was Bill 176.

As well, I recall to mind the tedium that characterized some meetings of the legal and municipal bills committee when, for example, we dealt with the very arcane and mysterious mystique—that is a good phrase—of bills like The Securities Act or The Business Corporations Act. Those of us who attended incurred a very vast boredom when having to consume a diet of a very boring subject. But they are revelatory of the establishment of those lines of communication with the public and give members of the public an opportunity to come here in the very precincts of Parliament and speak face to face and meet eyeball to eyeball with the people who have the sovereign power within the state, and to get off their chests those things that are bothering them.

In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, I think it perfectly ghastly, if not atrocious, the environment in which those committees meet. Last year, I raised this subject and obtained almost no progress. I think it reprehensible that legislators are forced to sit like errant school children in a cluster before the chairman of the committee, perhaps a cabinet minister—although they are a vanishing breed from committee work—and a number of the more prestigious members of the bureaucracy. There the committee members sit, like school children, without even the advantage of looking straight in the face of the members of the public who come there to make their complaints and representations.

Perhaps a little public money, a modest amount, could be expended in setting up a physical environment in committee room 1. It would be appropriate, as far as physical facilities go, to the science of “committeeology.” The legislators could be arranged around in a knot, perhaps on a little raised dais. Comfortable provision could be made for the member of the public to sit down while he is being questioned or making his representation; perhaps microphones might be provided, in a word, to lend some dignity to the operations of Parliament and an important aspect of it.

I do not know if the wall between committee rooms 1 and 2 is a bearing wall but perhaps that wall could be removed and those two commodious rooms could be made into one that would accommodate the maximum number of committee members that might be assembled. I suppose that is on the private bills committee. Once again I make that plea.

I think there is an important trait to be sought in the promotion of the dignity of Parliament to give some prestige to the people who have the final and sovereign power within the state and to impart to members of the public, when they come here, that this is an important proceeding affecting their lives, their well-being, and those whom they represent. I do not think that is too much to ask.

A word about ministers: I think one of the disabilities of the committee system, of course, is that which flows from a government long in office. That feature of it is related to the fact that many of the ministers of the Crown have occupied the position of adviser to the Lieutenant Governor for too long a time and have become too long removed from contact with the committee system.

Perhaps there is ground for optimism there in that, as I look over the array and the paucity of attendance in the debate on this important subject, I see some who in very recent times played a very intimate role in the committee structure. That is, those almost out of sight from the Premier—the inner seven, the outer six. Perhaps in the cabinet councils they will remember the important role they themselves played and will promote the idea that it is time, within this system of British parliamentary democracy, that perhaps we might copy some of the more useful aspects of the American congressional system.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Be very careful; the member for Scarborough East is very sensitive.

Mr. Sopha: Well I am not that nationalistic. I am not against borrowing what is good—and the good in it is the close and intimate contact with the people for whom we are the stewards. That is the good in it.

Mr. Peacock: The lobbyists!

Mr. Sopha: I am not particularly attracted by some features of the amendment of our friends to the left. I see no reason that we need hire a lawyer. They have enough to do with legal aid, nowadays. We do not need them as long as we have the member for Downsview and the member for—

Mr. MacDonald: That is why we do need them.

Mr. Sopha: —for Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and the member for Riverdale to assist us. We have enough lawyers to adequately staff the committee with legal talent.

Mr. Nixon: Too many, some say.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, there is some truth in that.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The member for Sudbury cannot always be there.

Mr. Sopha: The ministers of the Crown, of course, in the British system, have been traditionally and historically against an expansion of powers of committees because they see that as a vitiation of their own domains and their independence of initiative. They are suspicious of the committees because they feel that they will, in some way, diminish the powers that they command both individually and collectively in the cabinet council. It need not be so. The operation of the British system can be coextensive with separate initiative being exercised by ministers of the Crown and by intelligent and aggressive committees.

Lord knows, Mr. Speaker, I do not need to convince you that life in the technological, cybernetic nuclear age has become so terribly complex that it is difficult for Parliament to keep up with the changes. Parliament nowadays is in danger of the irrelevance that it just cannot keep pace with the changes that are going on outside its precincts, that it cannot continually be aware of the thoughts of those on the street corners of this province.

That is why I say unhesitatingly that perhaps the only vehicle that can save us from falling into decay is the projection and development of the committee system, and that is why I hope this debate will commend itself to the leader of the government and, as he comes to the office with, no doubt, a new zeal and zest for government, that he will find something of merit in the views that we promote over here and he will take the initiative and assume the final responsibility to develop the committee system in the way that we suggest.

I see nothing wrong, and very much that is good, in the thought that the president of the Ontario Medical Association, if that is what he is called, be called before the committee to explain the changes.

Mr. Nixon: He is a she.

Mr. Sopha: She, pardon me. The Treasurer of the Law Society would be, I am sure, a very willing and a very useful guest to have before the committee to explain the activities of lawyers and their charges, and I hastily say to my friend from Scarborough East that if neither one of them wants to answer the Queen's subpoena then we will put them on bread and water in the second subbasement down below, and there is no question about our power to do so.

Mr. MacDonald: Both of them together?

Mr. Sopha: And the new Minister of Justice will serve the subpoenas himself, no doubt.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Sure!

An hon. member: He would be delighted.

Mr. Sopha: Those are some of the developments that we would promote. I do not want to add anything to what the Leader of the Opposition said about the economic affairs committee. The arguments are so incontrovertible that this is a means of cultivating that necessary relevance to the economic life of this province, that I wonder if the leader of the government does not hastily adopt the idea.

I have engaged in and I have listened to 12 debates up to this second day of the opening of the session of the Legislature, and I am encouraged by my memory that it has progressed over the years. Always this government has been unwilling to indulge in innovation but as a result of constant prodding, protest, declamation, they have finally acceded to the suggestions for reform. Did I not read in the paper the other day that the Provincial Auditor's responsibilities were going to be greatly changed, that as a result of the declamations of the Liberal members of the public accounts committee—

Mr. Gaunt: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sopha: Well, that is a significant example. The Leader of the Opposition has pointed to others, but I must say as a member of the Legislature that I derive an intense enjoyment out of the work of committees, and I have said on many a platform that the most democratic aspect of the work of this House is that of the private bills committee. It is far and away the greatest example of democracy that is practised here, where independence of thought and opinion is given the fullest sway, the maximum of participation is accorded to members of the public who come there to ask the sovereign body to execute a legislative act according to their wishes.

Now I am just a little disturbed. They say, finally, if I understand this motion, that we are to be deprived by its terms of participation in various areas of interest, that if you are in one section you cannot be in another, as I read it. You are to be prohibited by regulation from doing so, and that, of course, is not in accordance with the multiple responsibilities that we have where we must perform a variety of interests, we must be alive and alert to many aspects of the human condition that concern us as legislators. Perhaps, after that is tried for a while, then a more practical and more consummate form of participation will be found. I certainly hope so.

Those are my remarks in support of this resolution and amendment, and once again before I sit down, I plead for that physical change in the environment down on the first floor. Too many of these ministers have not been involved in it. The leader of the government himself will not think it is unfair criticism that there is probably not a member of the Executive Council who has had less contact with the committee structure than he has. Now, that is deserving of some criticism. He simply never called the committee for which he was responsible.

There have been other developments that I must mention before resuming my seat. It was taken for granted for many years, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Municipal Affairs would participate actively in the work of the private bills committee. A great majority of those bills, of course, relate to the matters under his jurisdiction and, very disturbingly, last year the then Minister of Municipal Affairs put a cessation on his attendance. Mr. Spooner used to be there religiously, but when the present Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) took over the portfolio almost by design it seemed that he was not going to attend. Notwithstanding the pleas of the committee who asked him to do so, he declined to attend.

Now I hope the new incumbent will resume the participation of that attendance. Because it boils down to this: Members of that committee must be told by the minister what the attitude of the department is to certain specific bills before it. They do not know which way to vote, whether to accede to the request or whether to deny it, until they are acquainted with the government policy in that area. It is a vital participation and I hope we will not be further denied that guidance there that comes. But I am cheered, I am absolutely euphoric, that the time of this government is so short, that it is not so long until we will be over there running things and we will order the life of this province.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Carruthers: Same old thing.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, within the next few days the public accounts committee to be established by this resolution will have put before it accounts of some $3.7 billion in gross expenditures in the completed fiscal year for which the auditor has reported to us. Once again that committee will meet with something like perhaps 10 to 11 members. Unless the Prime Minister himself gives his attention to the recommendation which the public accounts committee of the last session reported to the House, it will be meeting to cope with an expenditure of record proportions without the benefit of expert counsel and advice to guide it in its deliberations.

The public accounts committee is one of the historic committees of this House—I would say it is the senior committee, by virtue of the fact that until last session it has been the only one to exercise independent review of government expenditure of policy arising out of that expenditure by virtue of statutory authority not requiring specific reference from the House.

It needs, as recommended, counsel from The Department of the Treasury. It also needs, if the Prime Minister agrees with the recommendation, independent counsel such as accountants and others who can assist the committee members to probe behind the mass of figures that is put out in that statement of the public accounts of the province.

The case remains for staffing of all the other committees in a similar way, Mr. Speaker. But I have much less hope that the Prime Minister will agree to go to that extent.

I would like to raise with the chief government whip, the member for Durham, who has introduced this motion, four points:

Will he address himself to this question of substitution that is not part of the motion before us, but was part of the committee report of last session?

Would he explain what purpose or assignment the committee on estimates will have—one of the three specialist committees?

Would he tell the House the significance of the word "automatically" in the motion before us as it relates to the appearance of government boards and commissions before the various standing committees?

Finally, what will the numbers and quorums of the various standing committees be?

On the third point, Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the Prime Minister and to the chief government whip—they may have come to this conclusion in consultation outside the House in the last few minutes—that a standing committee of such a general nature as one of the four now before us should not have any idle time on its hands throughout this session. If this House has not referred to it specifically an estimate or a piece of legislation, it should automatically—using the word of the motion—be empowered to undertake the examination or inquiry into the operations or policies of any Crown agency or board or commission. It should not have to wait upon instructions from the House, and I trust that that is what is meant by the use of the word "automatically".

Mr. Speaker, in this group we welcome the innovation. We look forward to the Prime Minister giving it substance and weight, because I remind him of the statement in the Speech from the Throne yesterday, that, as government grows, not only in terms of expenditure but as it grows more in terms of adopting to its own purposes modern management systems, it requires the counterweight of standing committees of this House as representative of the public of the province being in touch, and it is only through the increasing responsibility of such standing committees that that counterweight will be provided.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Sudbury was talking about the private bills committee. I have sat on that committee for many years, and I do like the way the private bills committee administers its affairs by very thoroughly investigating each bill and looking through the problem.

I am very concerned, and have been for many years, as I study the history of Hydro and the small connection that we have with them as a commission and as legislators. They can increase their rates as they see fit.

They can spend millions and millions of dollars as they see fit and we have an opportunity to question them for about an hour or one hour and a half.

In committee that was dealing with Hydro just last year, there were many of us wanting to ask questions of the chairman. I realize that they had a lot of work before them. They came to us with their drafts and charts and scales indicating to us that that was not the only raise that we would have in hydro—that Hydro would continue to raise their rates because power was needed in this province.

Industry after industry is leaving this Province of Ontario because they are going to other jurisdictions where hydro can be bought much cheaper. Not for a one-year term, Mr. Speaker, but for terms of 5 to 10 years at a lower rate. We are getting more unemployment in this province from day to day as industries leave us and go into other jurisdictions, while we cannot question a minister in this government on the issues that affect the people of this province so seriously.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Hydro was never meant to—

Mr. Bukator: Yes, as a matter of fact, Hydro was never meant to administer its own affairs in the manner that it does this day. As I study the history of Hydro it was meant to come to this Legislature to naturally speak of its stewardship and to tell us what it is doing for this province.

Perhaps this new method is going to be used by the whip of the government to give us an opportunity to question these people with experts on how they spend their money. Not because we cannot possibly do the job, but there are too many man-hours of work to be done at that time to get the experts to tell us why they administer the affairs of their particular commission as they do. I think we have a right to question their expenditures. I think we have a right to sit in that committee hour after hour, and day after day until we are satisfied that these rates are justified.

If the hon. member's resolution is going to bring this about and give us an opportunity to question not only that commission, but others as was mentioned earlier in this day, then I say, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is on the right track. But my leader's amendment to the resolution clearly indicates that we want to know what is going on in these commissions. We want to know why this money is being spent and we would like to be able to either agree or disagree with them.

So I say to you that the amendment is a just one, one that you all should support because we are all trying to do one thing, and that is to be proper stewards to the people of this province, to do our jobs and to do them well.

If the new Premier of this province would indicate to me—and he may—that he will go along with this amendment and give us an opportunity to question all spending bodies in this province before they have a right to impose on the people of this province increase after increase without any regard for the people that are on low income, or on pensions and cannot meet their obligations, then I would say to the Premier, he is starting to do his job in a proper manner at this time.

If he does not support this amendment and does not give us an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to discuss with these people the reasons for their administration and the way they go about spending the taxpayers' money as though it was going out of style then I do believe that we have fallen short of the job that we are put here to do.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I too want to mention Hydro; it seems to be on everyone's mind at the moment. I want first to state though, that I could support the motion of the government. The motion pretty well encompasses those things that we agreed upon last session.

I can support what the official opposition has said in adding another committee. Perhaps there is a need for it. I think that the subamendment that we offered, of course adds some substance to the whole procedure. It adds to the committee and gives the committee an opportunity to deal in depth with many of the problems that obviously have to come before these committees. I think the need for some expert guidance has been obvious, at least for the last 3½ years that I have been in this House and serving on the committees of this House.

What worries me is that the government yesterday indicated that they were going to have a complete review of Hydro by the committee on government productivity, which is a committee separate and apart from any committee that has on it members of the Legislature. I am worried about that because I am convinced, as I look at it, that it will mean that the appropriate committee that is being structured today will not have the kind of opportunity to come to grips with Hydro in the way that we want it to.

Over the last two years, when we had Hydro appear before the government commissions committee we did manage to extract from them—no matter how painful it was—we extracted some rather interesting, sometimes disturbing aspects of their operation. The only thing that held us back from getting a more meaningful discussion with Hydro was that we did not have the expert advice that we needed in the committee to come to grips with the expert advice that they had brought with them—high-priced help brought from the Hydro offices.

What I am suggesting to the Premier is that if he makes available to the committees the opportunity to have legal counsel and engineering staff made available on a hire-as-you-need-them basis we will not have to have Hydro investigated by the commission on government productivity. The job will be done by the elected representatives, where it should be done. The people of Ontario will have an opportunity to hear the results of the kind of investigation that we want to conduct into not only the rates but into the entire operation and future operations of Ontario Hydro.

It seems a shame to zero in on Hydro alone because there are a lot of other areas, but I am afraid that what is going to happen is that when this is shunted off to this productivity committee we will then be faced with yet another year of just handshaking, listening to the very able chairman gleefully telling how wonderfully well Hydro is operating without us being able to come to grips with it.

It is not a matter of staffing these committees with full-time staff sitting around doing nothing while the committee is not meeting. It is simply a matter of making available to the committees the opportunity to hire—whether it be through the existing offices or whether it be from outside—the kind of help necessary to conduct a proper investigation in order that we can determine whether or not the policies of Hydro are adequate and, on top of that, whether or not the money that Hydro raises is being raised in the proper fashion.

For that reason I ask that the amendment—at least those parts of it that deal with the staffing—be given great consideration and that the government accept that proposal so that we can operate efficiently and effectively.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, as the prize attender on committees of this House—proved by newspaper articles—I feel that I have not only the right but almost the prerogative in this particular area at the moment. On these attendances that one made an almost 100 per cent record on, one would believe I was almost enamoured of committee work.

Nothing, Mr. Speaker, invigorates me more than the thought of attending the Wednesday matinee of the public accounts committee. A more vital, penetrating, zestful enterprise can hardly be imagined. Some Saturdays I go in on the scenario and it is like the last act from “The World Well Lost” or “Much Ado About Nothing.” On occasion it is even tragic. Lear comes to mind—the terrible things that happen in human life—and it is with that background and with that pertinacity that I express some misgivings.

We have agreed overwhelmingly that the government committee restructuring as it is presently ventured upon has some merit. I wish to express a little of my strictly personal suspicions about it. If the design of this committee—as it very well may be—is simply, basically to alleviate the government party of the embarrassment in failures to attend—and I suspect that in part, at least, it is precisely with that motivation that this committee was brought into being—then the committee system will not work. Because the number of sittings of any one of these committees is going to be as extensive, repetitive and drawn out as what they were as divided among the numerous committees. Though fewer members within the government party may be called upon to attend; and they can overlap, I would hope, and duplicate. At the same time, that is not the purpose in this restructuring.

Mr. Speaker, I want to put particular emphasis upon the business of the second paragraph in our sub-amendment having to do with the enforcing of the role of the committee by way of experts.

I have served on two select committees of this House. One was the Smith committee. On that committee we had high-powered—to say the least—legal counsel in Robert Macaulay, who drove the committee assiduously. We had economic counsel on that committee to help in the way of advice. We also had research. It seems to me that while these various committees ought not to have permanently attached to them, or directly attached to them perforce, either legal counsel or other forms of expertise, they certainly should be able to avail themselves of them. From time to time, as the committee saw fit, they should be able to call into the sanctum various forms of advice—to make use of the role of universities, to have sociologists, to have economic experts, to have accountants.

As I see it, these committees are hog-tied and hamstrung at the present time for the simple reason that there is not available to them the wherewithal and the knowhow and the inside information which would make their work viable and of some set purpose.

This is ever so true, as has been mentioned, with respect to those self-enclosed institutions who are willing to give as little away as possible except what is self-serving, such as the government commissions of this province. In that way we would be able to appoint these men, have them report back to us, then to go into the work of interrogation, cross-examinations or what you will, of that board which appears before us. This is a prerequisite. I would think that financial help would be made to it. It is certainly one of the features of the American system which commends itself very, very much to us.

If it is a case of the government seeking to swaddle information then I think that the government itself has to agree that it is working directly contrary to the whole purpose of democratic institutions. We often get that very strong feeling that information is being suppressed and deliberately withheld, even on matters which would not cause them embarrassment and which would be of great validity and worth in the public grounds in the way of saving costs and what not, and in that particular way.

Finally, and as an extension of what I have been saying about having the necessary personnel to make the work of committees viable I want to enforce what the member for York South had to say about that constitutional committee. We heard a great deal about it. It was one of those pivotal, at least focal, things that the former Prime Minister put forward in the way of a gesture toward Canadian unity, apart from his conference which was here and gone, apart from what he did with respect to the languages in this House. I suspect—and you know, we are not constitutional lawyers—most of us, and even with those trained in the legal profession, have a scanty grasp of what the real problems that overshadow us in this country at this time are. I envisage that this constitutional committee would be at work in education, that those people in the province—and they are readily available—who have considerable insight into the subject could bring in in a capsulated and distinct form the real problems of the constitution as to which revamping should take place as between the various articles, particularly 91 and 92. We would have a chance to get our teeth into that flesh in order that finally we would come to grips with what are major problems and which are being sloughed off by both levels of government at the present time. If that would come to pass, that committee would certainly need counsel—not necessarily legal but of some very high quality touching knowledge of our constitution so that initially at least he could spoon-feed us with respect to the very complex and very profound problems that are raised there.

I am very sorry that nowhere in this present resolution, as offered by the government, is this committee envisaged or handled or touched upon or reverted to. It could be said that it might fall into committee number 2, but I think that the Premier would probably agree that it could fall under any and all of the committees because it is an all-encompassing subject and I would ask that further thought be given to instituting that constitutional committee as a separate and distinct committee of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word about this resolution and its amendment as put forth. In my opinion, the opposition's motions or amendments to the motion have very little validity in our democratic society under the British parliamentary system. What these people are suggesting is a change to the republican system of the United States, not taking into consideration the one basic difference—and that is that here we have a cabinet responsible in Parliament and in the United States the congressional committee develops and drafts the bills and measures presented in the House. They would like to have the power conferred to the opposition that is presently conveyed by our system to the cabinet—and that is being responsible in this House to the Legislature and the people of our province.

Mr. Lawlor: Does the hon. member not agree we have a horse-and-buggy system?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The horse-and-buggy system that the hon. member refers to happens to be the suggestions at the moment of the opposition.

Mr. Lawlor: That is really clever. It takes one's breath away.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: I would like to say that the resolution proposed by my colleague from Durham has great merit. I am sorry that he did overlook the possibility of substitution but I can understand why. This resolution gives the maximum option of holding meetings in this House. It gives a minimum of conflict for members being on two or more committees and sitting at the same time. It gives a very workable committee structure in that we can have four committees sitting at any one time at any one committee period.

I am very concerned that we do not have adequate staff. However, in the past the suggestion was made in debate to provide more funds for research staffs in the opposition parties.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Why has the government not acted on it then?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: This has been done on several occasions in the increases and it was to offset the real basic problem of the opposition members creating and developing the really constructive questions in committee.

This proposal by my fellow member will allow us to develop a very good committee system, and the option of this House referring work to any one of those committees by motion at any time allows for great ability to change and to alter the work load of a committee. The possibility of having the constitutional committee directed to whichever committee workload is light, I think has merit. But in that case I would suggest there should be perhaps a change of members who are interested and would like to be on the constitutional committee when it is deliberating the opportunities there.

I do not consider it as substitution nearly as much as if we have four committees sitting, the opportunity for exchange will be greater than the substitution feature. This is, as I see it, because if we have a full workload in the committee structure in this House, we should find that all our members are occupied at the same time. This has not been possible in the past. I believe that our party should see that there is a full committee operation and there is no doubt in my mind there is subject matter for a full committee operation at all times.

I wonder, though, when I see people who consider a committee not functioning when they had a 100 per cent attendance at one meeting, as reported in the press, and myself with eight committees and unable to attend on one occasion because I was a member of three committees sitting at the same time and I had to make a choice. So I asked the government whip which one I should choose, and he said, "Well, whichever one is needing you at the moment."

That is a difficult decision to make on my behalf and on his behalf, so we put this proposal and the members of both opposition parties contributed to this proposal in the committee on rules and procedure last year. We did put it through on computers to see what our alternatives were and what the problems were and we found that the structure proposed here by the member for Durham is a workable one and I am sure that we will all find that it is the best that we have seen to date. Certainly it will take reviewing, as we have done in the past here in any change we have made in rules and procedures, and I am sure that we may even find we can devise a more workable method shortly within even this structure. Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make one brief reply in regard to a remark that the member for Victoria-Haliburton made. I think he is confusing the issue when he thinks that when we want more expert advice on the committee that we are bringing about a presidential form of government. I, for one, do not approve of a presidential form of government in this country, but I am certainly convinced that it is highly important that we do have expert staff on the various committees that are in this House.

When I was on the public accounts committee, it was more than obvious to me that we had to have people who are skilled in economics and who know something about government. It has been suggested by the leader of the NDP that we need more lawyers. Well, one can look around this House and I, as a lawyer, can tell that we do not need more lawyers. We have got all the lawyers we need.

We certainly do need people who are skilled in economics. We can take the volume of the public accounts and, with all the interest and goodwill in the world, we cannot get to the heart of the matter unless we have got people who are skilled in the field of public accounts. Of course, we get all the experts in the world on the public accounts committee, and unless we have a decent audit system in this province, they will not do us any good either.

If we are going to have a proper public accounts committee, we are going to have to have a Provincial Auditor who has got some real power and some say. That is one of the most vital things we are going to need insofar as the public accounts committee is concerned.

There is one example we can follow south of the border and I can refer to the State of California. They have a staff on each committee for each of what they call the minority party and the majority party. I have really been impressed with the ability of those staffs and how it makes it possible for members of the committee to make a real contribution. The members are in most cases highly informed, and if they are not it is certainly their own fault.

It is true that California has more money and has a larger budget than the Province of Ontario, but still we are getting in that class because we must remember that the budget of this province I think, is now larger than the federal budget was before the Second World War. So it means a lot of money is involved, and we certainly are going to need more trained personnel; I do not mean large numbers of them, but personnel who are close to the particular group and are involved and trying to get to the problem.

One of the most successful committees I have ever been on was the committee that got into all the trouble—at least the chairman got in all the trouble—with the government party. That as the health committee that sat two years ago. That committee, just as the education committee of a few years back was under the present Minister of University Affairs, did a lot of prying into what was going on. The member for Quinte, as chairman of the health committee, made inquiries literally all over the province and sought leaders of thought in various health problems.

Mr. Nixon: The government knows how to quiet those fellows down.

Mr. Trotter: There was no question that if a lot of people appeared before that committee they would embarrass the government. But at the same time, I would say that in the long run there is no question that many of those ideas are adopted by government no matter what party they might be. So if members are going to earn their pay, and if they are going to be informed to serve the public, they are going to need committees that are aggressive and that do a good job, not just meeting once or twice a year, but by meeting throughout the duration of parliament.

I do want to emphasize and support the amendment of my leader because there is one very important thing about a committee that looks into the economic affairs of the province and it is this; If they would deal with the bread and butter issues that face us today, and much as we must protect our right to vote and much as we must protect our freedom of speech, one of the biggest weaknesses in our society today is that we do not deal with the bread and butter issues as our people are being caught up in unemployment. Not only the unemployment, but it is the fear of being unemployed.

If you are in a large city today people fear the high rents that they must pay for their apartments. We do not deal with that at all in the various committees that sit, and yet despite that over half the people of the city of Toronto live in apartments, and we do not even discuss the rents. I want to emphasize and underline that this is one of the gut issues of our time. If you send out your questionnaires you will know that a shocking number of people in this province want price and wage controls. You will get surprising answers that you would not have expected five or 10 years ago. And yet we do not discuss those issues to any great length. This is the type of thing that a committee should discuss in detail. How far should we go with price controls and wage controls? All the way, part of the way, or should we stay away from them? But we simply do not know the answer at this time, and this is why a committee dealing with economic problems is extremely important. This is why I would ask the government, particularly the government who have got the members that will support the amendment as proposed by the Leader of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. Prime Minister wish to intervene at this time in the debate? We have another speaker from the opposition.

Mr. Bullbrook: You have more than one.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but I asked him if he wished to intervene at this point. If he wished to speak now he could, but otherwise the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, very briefly, I think that no more important, timely subject can come before this whole House today than this amendment. It is basically asking that the committees be empowered to investigate and hold public hearings related to significant cost changes in products and services affecting the cost of living in Ontario today.

We have in the life of this House watched the government try to smooth over this whole area insofar as things concerning people. We have been talking about a purchasing department for years. We have a $100,000 budget for purchasing; you are going to save us $5 million to $10 million a year—this never happens. We have the farce in Hydro where we are launched on a $1 billion fiasco, an economic disaster which will never work. We are told that by authority—and no one in the Hydro seems to know where they are going in this matter. And it is a fact that we should make our life here meaningful.

Mr. Speaker, in regard to a parallel in the United States, these investigative committees have counsel to give them power to do things properly and to let the public know exactly what is going on, and I submit that we have no parallel in our democratic system here to match that. Why do we not have it? Because the government has gone along on the policy that we can cover these things up, and I say that respectfully, it is enough that you have inherited this thing, but it is time you had a chance to do something intelligent, to do something that is a new departure, to take something good from the opposition and to make a new step in democratic procedure. We are not dummies on this side of the House, we are—

An hon. member: The member could have fooled me.

Mr. Sargent: Some day you fellows will have the opportunity to have the fun of being here.

But I think, Mr. Speaker, and I say very sincerely, that the Prime Minister could do very well, he could make a landmark, to start the Premiership off properly, to be intelligent and not go down the route that because an opposition bill comes it is no good. I think this is very intelligent, timely, and needed by the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Speaker, let me say first of all that this resolution is rather timely in terms of restructuring the committee process that we have been accustomed to in this Legislature, but I believe that the restriction—and I took that from the member for Victoria-Haliburton that there was going to be a restriction on the exchanging of members of the various committees, I took that from his remarks and no one has said yet that they are not going to restrict them, and let me—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have not had much chance yet.

Mr. Pilkey: Okay. Let me remind the government that in the Throne Speech they indicated that they wanted to get the views of the people and if we get the views of the people then we ought to have a process for the means of communication back to the people. It just has to be a two-way street. It appears to me that through this committee structure and through the exchanging of the members we can have this means of communication back to the people.

It means also that we must have the expertise within the committees so that there can be a legitimate discussion in looking at every aspect of the various problems that will confront the committee. This means that I support the resolution that was presented by my leader when he said that the committee should be empowered to engage counsel and other expert staff if necessary; that the committee ought to have that opportunity. I sensed again from the member from Victoria that he was in opposition to that; he pointed out that we were given additional funds on this side of the House for research facilities. We agree with that; but by the same token it appears to me that we ought to be able to engage experts in various aspects that the committees may be discussing.

I just wanted to make those brief comments—that if we are really concerned about the views of the people we also ought to have the means of communication back to the people. It seems to me that this kind of structure could do that if it is properly operated and we have the expertise that is necessary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Samia.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a few comments. I had been out of the House with a delegation so there might be some degree of reiteration.

This afternoon I thought it was extremely relevant, probably in anticipation of this debate, that the Minister of Education in reply to my colleague, the member for Scarborough East, said the 117 of us should be concerned with the question of educational costs. The fact of the matter is, sir, that the 117 of us, I trust, have been concerned.

We in this party tried to exemplify that concern about 12 to 14 months ago. Strange it was that every member of the standing committee on education and university affairs voted in favour of a resolution that I brought to that committee, asking the government to give us power and ability, resources and talent and expertise to look at at least one field of educational spending. It seems to be very popular now; it is a popular thing to talk about educational spending now.

Surely to goodness, there is not one person in this House who has not experienced the same trauma that I experienced when I see literally thousands of dollars being spent in Lambton College in my riding on a course in geology; in a college of applied arts and technology, in the most esoteric, impractical involvement that you could think of—almost in the field of academic learning. Geology—a course in that has really no practical application other than in the post-doctoral field and we are teaching that course in a community college. They are teaching a course out here in the occult sciences and the occult arts.

Certainly we were legitimate in our concern and we came here, as members, into the House, your honour, and we said: “All right, we will have an opportunity during the course of the debate on the estimates of the various departments.”

But the fact of the matter is, you do not have the opportunity, because, as one of my colleagues said before, we are not all experts. I do not hold myself out as an expert in the field of education, but I think I have the right to look to the council of presidents of the universities to come before our committee, your honour, and to tell us what they think about the application of, for example, the great structure that the federal government makes available again in postgraduate studies as compared to graduate studies.

We want to find out if it is properly distributed, or we want to find out if it is not perpetuating among some universities programmes designed not for the academic benefit of their students but to bring more money into the coffers of the treasury of the university. I want to be able to ask these questions. I want to be able to get the council of regents of the community colleges to come before us and say, as to the original philosophy that the government had in the conception of the community colleges themselves, is it coming forward? Is it doing what you wanted it to do?

But we have not had the opportunity. You cannot do that during the course of the debates on the estimate. I call upon the government to support the attitude that has been exemplified by my colleagues and was exemplified, your honour, by members of the government when they came and said unanimously to this chamber, "Please give us this opportunity." It does not satisfy us and it is not enough that the present Minister of Education says to us "The 117 of you should be concerned." We are concerned. It really does not satisfy, although I know the present Prime Minister does have tongue in cheek when he writes to me and says "You know we spent the money wisely and well, Jim." I cannot take his word; I cannot take his word for that.

I do have a responsibility. So I exhort all, I exhort all again as I exhorted them during the course of that meeting that we had to discuss that motion from this party, the Liberal Party, that they consider it again today. Give us the opportunity, Mr. Speaker—give us the opportunity to do the job so we can go back and I can say to the farmers in my riding who are not getting their rebate cheques that the municipal subsidies branch is doing a proper job. Give us the opportunity to investigate the practicality of these programmes that you bring forward. We might wish to respond and say they are wonderful programmes.

I tell you, I cannot respond in that fashion. I am prepared to give you my assurance as one member of this House, if you give me the opportunity of investigating adequately, it will not be any witch-hunt. You remember we talked about that, too, that it is going to be a witch-hunt. That, of course, is completely irrelevant; there will be no witch-hunt at all. What we will be doing, in effect, is our job. I exhort the Premier to reconsider his position. Give us this opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak to this motion I cannot help recall some of the things I said two years ago, back in February, 1969, during, I think it was, the Throne debate. At that time I discussed the standing committees and pointed out how impossible it was for the committee on government commissions to look into even a fraction of the number of committees we had throughout the Province of Ontario. I made a long list of these committees, and I remember the present Minister of Health interject-ing and asking me which of these boards I wanted abolished. I told him I could not tell which ones I wanted abolished since we put our research people on the subject and we could not even find out which of them were in existence and if they were, where they operated or from whence they got their money, or who the members were. The member at that time stated "They are all in existence now." I found out that a lot of them were not. There were a number of hundingers and perhaps when the Prime Minister gets up—and he is the Prime Minister, leader of the government—he could perhaps tell us when the commission for the investigation of cancer cures last made a report; or the cemeteries advisory board; or the board of directors for drugless therapy; or the artificial insemination board, to name just a few? Surely they must be making reports? They are, to the best of my knowledge, still in existence.

Mr. Sargent: Those are on-going deals.

Mr. Ben: They are on-going all right, but I will tell you—

Mr. Nixon: A Tory member has appointed every one of them.

Mr. Ben: I think the members of these committees I named are the ones that keep on writing letters hither and yonder, and reports, and signing them anonymously.

At any rate, I have one criticism of the subamendment submitted by the party to our left. That is where they specify which commissions shall be dealt with or called before the committees first. They mention the Workmen's Compensation Board in one instance before one committee; they mention the Ontario Hydro before another committee, and the Ontario Hospital Services Commission before still a third.

My quarrel with that particular subamendment is that if we do call these particular bodies to account, we never seem to get on to any other committees. Every year that I sat on the standing committee on government commissions we called before us the Workmen's Compensation Board; we called before us the Ontario Hydro and, I believe, we called before us the Ontario Northland Railway. Apart from those major ones, we never did get to any of the minor ones. We just did not seem to have either the time or the inclination to do so. Now and then we got a list of certain other commissions, but we never delved into them.

I am suggesting that if we continue to specify which commissions we should call before these standing committees, we are going to get into the rut that we deal with those and only those and overlook many of the others that are in existence, and in fact are carrying on the government of this province and not the people who sit to your right, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that the New Democratic Party leader give consideration to the leading requirement which would provide which commission shall be first called before the committee; for a number of reasons: One, we are going to spend too much time with that particular commission. Second, I think that there should be an element of surprise, that they should be open to inspection at any time and not know which one is going to be called before the standing committee.

Just to assist some of the members of the House, there are the Crop Insurance Commission, the Farm Products Marketing Board, Ontario Livestock Board, Milk Commission of Ontario, Ontario Telephone Services Commission, Ontario Research Foundation, Ontario Energy Board, Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, and about 20 or 30 others. As a matter of fact, there are about 115 boards and commissions and administrative tribunals. There is no way you are going to get them all, if you are going to spend so much time on the Workmen's Compensation Board, or on the Ontario Hydro, or on the Ontario Hospital Services Commission. We ought to be able to pick them at random so that every board and commission in the Province of Ontario can expect that unexpectedly it will be called upon to justify its existence and its operations to the members of this House. Aside from that, I will certainly support the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the contribution from the government side will be made by the government whip. I just want to make two or three very general observations, and I will try to do it in a non-provocative sense, but I really feel that there should be some indication of a reply to the Leader of the Opposition and to the member for Downsview.

The resolution that was introduced is based completely on a report that was prepared for the members of this House by a committee on which there were representatives from each party. The representatives from the Liberal Party included the member for Sudbury, the member for Rainy River, and the member for, I believe, Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar). I recognize that when the Leader of the Opposition had not done his homework for the debate this afternoon—

Mr. Nixon: Nonsense.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—that the member for Downsview felt that his somewhat irrelevant rhetoric was necessary to attempt to bail him out.

Mr. Nixon: I had no notice of the government's resolution whatsoever, and that is a fact.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that one of the first orders of the House today would be the establishment of the standing committees.

Mr. Nixon: Why does the Premier not have a copy of the resolution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have always debated the establishment of the standing committees. There is no question that the members—

Mr. Nixon: The NDP tags along with the Premier all the time.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—opposite certainly, even those in the New Democratic Party, knew very clearly what was going to be discussed this afternoon.

Mr. Stokes: What does he mean "even"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly, even.

Mr. MacDonald: We always know what they are going to do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All I would say to the Leader of the Opposition and to the member for Downsview: there is no question but that the government is attempting—and in a very constructive way—to improve the committee process in this Legislature. To me, it is one of the very significant steps we have made. I assure the members opposite that it is my intent to involve them in some form of consultative process and change of the rules, or any other mechanism, but I think it was quite proper for the government and for the Prime Minister to assume, Mr. Speaker, that the members opposite would have come somewhat better informed as to the content of this resolution. I would say—

Mr. MacDonald: Fair enough, fair enough!

Hon. Mr. Davis:—on the question of whether a person can be replaced or substituted or what have you, surely it is the proper occasion or obligation for the striking committee, when it meets, to constitute the membership of the standing committees. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, this would be the appropriate time to deal with that particular problem.

Mr. Speaker, when this resolution, unamended, goes through this House, as it will very shortly—and I will tell the Leader of the Opposition now—I intend to pass a motion referring to the procedural affairs committee a motion to consider, by all members of that committee whether it would make sense to set aside Wednesdays—the complete day—for committee sittings, as we did once before. I feel, Mr. Speaker, if this is to be meaningful, if we are really going to get our teeth into some of these situations, that we cannot do it on the odd morning during the week. I am personally of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that at least consideration of setting the total day, Wednesday, for the standing committees makes some sense. I have not made any final decision on it. I will be doing this through the procedural affairs committee.

I might also point out, Mr. Speaker, that there are already staff attached to the department of the Clerk of the House that will form the secretariat of the standing committees themselves. They will not be members of any existing government department. I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that I think one must recognize, as was pointed out in the Throne Speech, these matters must be evolutionary. There is a great deal of pioneering to be done to go ahead in this process. I speak for the government and my colleagues. We want to make the committee system meaningful. And when I say that, I also have had some experience with it and I know it is a great thing to talk about it here in the House. It is another thing to come to grips with it when the committees themselves are called. I do not intend to get into any debate on this occasion as it relates to the so-called resolution in the standing committee on education, except to recall to the member for Sarnia's mind there was a meeting scheduled for June 26—on that particular occasion the member for Peterborough attended, the member for Scarborough East could not attend—which meeting was scheduled to see if we could find some ways and means to move the education committee ahead with the analysis of some of the cost problems. That happens to be factually the case, but I will not dwell upon it on this particular occasion.

Mr. Speaker, I should also point out that I have checked these amendments very carefully. I see the amendment from the Leader of the Opposition, and I say to him, with respect, as I read the initial resolution there are very few of those matters, if any, that are not contained within the existing resolution, if at the direction of the House, these matters are to be done.

I would say to the member for Scarborough West—am I in the right geographic area, the member for Scarborough West—as I read the amendment from his particular group—I sense a desire to have the committee structure moved to the extent where there is no direction, per se, from the House itself, as it relates to certain matters. I have to go on record as saying, Mr. Speaker, I think it is important in the consideration of the committee structure that there be a recognition that it draws its power from the Legislature itself, and surely consideration as to the affairs, what should be directed, these are things we can debate here. These are things we can direct to the committee. There is nothing to preclude this in the initial resolution.

Mr. Sargent: No chance for a change here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just a minute. There is a very substantial change here. I know it is difficult for it to sink through to the member for Grey-Bruce, but it is coming. I hope it is coming. I would say to him that the change is here and it is a very significant change and I hope he appreciates it.

I would say to the member for Scarborough West, there is nothing in the initial resolution that precludes, if the need arises, if it makes sense to do so, the acquisition of staff as it relates to specific situations. It is quite obvious as I read this that matters relating to the Hydro Electric Commission, matters relating to the Workmen's Compensation Board, the Hospital Services Commission, really are without any question inherent in this resolution itself, no doubt about it whatsoever.

And so, Mr. Speaker, in those very brief remarks, I have to say that really I cannot see any validity in accepting the advice from the members opposite as it relates to the amendment from the New Democratic Party or the amendment from the official opposition, because I think, with respect, Mr. Speaker, much of what they are attempting to say in their amendment, if they would read the initial resolution very carefully, they will find that it is covered.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the Prime Minister respond to my earlier query as to whether the constitutional committee has been shuffled out of existence, and secondly, would the Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, let me respond to one question at a time. In this way, perhaps it will be more meaningful. The constitutional committee: I, personally, am very anxious to see some consideration of the constitutional problems considered by a committee of this Legislature very shortly, prior to discussions that will take place in Victoria in June. And I would suggest, with respect, that not only are there the four committees here—and I think this is the best way to do it, because if we start fragmenting them further and breaking down membership, I think we will run into problems of attendance—there is no doubt that when you look at at least two or three of these, the constitutional situation can be considered in that committee; and I for one, Mr. Speaker, would support that kind of approach.

Second question?

Mr. MacDonald: My second question is, would the Prime Minister clarify exactly what he meant when he said that the striking committee would have the power to make a decision with regard to the right to substitution? For example, would the striking committee have the power, the majority of Conservatives on it, at this stage to say there can be no substitution and therefore reverse the recommendation of the original committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, my suggestion was that the striking committee consider the matter of substitution. If there is no agreement there then we can debate it further here in the House. I have no objection to that whatsoever, but it impressed upon me the logic of having the striking committee getting into the question of numbers, the question of substitution, it is far more relevant for them to do it than for us to get into this discussion at the moment here when perhaps it will not be necessary.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister permit a question from me?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes.

Mr. Bullbrook: In relation to the comment that the Premier directed to myself relative to a meeting that he had with the member for Peterborough and the member for Scarborough East, do I glean that the government anticipates doing something to give us members on the standing committee on education and university affairs the ability to look into the costs of education?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if memory serves me correctly, we had a further discussion in that committee. The second time that we met, there was no consensus on that occasion as to the structure.

I recall the member for Riverdale participated in it, and the member for Peterborough. I undertook on that occasion to meet with the member for Peterborough and the member for Scarborough East to develop some sort of mechanism that could be worthwhile as far as the standing committee on education and university affairs was concerned. The meeting was scheduled, I believe—

Mr. Bullbrook: What has Premier done?

Mr. Lewis: Take a breath; take a breath!

Hon. Mr. Davis: —for some time on June 26 and the member for Scarborough East did have a matter of pressing public concern—

Mr. Bullbrook: Is the Prime Minister undertaking that he is going to do something?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and he could not attend. As a result this matter was not finalized.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Premier advise the House whether he is giving us an undertaking that he is prepared to give us the power to do the things we want to do on that committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member for Sarnia is a very talented individual. He can read this resolution as well as anybody else and the question—

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and the question, as it relates to this specific resolution, there is no question within the terms of this, some of these things can be done.

Mr. Bullbrook: The answer is no.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No it is not.

Mr. Bullbrook: Well, it is yes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No it is not.

An hon. member: It is not yes. It is not no.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Durham.

Mr. Carruthers: Mr. Speaker, in bringing this debate to a conclusion, may I just briefly say that, as has been stated, this motion was based on the report of the standing orders committee and is recorded in the journals of this House. Everyone has had an opportunity to study them. There was a consensus of opinion, as I understand, by the committee; it was approved by the committee last year, and today's debate to me has been a sort of a familiar filibuster and we have been talking politics more than we have common sense.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Carruthers: This motion, Mr. Speaker—the substance of it—is flexible, it is comprehensive, it solves most of the major problems that have faced the committees in this House. Every member knows the problems that we have had in forming committees, attendance. The work of the committees has been a—

An hon. member: Frustration.

Mr. Carruthers:—they have been overloaded with work. Now here is an opportunity for you, as members of the opposition, to do something about it. I urge everyone in this House to support the original motion and defeat the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Carruthers has moved:

That standing committees of this House for the present session be appointed as follows:

1. Procedural affairs committee, to which will be automatically referred the applications for private bills for report as to compliance with the standing orders governing such applications. This committee may, at the discretion of the House, also have referred to it any matter relating to standing orders and procedures in the House or the committees thereof, and any matter relating to the privileges of the House and the members thereof or of the election of such members.

2. Legal administration committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House, any bills, estimates or other matters relating to the Departments of Financial and Commercial Affairs, Justice, Labour, Municipal Affairs, Provincial Secretary and Citizenship. To this committee also will be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments. Committees 1 and 2 combined, under the chairmanship of the chairman of the legal administration committee, will function as the private bills committee.

3. Human resources committee, to which may be referred in the discretion of the House, any bills, estimates, or other matters relating to the Departments of Correctional Services, Education, Health, Social and Family Services and University Affairs and to which also be automatically referred those boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments.

4. Natural and physical resources committee to which may be referred in the discretion of the House, any bills, estimates or other matters relating to the Departments of Agriculture and Food, Energy and Resources Management, Highways, Lands and Forests, Mines and Northern Affairs, Tourism and Information and Transport, and to which will also be automatically referred any boards and commissions which report through the ministers of those departments.

5. Estimates committee.

6. Public accounts committee.

7. Regulations committee, as ordered by Statutes of Ontario, Chapter 110, 1968-1969.

Committees number 1 to 4 inclusive may have no conflict of membership with one another, nor may committees number 5, 6 and 7 have conflict of membership with one another.

Which said committees shall severally be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as may be referred to them by the House and to report from time to time their observations and opinions thereon, with power to send for persons, papers and records.

The amendment thereto Mr. Nixon has moved, seconded by Mr. Singer:

That there be an additional standing committee appointed called the economic affairs committee empowered and instructed to investigate and hold public hearings related to significant cost changes in the products or services affecting the cost of living in Ontario.

Then, as a subamendment, it was moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. J. Renwick that the resolution be further amended or supplemented by adding thereto the following clauses:

Which said committees shall severally be empowered on their own initiative, when not otherwise engaged on matters and things referred to them by the House, to examine and inquire into such further and other matters and things related to or in any way touching upon matters and things within their confidence as they in their discretion may determine. Which said committees shall severally be empowered to engage counsel and from time to time such other expert staff as may be necessary to enable the committee to discharge their responsibility.

That the proceedings of the committees be reported by Hansard.

That the Workmen's Compensation Board be called, firstly, before the legal administration committee, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission be called, firstly, before the human resources committee and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario be called, firstly, before the natural and physical resources committee.

The vote, of course, will be on the sub-amendment. I, therefore, put it to the House.

Those in favour of the subamendment moved by Mr. Lewis will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the subamendment, which was negatived on the following vote.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the subamendment lost.

The vote will now be on the amendment moved by Mr. Nixon.

Mr. Nixon: We will accept the same vote.

Mr. Speaker: Same vote? Agreed?

I declare the amendment lost.

Now, the main motion, moved by Mr. Carruthers.

The same vote?

Mr. Singer: Oh no!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: All right. It is getting late, I just wanted to be sure.

The motion, then, upon which we will vote will be that made by Mr. Carruthers, and as many as are in favour will please say "aye".

As many as are opposed, will please say "nay".

Mr. Speaker: I declare the "ayes" have it.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that it is getting a little late and there are other important matters that must be dealt with by this House, with the consent of the House I would be quite prepared to carry on with the next resolution or under the rules we can resume again at 8.

I am prepared to move ahead now with the consideration of the next resolution if we get common consent.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what resolution the Prime Minister has in mind, but I presume it is the interim supply resolution. We for our part are not prepared to give this just our perfunctory assent.

For that reason, I presume that for your convenience we would resume at 8.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, what I was saying was I assumed that perhaps there would not be enthusiastic response to this motion, but this does not preclude us from going ahead right now.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 31, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

MOTION FOR INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, it is rather important that we conclude a certain piece of business, this being March 31, which is the end of our fiscal year.

A motion has been made, Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge—

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): It was not made.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—each year since I have been in the House. I suppose if we go back far enough this motion was not made. That was in, perhaps, the happy days when—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Do you want to make the motion before you make the speech?

Mr. G. E. Smith (Simcoe East): Just be patient.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): When we had the dictatorship.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. When the House sat, perhaps, for two months and the business of the House was concluded by March 31. At any rate, the motion was—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister would make the motion first.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am speaking on a motion. All right, I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

I move, seconded by the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White), that the Provincial Auditor—

An hon. member: Oh, the Treasurer found one.

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments, pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1971, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

Mr. Singer: Could we have a copy of that, or is that another secret?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes. Just as soon as we get it tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. McKeough moves, seconded by Hon. Mr. White:

That the Provincial Auditor be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments, pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1971, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might just continue with the explanation if that would be in order.

In the days gone by, the House of course completed the budget and, I suppose, rose by April 1. At any rate the budget was completed by April 1. Then a few years ago things started to stretch out and, as I have said each year that I have been here, this motion has been made. So I suppose really it will be some time in October or November before the supply motion is put to the House, and in that interval the auditor requires authority to pay the salaries of the civil service and other payments which this House will undoubtedly approve, as I have said, probably in October or November.

I suppose the procedure is somewhat different this year in one instance, that up until this year this motion has been made after the budget has been presented to the House and the estimates tabled in the House. It is no great secret of course that this year in the normal pattern of legislative events, in which the House might have met by the first of February and the budget would have been presented in March, this motion would still have been made on March 31. I am quite sure of that. But something unusual happened in this particular year which was of no great—which was of great moment—

Mr. Singer: Not great. The minister was right the first time.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Which was, I say, most unusual to those of us who sit on this side of the House. We had a leadership convention which delayed— Now that would be no surprise over there, because they have had so many of them. But on this side of the House—

An hon. member: And due for another.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: And due for another.

Mr. Singer: Raising your voice does not make the case any better.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On this side of the House this was an unusual circumstance. However, Mr. Speaker, if I could assure the House, I would be glad to do so that this unusual circumstance undoubtedly will not happen again.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): He probably will not be there.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not want to break any great confidence—and I was not told this in the privacy of the cabinet chamber—but my leader (Mr. Davis) indicated to me that he fully expects to stay on for at least nine years as Prime Minister and leader of the government, and we will not have this problem.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We will not have this problem until at least 1980.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, what the Treasurer said is true only to the extent of his historical perspective. It is accepted in this particular chamber of course that once each year, as the province runs out of voted money; at the end of the fiscal year the Treasurer puts through what has become a pro forma motion authorizing the auditor to approve the regular expenditures.

But I think the time has come when we have to accept our important responsibilities under the democratic system and require that the government of the day account for the expenditures which they are undertaking and surely come before this House on a regular basis for something that is in most democratic houses referred to as interim supply and not just a pro forma motion.

In this case when this motion is approved—and I believe the Treasurer is right in expecting that it will be and surely not before too many hours have elapsed—he will be given a blank cheque for what amounts to, I would expect, $4 billion this year. I confidently expect further that we will have an opportunity to put our case before the people as well as the members of this House before very much of it is spent.

That is why we on this side feel that it is something more than just a perfunctory motion that is put after 6 o'clock after an afternoon of debate in which members on all sides are supposed to say "Fine. That is all right Darcy," and nod and go about their business. Surely in this case—and the Treasurer has pointed out that it is special; we have only been in session for a few hours—if the Treasurer was going to take his responsibility seriously he would have arranged with his leader or the House leader, as the new House leader comes more and more into a position of ordering the business of this chamber, that his motion, which is obviously an important one—as a matter of fact it is essential to the conduct of the affairs of the province—would have been put at the time the Legislature was convened at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

I am not for a moment saying the debate this afternoon was not an important one, but it could as easily have been held tomorrow as this afternoon. While the Treasurer is prepared to imply that we are obstructing what is the orderly business of the province, he was the one who was surely attempting to put through under the guise of the pressure of time a resolution of tremendous importance indeed.

I would like to say something further. It has been pointed out in this House previously by the hon member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) that whenever supply is voted—and essentially that is what we are doing tonight—then every member of this House has an opportunity, which goes back very far in the history of our democratic institutions, to bring to the attention of the first minister, and certainly the Treasurer, problems that the people of the province are experiencing with government policy and particularly financial policy. It is not my intention to lead the Liberal Party into any attempt to break the province for a few minutes following the midnight hour.

Undoubtedly the money will be voted tonight, but surely, Mr. Speaker, you will recognize that it is the responsibility of this government and certainly of the opposition, to see to it that the attention of the people of the province is brought to the fact that this motion will authorize the auditor to approve the expenditure of what will probably amount this year to $4 billion.

I was struck this afternoon by the use of a phrase by the new Premier that I have not heard in this House during the eight years in which our affairs were led by his predecessor. He said he intended to put through a motion tomorrow dealing with certain matters.

Mr. Singer: He said: "I will pass a motion."

Mr. Nixon: "I will pass a motion" is what he said. Now, this is a man who never, never, makes any slips of the tongue. All of his phrases and his pronouncements are very carefully considered indeed and, if anything, he errs on the side of saying nothing if there is any chance that he might be misconstrued. But he said, "I will put this motion through the House."

It is a tendency, I think, on the part of the government that has been—

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): I said: "To the House."

Mr. Singer: No, the Prime Minister did not say "to".

Mr. Nixon: — in office for more than a quarter of a century—

Mr. Singer: He said, "I will." No, "I will pass."

An hon. member: That is right.

Mr. Nixon: —to feel—

Mr. Singer: You certainly did.

Mr. Nixon: —that the membership of this House is redundant—

An hon. member: $100. You are on.

Mr. Nixon: —and that only the affairs of government have any importance.

I would say to you, sir, that we on this side of the House feel that a matter of the voting of these huge sums of money is of prime importance indeed. As soon as this motion passes it means that all of the discussions on the estimates are largely a charade. The decision to spend the money has, in fact, been taken and that the authority for the auditor to approve the expenditure is already on the books of this House and he has the authority to proceed.

It is interesting to note that in most jurisdictions the phraseology of the motion is somewhat different. In fact, a reference specifically to interim supply, I believe, should be a part of the resolution. I believe it is associated with the custom in this province to have a pre-audit of the expenditure and, as a matter of fact, it has been the policy of the government for many years that the signature of the auditor or someone designated by him is essential before expenditure is undertaken. I am happy to see that the government has accepted the recommendations of the productivity improvement commission that this be abolished and that we get back to the tried and true system where the auditor, in fact, audits the expenditures after they have been completed. This, surely is something that we look forward to.

It is my view that if the government, as in this case is the fact, is prepared to spend an estimated $4 billion on the strength of a motion simply authorizing the auditor to approve, that it should bow to the custom of Legislatures and Parliament everywhere and comes before the House on a regular basis—every 30 days I would suggest—to get the interim supply that is necessary to keep the functioning of the business of the province afloat.

There is no thought that we are going to cut off pay cheques to pensioners, or even members of the Legislature. We have, I suppose, cheques in our pockets now. If this supply motion does not carry they would bounce if we took them to the savings office tomorrow morning.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. Just to correct the Leader of the Opposition's great lack of knowledge. That cheque, of course, is dated March 31. There is no possibility in the world that that cheque would bounce.

Mr. Singer: I thank the minister for telling us that. We were worried.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate the advice of the Treasurer, but I should just tell him that one of his strongest supporters, sitting not too far from where he is sitting, said that he was glad to get out before the banks closed so that he could cash his before this debate came on.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that you recognize it was not the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr), if he wants his mind set at ease.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will recognize the rights of any member of this House to bring before you and the advisers to His Honour, matters of substantial concern related to finances or otherwise. I am delighted that the Premier has already instructed or put on the order paper—it amounts to an instruction—that the debate on Monday will deal with unemployment. I feel that we will have ample opportunity to discuss that important matter at that time and I look forward to the occasion.

The Speech from the Throne will evidently begin tomorrow, assuming that this debate is completed in time to proceed with that, and there will be other opportunities in a general sense to discuss the business of the province. For those reasons I feel that we should deal with specific matters in this regard.

I have put before you, sir, the fact that I consider the resolution an important one. I believe that the government should amend its procedures so that they ask specifically for interim supply and do so on a regular basis. Having said that, I want to raise for your consideration, sir, and particularly for that of one of the ministers sitting opposite, a matter of substantial concern which I want to bring to your attention tonight, and I refer specifically to the farm economy.

We were treated this afternoon to a statement by the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), who is present tonight, about an extension—

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker. Order, order!

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister want to raise a point of order?

Mr. Peacock: He is in order.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. minister wishes to raise a point of order, he has the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Singer: Come on, get up. If he does not like it, that is not enough. Let him make his point.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this is not a budget debate.

Mr. Singer: Oh, yes, it certainly is.

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): There is nothing else to say.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I say to you, sir, that I have two specific points beyond the ones that I have made. The first one deals with the farm economy and I will deal with it briefly, because although the Minister of Agriculture announced this afternoon that he is going to raise the limits on the grants that he is going to make available to farmers, the point is that he has done nothing and his programme does nothing to substantially improve the price of hogs, or the price of eggs.

He winces, but surely he knows that the primary producers in this province are in a position, Mr. Speaker, where they cannot meet their basic payments, that they are not being supported by this minister nor the programmes of this government in a way that gives them an opportunity to make any fair living or even keep up their payments on the substantial mortgages under which they labour. And if you want to talk about welfare inequities there are a good many farmers in this province with substantial investments behind their operation who are working many, many long hours day by day and are not nearly making the money that would be available to them if they threw up their hands and went on some form of welfare.

I do not want to belabour this point. I simply want to bring it to your attention, sir, and to that of the Minister of Agriculture who is present, that here is an area where the government has failed the people of this province, that they have allowed a large section of our industry, the agricultural industry, to go without leadership, without programmes, which will substantially give the farm community any opportunity to partake in the burgeoning opportunities in the Province of Ontario.

His grant programme this afternoon is welcome, but there is very little in it which is going to essentially improve the situation. I wanted to bring that to your attention, sir, as a specific area of grievance which is surely our right and our responsibility in this connection.

The second point that I want to raise is that in the short time that the present Treasurer has had his responsibility, he has substantially undermined the confidence of the people of the Province of Ontario, not only in his ability but in the ability of this administration to order its financial affairs. He had not accepted his position as what—third or fourth in precedence in the swearing-in ceremony. It is strange that he is sitting at the Premier's left hand, as a matter of fact. I do not know what the explanation for that is unless it is some small repayment for favours rendered in the past.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): No, the fateful walk—

An hon. member: It looked good on TV but does not look so good here.

Mr. Nixon: The laying on of hands.

Interjections by hon members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker: In that the Leader of the Opposition has asked me a question, I would just say that he is seated to my left because, unlike the members opposite, we relate certain things that agree with—

Mr. Nixon: Did I ask a question? If the Premier wants to rise on a point of order, fine, but I did not ask him a question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I thought the Leader of the Opposition asked me a question.

Mr. Nixon: No question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I see.

Mr. Speaker: Then the hon. Leader of the Opposition will speak not to the seating of the House, but to the resolution before the House.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, right, sir, I intend to do that. I was talking, Mr. Speaker, about the fact that the Treasurer, in the few hours that he has had the responsibility of his high office, began his position, began the exercise of his responsibility by reviving the old threats that were first sown by the present Minister of University Affairs, the former Minister of Revenue and before that the chairman of the White committee, when it was suggested that Ontario have a separate income tax.

An hon. member: Were there no Liberals on that committee?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this was the first rattling—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Was the Leader of the Opposition one of the Liberals on that committee?

An hon. member: There goes the minister, he is off again.

Mr. Nixon: —of the old MacNaughton sabre—

An hon. member: As Treasurer, the minister has to be sane and sober and quiet.

Mr. Nixon: —the first rattling of the old MacNaughton sabre to undertake the old political confrontations with the government of Canada. The people opposite simply cannot get over thinking of the government of Canada as “them Liberals” up in Ottawa. Now this is a matter of grave concern, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: How do you think that?

Mr. Nixon: —which I think renders the usefulness, the continued usefulness of the Treasurer, substantially in question, because if he is not able to deal as a representative of the government of Ontario with a representative of the government of Canada, then I predict a continuation of the failures that were a part of the efforts of his predecessor and the former Premier in dealing with the federal administration. The very suggestion that we have a separate income tax collected by the province of Ontario is certainly completely unacceptable.

Mr. Demers: We have not said that.

Mr. Nixon: Completely unacceptable. It would lead, Mr. Speaker, to a chaotic balkanization of our tax system. This was pointed out by the report of the Smith committee and it is nothing more than the old-fashioned kind of political threats that have undermined the dealings between the two most important governments of Canada for so long.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): What is the member doing right now?

Mr. Nixon: I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer is simply carrying with him into his new office the same autocratic attitudes associated with one of the first families of Chatham that he had with him at the time when he had the responsibility of supervising the affairs of The Department of Municipal Affairs. It was a fortunate thing that he was moved out of there and the present Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) was brought in to sort of smooth that over.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the leader will come back to the resolution on hand.

Mr. Nixon: Right, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about the voting of supply and the position in this matter taken by the new Treasurer of the Province of Ontario. I told you when I began my remarks that I was not going to speak at great length. I wanted to make two points, the first having to do with a specific area of our economy and the second having to do with the inadequacies of the present Treasurer himself. That he should begin his responsibilities by immediately threatening not only the government of Canada but the rest of the provinces of Canada with a separate approach to taxation is surely unacceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I think these matters are of great importance. I put them before you in prelude to an amendment to the motion that I feel is broad enough to allow any member of the House to take part in the debate, and I move, seconded by Mr. Singer, that this House regrets the failure of the government to order its financial affairs to adequately serve the interests of the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr. Simonett: My right-hand man.

Mr. Nixon: And, Mr. Speaker, while that motion is being brought to you, sir, I would like to say that in—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Have we got a copy? The member made such a big fuss about this.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, there is a copy for the member if he will wait until the young man brings it to him.

Mr. Singer: Hold your breath; there it is, read it.

Mr. Nixon: In the moments before the Treasurer—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Prime Minister has not got one.

Mr. Singer: Anybody else?

Mr. Nixon: —made his remarks he said that he expected himself and his colleague immediately to his right to have the responsibility of advising his honour for something like nine years. Now he must be some kind of a clairvoyant, because as I understood the new Premier, as I heard him on television on an auspicious occasion a few weeks ago, he said that he expected that there would be another 40 years of Conservative rule.

Then I say that while the scattered applause from the half-empty benches on the government side may support his contention of 27 years of Conservative rule, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this province feel that it is time for a change, and in this connection, just before you put the amendment, I would say to the Premier that if he does not think I am right, then let him advise His Honour to prorogue the House, issue the writs, and we will go to the people and see who is right.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, here comes the second gun who sits on the Leader of the Opposition's right; the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent).

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The fastest gun in Owen Sound.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are really bringing up the big ammunition tonight. Hearken to the leadoff for the Grits.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Singer: Sane, sober and considered. He has not learned any of the lessons for being a Treasurer.

Mr. Sopha: He is quite a skater though.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps we might put the amendment and then we can get on with the debate.

Mr. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer:

That this House regrets the failure of the government to order its financial affairs to adequately serve the interests of the taxpayers of Ontario.

The hon. member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, I thought before the hon. Leader of the Opposition sat down he would have invited the new Prime Minister to recommend to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor that he resign his post and call on the Leader of the Opposition to form a government. I have not heard such a build-up to a motion of loss of confidence in this government in the last 3½ years that I have sat here, Mr. Speaker.

We were full of expectation at 6 o'clock, as I am sure the Prime Minister and his Treasurer were, that this evening we were to be witnesses to, if not participants in, a major confrontation between the Leader of the Opposition and the new Prime Minister.

Instead we have had a discussion of the price of eggs, the price of pork.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: Not only, Mr. Speaker, are we participating in this major confrontation over the price of eggs, we are doing so to an empty gallery, a gallery which is not there to report the motion of want of confidence which I am sure the Leader of the Opposition has looked forward to with such expectation in tomorrow morning's newspapers.

I doubt very much it will be there. We on our part for the time being are content to meet the Prime Minister on his ground Monday afternoon when we engage with him on what he regards, as well as we do, as the prime economic crisis in the province—unemployment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Grey-Bruce, who rose immediately after the Leader of the Opposition subsided, brought colour back to the cheeks of the provincial Treasurer. When he sat in his place at 8 o'clock I thought he was aghast at the prospect that he had to face this evening. When he saw the member for Grey-Bruce rise, the colour immediately returned to his cheeks, his boyish good humour was restored, and I see him now full of courage at the rest of the evening that lies ahead of him.

Mr. Speaker: I trust the hon. member will come back to the resolution in front of him.

Mr. Peacock: Yes, Mr. Speaker. For a time I almost thought I saw the Prime Minister blanch, but he, too, has been revived by what he has seen before him this evening.

I will not prolong this, Mr. Speaker. I simply point out to the Treasurer that he can expect, no matter how long he sits, or who takes his place in elections to come, that this kind of motion will invariably be before the House on the eve of the new fiscal year, or some few days before it. It is accepted parliamentary practice, as the Leader of the Opposition reminded us—whether one calls it the votes on account at Westminster, or interim supply at Ottawa, or the no-name motion that we give to the way we treat it here—that a government must, before presentation of the estimates, at the time of the budget, before adoption of the estimates and the passage of The Appropriation Act, have a motion of the Legislature to pay for the public service and to carry on the programmes.

We do not quarrel with the government's desire to continue payments to teachers through legislative grants, Mr. Speaker, or payments for cutting down trees with dutch elm disease. We do not propose to block such programmes, Mr. Speaker. But I do say to the Treasurer he is wrong and it does indicate his freshness at the job that he should dismiss, as he has this evening in introducing the motion, the future need for such a similar motion.

Let me conclude by leaving this thought with you, Mr. Speaker, that it is typical of the official opposition, I am sure, in bringing this motion before you this evening—this amendment—that they have very much in mind recent newspaper articles referring to this group as the actual, if not official, opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: It is quite typical of them, in my brief experience in this House —

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): And responsible besides.

Mr. Peacock: — to do just what they have done this evening to blow their wad very early in the session and to do it in front of an empty gallery at that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, it was to be expected, I suppose, that we would be treated to that parade of trivia from a member who does not intend to seek re-election to this chamber, for one reason or another.

What is offensive is his lack of historical perspective. As long as Parliaments have existed, sir, and in the days when Parliament came into its own and became a very real force in the life of the British people, the right of the official opposition to grieve, to state their complaints before money was voted to the Crown was a very hard-fought-for and a very hard-won one.

I am not sure, I say early in my remarks, that the motion before the House is legal. I was under the impression—one wants to talk as a constitutional lawyer with a little knowledge of the subject—I was under the impression that the only way a Legislature could vote money to the government was upon a request to do so from Her Majesty. There was nothing in either the preliminary remarks of the Treasurer, nor in the body of the motion itself, which indicated that this request for the voting of supply has come from the Lieutenant Governor or over his hand. I have become accustomed to the pattern in this House for all members to stand in their place when the Prime Minister himself delivered the request over the Lieutenant Governor's own hand or that of the administrator, in the request for supply.

And all the more important is the constitutional form when we face the stark reality, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, that some $4 billion is being asked for. That statement was not only not disputed by the Treasurer, but was buttressed when he said that finally we would get around to voting the final supply bill some time next October.

Mr. Singer: Or November.

Mr. Sopha: Happily, this Legislature will be, by that time, long gone.

Now, it was not necessary at all for the Leader of the Opposition to amend the motion. "May" discloses that we have a right—any member of the House has a right—to state any grievance, any complaint, to stress any anxiety or to make any representation to you, Mr. Speaker, before calling or being called upon, or giving acquiescence to the voting of a single penny to the government to carry on its operation.

Then, I hastily say to my friend from Windsor, that it was a major confrontation between the Leader of the Opposition and the new leader of the government. In his final words the Leader of the Opposition issued to him a clear and unmistakable call to go to the people—

Mr. Singer: Right, right.

Mr. Sopha: —to decide—

Mr. Singer: Do it now—today.

Mr. Sopha: —to decide who it is that should have the burdens of office in this province. It is not to exaggerate, it is not to distort language, to torture reality, to say to the new leader of the government or to ask him rhetorically—and I emphasize rhetorically, because I do not want him on his feet at this point—to say to him, "Where is your mandate? Where is the mandate you have to lead the government?"

Mr. Singer: No, no. Where is it?

Mr. Sopha: He was not elected as the leader of this—

Mr. Singer: Twenty-one votes over the absent Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence).

Mr. Sopha: —of this province. He was elected to that office—

Mr. Simonett: How many votes did the hon. member have?

Mr. Singer: I am prepared. Let us call the election and I will ask again for a mandate. Let the Premier do it. I am prepared; let us have the Premier do it.

Mr. Sopha: Not only does it sharpen the acuity of my enthusiasm, but it buttresses the feeling of assurance and validity of what I say to have the support of my friend from Downsview.

I was asking the Prime Minister rhetorically, where is his mandate to lead this province? He was selected by a political party. Nor is it to exaggerate the accuracy or the reality of what occurred to say that he was selected by a group of 60 so-called delegates-at-large who represented in their persons, and in their positions, the financial, industrial and commercial establishment of this province—John Bassett, John David Eaton, Eddie Goodman, others of that ilk and kind. It was absolutely clear.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think the member for Sudbury would want to be quite correct. My leader was not chosen by a political party; he was chosen by the political party of this province.

Mr. Nixon: He was chosen by the new Treasurer—a personal laying-on of hands.

Mr. Singer: The minister can do better than that. Maybe not much.

Mr. Nixon: Charlie could not do it, but Darcy did.

Mr. Sopha: Generations of political students, of course, will assess the efficacy of the fateful walk of false Sextus when he moved across Maple Leaf Gardens in the wake of the tidal wave created by his father-in-law, a very shrewd politician who knows the importance of political reality and where to put one's support.

Mr. Singer: And how to work a voting machine.

Mr. Sopha: It was also perfectly obvious, of course—and now, Mr. Speaker, I am speaking about the mandate of this government to ask for this money—it was obvious that the grass roots of the Conservative Party did not support this man as the leader of that party on that occasion. Their support was for the present Minister of Justice.

Mr. Singer: Two seats removed.

Mr. Sopha: Another indicative figure of course, a very revealing figure, is that according to my count, 44 of the members opposite supported the member for Peel North.

Mr. Speaker: Might I suggest that the hon. member would come back to the resolution?

Mr. Sopha: Let me just ask this question. If it took the 44 of you to elect him, who do you speak for? Whoever you speak for are not listening to you. So it is perfectly appropriate at this point in the life of Ontario for the Leader of the Opposition to say, in reference to this motion, let us go to the people at the earliest possible time and settle this, and —

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Mr. Sopha: — and determine who shall have the responsibility for dealing with those many anxious and frustrating problems that confront the people.

Where are the hospital beds?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: What date did the hon. member —

Mr. Sopha: Where are the hospital beds? Just at the point —

Mr. Singer: Thirty-seven days from now, May 7.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Just as the Minister of Health opened his mouth, I was saying, where are the hospital beds to treat the people who are ill in this province? Tragedy attends many a family when they have sick persons in their houses and on their hands and cannot find a hospital bed in order to make available to them, in the proper environment, the skills of medical science.

Unemployment, that we are going to deal with next Monday.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Forced upon us.

Mr. Sopha: The anxiety of people the length and breadth of this province —

Mr. Nixon: We will listen to that speech again.

Mr. Sopha: — about the environment; the danger that we face, that human life on this planet may be obliterated entirely within the lifetime of those now alive. The question of education costs. The general problem of taxation. The burden and the struggle with inflation. The price of rents. The price of food. In every aspect of our life in this province, the likelihood that everyone, the housewife, the worker, people on modest incomes, the pensioner, faces impending tragedy, anxiety and frustration.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): All against a deliberate policy of unemployment in the hands of Mr. Trudeau.

Mr. Sopha: But where in that document of yesterday were the aggressive and forward-looking policies?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Where were the policies that pointed the way to a betterment of the —

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I will get more votes than you will down there, I will tell you that much.

An hon. member: That is what you said the last time.

Mr. Peacock: What major theme is he going to develop tonight?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce will have his turn shortly.

Mr. Singer: At least he is going to run again. He is not quitting.

An hon. member: Some people have more sense.

Mr. Sopha: I say that it is perfectly proper that at the earliest —

Mr. Singer: You should all quit now.

Mr. Sopha: — opportunity in this session, the Leader of the Opposition should call attention to the problems the people of Ontario face in speaking to this request of the government. That he has done. He really should not be victimized by the trivial argument of the last speaker with catchy phrases like "blowing our wad early," whatever that means if it does not impinge almost on the borderline of vulgarity.

But at the earliest time in the session, of course, we say to the Prime Minister either to give the people of this province the leadership to which they are entitled or go to the people to decide who should give it. We are comforted, and glad to have the opportunity to say at this very early time that we have every reason to be assured that there is a tremendous surge of support for this party.

Mr. Sargent: You know it.

Mr. Sopha: Thirteen hundred in Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not on the resolution at all and I would ask that he come back or resume his seat.

An hon. member: They cannot even get a candidate in Grenville-Dundas.

Mr. Sopha: I will say that more quietly —

An hon. member: We are going to vote for his brother in Belleville, though.

Mr. Sopha: — 1,300 in Ottawa. Four people seeking the nomination. Fifteen hundred in Hamilton a short time ago.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Fifty cents a membership.

Mr. Speaker: This is a debate on the supply resolution and I will not allow the members to stray as far as this hon. member here strayed and I would ask that he come back to the resolution and we debate it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the burthen of our remarks of course, very germane to the resolution, is that we are saying to the government, "let us go to the people." Instead of asking for this interim supply let us get out in the hustings and settle with the people of Ontario. Let them settle the issue of how this money should be spent.

An hon. member: It is perfectly legitimate that way.

Mr. Sopha: That is the issue: to determine according to their democratic ways of choice which group of people shall have the confidence of the Lieutenant Governor, and the gist of our remarks on this is to issue that challenge to the Prime Minister, to tell him that this party is ready.

An hon. member: It is eager to tell him.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, this party is ready. Did you hear those unctuous phrases uttered that we are the real opposition—from the party that last October went into full and final decline; that irretrievably lost the confidence of the people of this province and Canada generally? They cannot recover and will not recover.

At this point, well buttressed by precedent in May, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by saying that we are entitled, that we have the obligation, again at the earliest time, to stand here and to say to the government, "You are unworthy to ask for this money because you have not got the policies that indicate that positive approach to the solution of the problems confronted by the people of this province." You deserve it. The only decent thing to do by the new leader who has not got a mandate is to go down the hall to the Lieutenant Governor and to advise him to dissolve the House and let us have an election. We are ready for it.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, it is a worrisome thing that we talked about voting funds on the start of the $4 billion budget. After having watched today the most disorganized front bench I have ever seen in my life—nothing is going according to plan —

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Well, I do not know. We are in the opposition and we sit here and look at what is going on.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, we were talking about the financial brains of this Treasury Board. I recall that about 18 months ago when we were talking about the perils of the taxpayers under the guise of the provincial Treasurer at that time, he assured us that everything was hunky-dory in this province, everything was just the greatest, that we did not know what we were talking about. And one morning we woke up and he said we are facing a financial nightmare, it was coming immediately. Everything that he said was entirely wrong a month before. We knew what was coming and this is how in one month they can be so completely wrong.

I say it is a worrisome thing to see the scandals we have across there today to run the affairs of seven or eight million people when they do not know where we are going insofar as tomorrow in Ontario is concerned. The most glaring thing in voting supply for this government is the fact that we are launched upon a hunt for power in Hydro.

Stay right there and listen to me.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): I read the member's press release.

Mr. Sargent: We are launched on a $1 billion nuclear programme—please listen; it is important that you should know something about it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We will send a wire to "Pierre."

Mr. Sargent: He is in trouble too but not as much as you are, I will tell you.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: We call the shots when we see them wrong, and if I am wrong I will say so. I think this government is in terribly bad shape. I am only a small businessman but if I ever ran a business the way you fellows run it, I would be broke tomorrow, I tell you.

An hon. member: He does not run his own business this way either, I tell you.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Have you seen his Bobby Orr wrist watch?

Mr. Sargent: I will get you one; I will get you two or three.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Get me two or three.

Mr. Sargent: It is very important to be seriously launched. We are committed to a $1-billion programme on nuclear power. That is our commitment through this fine minister's department. He has got too much to do. We are partially committed to a process that has never worked in 10 countries in Europe; it has never worked in Nova Scotia and—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is working right here now.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment. We are trying it in my area and you spent $1 million last fall when you made a mistake, but you covered that one up pretty well. Let me tell the Premier the glaring thing he should know about this. In this total commitment to the nuclear hunt for power we have spent maybe $400 million or $500 million of the money of the taxpayers of Ontario through Hydro in this particular field and the authorities tell us—this is not a laughing matter; I am talking money—the combined production of all the nuclear programmes in Canada in 1971 and 1972 will amount to one-half of 1 per cent of the total load this year.

Having spent $400 million or $500 million, we have arrived at the point where we are 9½ per cent off the target. Do you wonder why I am concerned when I pay my hydro bill, when I pay my taxes in Ontario? This is not my word; it is the word of the authorities that the combined nuclear programme in America is only 1 per cent of the total load. And here we are, a province almost on the verge of financial nightmare, as he says over here; we are committed to spending $1 billion on a programme we do not know will even work.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is working now.

Mr. Sargent: It is not working now. The minister does not know what he is talking about; I know what I am talking about. I think it is disgraceful that Treasury Board can laugh and talk about an economic disaster like this particular thing. One per cent of the total load is nuclear power and we spent $400 million or $500 million.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We have not spent $400 million or $500 million.

Mr. Sargent: I would welcome to know how much we have spent.

Mr. Nixon: How much has the minister's department got committed to Pickering?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We have not spent $400 million or $500 million.

Mr. Nixon: How much has the minister got committed to Pickering?

Mr. Sargent: I do not know. I cannot find out. How much is it? Does the minister know?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I have not got it in my head.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the hon. minister to refrain from interrupting the speaker and cross-talking. If he wishes to engage in the debate, he may do so at the appropriate time, and the member will please address the government through the Chair.

Mr. Sargent: This is why I wish we had television. Look at this, laughing like a bunch of jackals. We have wasted a half a billion dollars for 1 per cent of the total load in Hydro and the government is laughing about it. If the taxpayers of Ontario could see this, it would be a great—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We are not laughing about that.

Mr. Sargent: I do not know about that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: The government has got a heavy water plant that does not work. That is all it has got. No one will ever know, Mr. Speaker, no one will ever know.

When the hon. Premier, then the Minister of Education, brought in his education consolidation programme to this House, the day he brought it in, he admitted he was $50 million wrong. He asked us to vote him $50 million that day. Now I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that no one in this province, no one in this House, will ever know what school consolidation cost us, when areas to the south of us—every area that has tried school consolidation—has reverted back to the old programme.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nonsense. Talk about something you know something about.

Mr. Sargent: Everything is nonsense to the Premier. But he will never know how much it has cost the taxpayers of Ontario through school consolidation. Now let him go to the people of Ontario and he will see what will happen to him on that one. That is a beauty.

He has a man sitting on his left there—the man who goes about the province selling regional government. Now regional government is going to be as bad for the government as education, so every time the Treasurer is up our way he and the Minister of Highways and Transport keep quiet. They do not bother me about regional government up our way because they know we won't stand for it. But you will never know and no one will ever know in this province how much he has cost us in the regional government programme.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) is intelligent—

Mr. Sargent: I know, but he is a nice guy. He is not talking practical politics. It will never work. Ask the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Winkler). He and I were at a meeting to meet the members of the federation, and I told them that the government would have to keep regional government out of our affairs. We have got our own affairs up there. Great applause. Did the Minister of Revenue say anything? No, he kept very quiet. He did not say a word.

Mr. Nixon: He is in trouble. There is no doubt about it.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): May I rise on a question of privilege, there, Mr. Speaker? The fact of the matter is I told the member the first people I saw in Toronto were the very committee under the warden's chairmanship asking about the possibilities of regional government, and I said that.

Mr. Nixon: What is the minister going to do about the hospitals up there?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I have solved that too.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The Leader of the Opposition burst on that one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I have got to learn though. I have got to learn. I am not as smart as the Treasurer is.

An hon. member: The member will not learn from the Treasurer.

Mr. Sargent: No one will ever know what this minister has cost the Province of Ontario. So the two of them have cost us hundreds of millions of dollars through their egg-head bright ideas. If they had ever been in politics at grass-roots level they would not do crazy things like that.

An hon. member: The price of eggs is pretty low, too.

Mr. Nixon: And the Premier has got to get worried about it.

Mr. Sargent: I do not want to flog this thing, but we have the Ontario Hospital Services Commission, which is one of our biggest spending bodies and which is responsible to no one. The hon. Minister of Revenue says his enemies should not take advantage of his talking about closing the hospitals. Now if we cannot talk about it who can? And the government is still going to close the Chesley Hospital. We cannot get enough hospital beds but they are going to close it. But they are responsible to no one. The Minister of Health cannot stop them.

No one will ever know, Mr. Speaker, the land acquisition programme purchased by Bramalea Corporation. There have been no public hearings on this and multi-millions of dollars are involved here—all under the table. We do not know a thing about it. My leader today asked for public hearings with the power to call counsel and to investigate. No one will ever know the extent of the power of one Edwin Goodman. He was written up in the press a few weeks ago as a good-looking silver-haired guy who had untold power in this Province. The story went on to tell that by the flick of his wrist he could pick up the phone and do anything he wanted in Ontario by calling Queen's Park here.

Mr. Nixon: It is Eagleson that really bothers them over there.

Mr. Sargent: I think this is entirely wrong, when in the consortium of companies that he is alleged to be legal counsel for, and I guess the press is right—

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but perhaps—

Mr. Sargent: Yes, but this is—I am talking about spending money on housing. This man is a legal counsel for Cadillac Developments, one of the largest recipients of moneys from the Ontario Government in housing. They are building condominiums in the hundreds of millions of dollars. Mr. Goodman is their legal counsel. Now I do not suppose that he would help get these loans through like that. But there are untold millions of dollars that the people know nothing about, and I, as a taxpayer, am getting fed up with it. If they had come to us—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Why does the member not search the title?

Mr. Sargent: Come on. The minister is over 21. The government comes to us at five minutes to 6 and says, "Give us enough money to—"

An hon. member: Five after 6!

Mr. Sargent: Five after 6. "—to run the show." A million-dollar bridge that does not work.

I do not know about that one. It is a new one.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What is the member talking about?

Mr. Sargent: I did not get that one either.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That answers that question.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, as everyone knows, a member goes back to his riding on the weekend and he is haunted with people calling him for work and for welfare. I know the calls the Minister of Revenue has in his place. I know the calls I have in my place. And thanks to the Minister of Highways and Transport I have got 30 men to work. He gave me 30 jobs for cutting trees down over the weekend, and I did appreciate it because I did not think I could get it. I was quite surprised.

Mr. Simonett: How many did Trudeau get the hon. member?

Mr. Sargent: I even got a blurb in the paper about that—in our local paper. But I was not after that. These fellows do not want welfare but they want to work. They want to work. And it is a sad thing when—

An hon. member: They want to get off their butts.

Mr. Sargent: They want to get off their butts.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Why does the member not phone Trudeau?

Mr. Sargent: The Premier has been so busy in the last six months aspiring to the job he has that he forgot there are people in Ontario who have not got jobs. And now he is starting at long last to look around and say, "Well, here is a hell of a good bait for an election."

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Order, order, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Sargent: This is my opinion. I am speaking my opinion, Mr. Speaker. The minister can have his chance in a few minutes. I want to tell you, sir, that during the war we could corral all the things we have in our society to put men to work to kill, but in times of peace we cannot give a man the dignity of having a job or a home.

I tell you something that we have in this province. In every city, we have millions of square feet of vacant plants crying to be used. We have money in our Ontario Housing Corporation. We are asking people to spend $12,000, $15,000, $20,000, $21,000 for a home. In the United States there is a modular housing programme on for housing costing less than $10,000 that meets all standards down there. All we need here is a standard building code across this nation and we could corral all the money we needed to put every man in this province to work immediately, tomorrow morning, by taking these vacant plants and giving us modular housing, because if the housing business is good, everything is good. All the trades come into play and everything is great. That is the answer to unemployment situations. That is all you have got to do.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Fuddle-duddle!

Mr. Sargent: I have got more than that to tell him too. It is time we should move, because the dignity of a man having a job and his home is the most important thing in the whole world.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I do not really understand this debate to any great extent. I hope the Premier will clarify a number of things for me. I cannot understand, for example, why the House could not have come back a week earlier and we could have had a debate in the committee, say yesterday or the day before, and then the Premier or the Treasurer could have asked for interim supply about 3 o'clock this afternoon. We could have had a little discussion and they would have got their money. Why could we not have come back a couple of days earlier and done this thing? It is a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What difference would two days make?

Mr. T. Reid: I cannot understand why you had to wait until the last minute, five after 6, to sort of try to shovel this through. That is a rhetorical question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, once again—

Mr. T. Reid: I am sure the Prime Minister will have a chance to reply—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, do I understand correctly that if this debate happened by the merest chance to go beyond midnight that the Treasurer would legally not be allowed to write any more cheques? Is this how serious this issue is?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is right.

Mr. Singer: That is exactly what is at issue.

Mr. T. Reid: This seems to me like very incompetent planning. I sort of suspect that the Treasurer simply did not know he needed interim supply to write cheques after midnight.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid: I have only been here 3½ years, Mr. Speaker, but do I understand that there is a tradition in this House over the last quarter of a century that the Treasurer or the Premier of the province simply comes before us and asks us for a blank cheque of $2 billion or so?

This is just a fantastic procedure. I would have thought that some committee of this Legislature would have realized that this really is not quite the right thing to do. I could understand it if the government party had presented a budget to show where the money might be spent or had come forward and accounted for its expenditures in the past.

I am not a man of little faith. I have had the Premier opposite me, or I have been opposite him, for 3½ years. I think he is a man of integrity—as he goes out the door—so I really do not feel that I want to attack him personally in any sense. It is just that I feel that the people of this province feel that he has no valid mandate to come before the members of this House to ask for billions of dollars to spend in the way of a blank cheque.

It seems to me, if I recall correctly, some time in the last year he asked us for a blank cheque to bail out the school boards and he did not tell us at that time whether the amount of money he needed for that supplementary estimate was $10 million or $20 million or $60 million. I think, as it turned out, it came to $48 million. So I have a feeling that the people of the province question the ability of this government to figure out how much money it needs for specific programmes.

Now I would like to make a couple of points, Mr. Speaker, about why we are concerned about the ability of this government to spend so much money. I would like to refer, sir, to the auditor's report for 1969-1970 which was just made public today, I gather. In the Provincial Auditor's report there are a number of very disturbing statements which lead me to conclude that even under the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) this party had been in power too long and was failing to be the trustee of the taxpayers' funds that it ought to be.

Just let me give three examples from the auditor's report, which I understand was just released today, probably after 6:05.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, it was tabled at 3 o'clock if the member had been here.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, I have just received a copy. Thank you very much. It would have been nice, Mr. Speaker, if the members of the Legislature had been handed a copy in this place.

Mr. Sopha: The last day; we received four of them.

Mr. T. Reid: It would have been very nice to have had a copy of this report rather than having to go up to a member of the press and ask him if I might have the right, as a legislator in this place, to take a look at the Provincial Auditor's report.

Mr. Peacock: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. T. Reid: No, I will not.

Mr. Peacock: When was the member asked to prepare this speech?

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to put on the record of the House, Mr. Speaker, some statements from the auditor's report which have to do with the ability of the government party to be a trustee of the public's funds. And I feel very strongly that a government that is condemned in the three respects I am about to quote should not be entrusted with a blank cheque asked for at the very latest possible hour.

This is on page 18, and I quote directly:

The report on the audit of revenue of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs dated July 3, 1970, and covering the period October 1, 1968, to March 31, 1970, indicates that it is still not possible to express an opinion that all revenues due and eligible have been collected or that all remittances received have been properly distributed in the accounts.

Mr. Singer: The minister has a big job ahead of him.

Mr. T. Reid: And yet this Treasurer has the gall to come before us, asking us for a blank cheque, when the Provincial Auditor says of that particular department that he cannot even audit its books properly and the auditor continues about The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Is it not ironic, Mr. Speaker, that The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, under the present Minister of Health, could not even keep its books properly and the auditor says this about the ability of this particular political party to keep its accounts:

The most disappointing discovery of this audit was that little development was discerned in the records and internal controls from the time of the previous examination.

So the Provincial Auditor has been saying this about this government party in the past, Mr. Speaker. He has been saying it, above all, about The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs which is entrusted with the financial affairs of the government to a great extent and they have not even got the confidence to keep their books in an orderly manner. They have not even got the competence to know where their revenues are coming from and they have not got records of their expenditures that satisfy a rather meek and mild Provincial Auditor. Yet this party comes before us again and asks us to give it a blank cheque. I find that ridiculous.

In another section of the report, again on page 18, the Provincial Auditor refers to the Ontario Housing Corporation—and remember this government is asking us for a blank cheque now to write cheques over to the Ontario Housing Corporation, albeit only 10 per cent of its funds.

This is what the Provincial Auditor said about this political party over there being able to manage the billions of dollars that it receives from the taxpayers of this province. He says about the Ontario Housing Corporation:

The audit and report thereon of the corporation for the year ended December 31, 1969, were not completed until November 4, 1970.

That to me is another example of the inability of this government to manage the financial affairs of this province.

A third example in the Provincial Auditor's report appears on page 20. Granted, it is perhaps slightly picayune but the point is that if this following situation is occurring in one part of this government, there are grounds for believing it is occurring elsewhere in the government. I quote directly; this is the Provincial Auditor speaking in his report released today:

A situation which I feel requires review and consideration is that of an executive officer in The Department of Trade and Development who is being reimbursed for living expenses while in Toronto and for travels to and from home.

The Provincial Auditor continues:

It would appear from an examination of expense account claims that attendance in Toronto is required on a full-time basis and therefore I respectfully recommend that consideration be given to establishing Toronto as this person's headquarters.

That is one of the worst types of tax evasion I have ever seen printed in any auditor's report, federal or provincial.

If that type of thing is happening in this government, if they cannot control the expense-account living, to quote the Carter report, what right has this government to come before us and ask us for a blank cheque so that this type of thing may go on? They have been in power much too long.

Another example, of course, is that the Owen Sound branch of the Province of Ontario Savings Office had a net loss of $81,264 to a—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: It is in the auditor's report.

An hon. member: It is no longer confidential.

Mr. T. Reid: This is what the auditor says.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: It is not very nice. A fellow committed suicide. It is embarrassing to the family.

Mr. T. Reid: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: It is no longer a secret. It is in the auditor's report.

Mr. T. Reid: It is in the auditor's report for this year.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. The then Minister of Revenue (Mr. White) took me into his confidence last year on this matter. It has been embarrassing to me and to a very fine family, and I wish that this were not in Hansard but this man involved committed suicide and his family does not know about it yet. That is the reason for it.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I continue with some other examples. My point is very simple. Here is the Provincial Auditor's report released today and it is ironic that with those examples about the incompetence of that party across there to spend money, to keep track of costs, on the same day they come before us and ask for a blank cheque.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: I would like to touch upon a few other examples, Mr. Speaker, on almost the arrogance of this government party coming before us, asking for a blank cheque.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: And to be able to quote a business organization, I would like to refer to what the Ontario Chamber of Commerce thinks about the ability of this government to spend 42 per cent of its budget; that is, the budget on education.

Back in May, 1970, the Ontario Chamber of Commerce made the following statements when they wanted an investigation into education costs. The Chamber of Commerce contended, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

Each new school building represents the design without the benefit of uniformity, consistency, unit construction and the advantage of two-storey design.

The second point the Ontario Chamber of Commerce made about the waste and efficiency of the taxpayers' money in the whole field of education is this:

There is insufficient effort to bring school plant into full productive service in community life.

The third level of condemnation is this:

There is unnecessary rivalry by county boards in setting teachers' salaries and benefits without regard to cost to the taxpayers.

The point again, Mr. Speaker, is simply this: The present Premier of this province, when he was Minister of Education and University Affairs, was responsible for spending 42 per cent of this budget and he fouled that up. Now he wants to have the whole budget available to do the same thing.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. Reid: I would say that if he wants to have the confidence of this House, if he wants the confidence of the people of this province, he must get it on his own. In 1967, in my opinion, the government party ran on the coattails of a guy called Robarts and they got in. For the present Premier to try to ride on those coattails now when he has no mandate—he wants us to write him a blank cheque now just like he wanted us to write him a blank cheque in education—I say that is the height of irresponsibility.

If he wants the confidence of the people of this province, then he should have enough guts to say, all right, I was elected by a political party as leader of that party. I was not elected by the people of this province. We will take him seriously if he says, "Right, I challenge the opposition parties to an election. I want a mandate on my own and I am going to go to the people." And the sooner he does that the better.

We do not think that he has a right to ask us for a blank cheque to use the taxpayers' money in the same way he used it when he was Minister of Education and University Affairs. There was too much wastage there. He has not cut it. His predecessor would not even let us examine these costs in the standing committee. He would not even let us examine them in there.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by making this very simple point: that the people of this province—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Has the member talked to them all?

Mr. T. Reid:—find that man unacceptable until he goes to them to ask for a mandate. If he gets 42 per cent of the vote and 69 seats, then he has a right to ask for this type of blank cheque on the last day of the fiscal year.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Remember Robarts in 1961!

Mr. T. Reid: We want him to go to the polls now.

Mr. Randall: Remember Robarts in 1961!

Mr. T. Reid: If he wants to spend money, let him call an election.

Mr. Randall: Remember Robarts in 1961!

Mr. Sopha: Who did the member support?

Mr. Randall: Robarts!

Mr. Sopha: He picked the wrong man.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I am tempted at the outset to ask—and I will—who is it in this House who is going to oppose the passage of this resolution? I wonder seriously, if the Liberals had the opportunity at this time, with a much increased number of members, to defeat the government on this particular bill and thereby not pass this particular resolution—

Mr. D. M. DeMonte (Dovercourt): The member would oppose it for sure.

Mr. Deans:—whether they would or not.

Mr. Sopha: You have been saving that government in office.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Deans I do not really believe that if they stopped to think about the implications of not passing this particular bill, they would in fact be voting against it. But, all that aside, much of what they have said is true. Of course the government is incompetent.

Mr. Sopha: There is the source of their longevity in political life.

Mr. Deans: Of course the government is incompetent and we recognize that. That did not require the introduction of this resolution to let us know that. We understand that they are floundering. We have understood that for 2½ years or more.

Mr. Singer: But let us not talk about it.

Mr. Deans: We recognize that every year.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Mr. Deans: And the introduction of this resolution—

Mr. Singer: The NDP is unprepared again.

Mr. Deans:—has not altered that at all. Sure, it is another evidence of their inability to govern, but it certainly does not mean that we are going to deny—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Absentee leaders; the Lewis dynasty—

Mr. Deans: It does not mean that we are going to deny the people of the province the benefit of the many programmes that are presently underway and from which they derive their livelihood. I think that is a fair analysis of it. There is not going to be the defeat of this resolution. The only reason the official opposition is playing to the grandstand is simply to provide some kind of confrontation that does not exist.

Mr. Sopha: Does the member want an election?

Mr. Deans: I am surprised at them. I am surprised that they chose this particular vehicle to put forward the ideas that they have got.

This coming Monday we are going to debate unemployment, and during that debate we can deal with all of the matters pertaining to unemployment and we will.

Mr. Sargent: Who can?

Mr. Deans: We can, and the hon. member can if he is here.

Mr. Sopha: We do not need debating, we need policy.

Mr. Deans: There is ample opportunity within the next two weeks, after enumerating the many inadequacies of this government—

Mr. Sargent: Make your point!

Mr. Deans: I am going to; just hang on. There will be ample opportunity in the next two weeks, after enumerating the inadequacies of this government, to vote a lack of confidence, because we have a lack of confidence. But what I want to ask, for the benefit of the member for Sudbury, is what gives the minister the right to introduce this resolution, taking into consideration the provisions of The British North America Act?

Mr. Sopha: Shaken by their waffling schism, lacking constructive thought!

An hon. member: This is better than the trade unions.

Mr. Deans: I want to ask the minister if he will bear with me and listen for a moment. I want to read something to him. I want to get his opinion on this, because there is the possibility that tonight we are being asked to vote on an illegal resolution. Let me read it.

Mr. Sopha: See, they had a justification in the thirties.

Mr. Trotter: The member for Sudbury has already told the member that.

Mr. Deans: It says in section 54 of The British North America Act,

That it shall not be lawful for the House of Commons to adopt or pass any vote, resolution, address or bill for the appropriation of any part of the public revenue or of any tax or impost to any purpose that has not been first recommended to that House by message of the Governor General in the session in which such vote, resolution, address or bill is proposed.

Mr. Sopha: That is what I said.

Mr. Deans: All of the things that have been said up to date by the members of the official opposition have been dealing with issues, and the issues are important, but the truth of the matter is that we must first decide whether it is legal to pass this resolution. Now the member may say to me that this applies to the House of Commons, but in actual fact it applies also to the Legislature because in section 90 it says,

That the following provisions of this Act, to wit the BNA Act, respecting the Parliament of Canada, namely the provisions relating to the appropriation and tax bills, the recommendation of money votes, the assent to bills and the disallowance of Acts and the signification of pleasure in the bills reserved shall extend and apply to the Legislatures of the several provinces.

Mr. Sopha: And the Treasurer shall be liable personally for everything he says.

Mr. Deans: Now I want to ask the Treasurer, because it is important, whether it is proper to pass this particular resolution in light of The British North America Act? Certainly you are inadequate, certainly your legislative programme does not meet the needs, but if it is not legal to pass this resolution then surely between now and 2½ hours from now you are going to have to do it in the proper fashion, in order that we can pass the necessary permission, in order that the people of the Province of Ontario can carry on, and so that the government can carry on if need be.

If the minister is listening, perhaps he would care to comment on it. Because that is really the only issue; that is really the only issue. The other issues, important though they may be, are issues of opinion. My opinion that the government is incompetent and that it ought not to have any more money; my opinion that the government has misspent the moneys that it has had; my opinion that it has not had proper priorities, our opinion of any number of things, may well be important.

But the truth is that to vote for the appropriation of these funds without that there be a message from the Lieutenant Governor, is in my view possibly out of order. I want the minister to deal with that particular issue before we go any further, because it is on that particular issue that the whole debate hangs. The member for Sudbury says he alluded to it—and perhaps he did, not very well. But we cannot vote to appropriate funds if it is illegal to do so in the manner that has been proposed. I ask for a ruling on that before we go any further.

Mr. Speaker: The member may very well ask for a ruling but he might complete his discussion of the matter.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I could say at that point that depending on the ruling the completion would be irrelevant. If the ruling were to be—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): If the member has anything to say, get it over with.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): He has not said anything yet.

Mr. Deans: If the ruling were to be that this is perfectly proper and that this is the proper procedure in keeping with The British North America Act, then of course the debate then becomes one of whether or not the government ought to be able to spend money. But if the ruling is that this is not in keeping with The British North America Act then I surely want to give them time to make the necessary changes.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps the hon. member would continue so that he may give Mr. Speaker the time to make the necessary investigations.

Mr. Deans: Fine, thank you. May I, sir, refer you to the proper sections in order that you can make the ruling? I referred to section 54 of The British North America Act, 1867, under "Money Votes and Royal Assent" as the heading.

Mr. Singer: Could the member read it please?

Mr. Deans: I already read it.

Mr. Singer: Could he read it again to refresh my memory?

Mr. Deans: I am sure the member knows what it says. I also referred to section 90—

Mr. Lawlor: What juvenile sarcasm.

Mr. Deans: I also referred to section 90, which brings it from the federal to the provincial jurisdiction. It is of vital importance to the completion of this particular request by the government that we determine the propriety of it, and it seems to me as we listened to the debate before, that that point should have been made and if it was, was made so obscurely that it was not recognized. It is all good and well to talk about the difficulty that farmers have in selling their eggs, as the Leader of the Opposition has said, and there is not one of us in the House who would deny it. It is all good and well to talk about the problem of the hog farmers.

Mr. Nixon: That damage has already been done but the member can work on it if he wants.

Mr. Deans: It may be fine to discuss the government's right to spend money on nuclear power stations.

Mr. T. Reid: How about the animals in eastern Ontario?

Mr. Deans: Did the member want to add to what he previously said?

Mr. T. Reid: I merely referred to the animals of eastern Ontario.

Mr. Deans: Fine. But if it is indeed not legal to ask for the appropriation of the funds in the first place, then all of that talk is talk wasted, and this is the crux of the whole matter.

Now one might say that the government has not got the confidence of the House, but I am sure that it would not be an earth-shattering statement to be heard in this House, it has been said so often. You could also say that there has not been much change in the government and therefore there is no reason to give it confidence or to have confidence in it, but those things are irrelevant, it does not really matter, and for that reason I am going to carry on no longer. All I say to you is that I believe that the government is wrong, I think that this resolution for which it has asked passage is wrongly done. I suggest that if it is going to be done by midnight they better hustle out and get somebody to draft it up properly.

Mr. Speaker: I must say that the hon. member's point is a very interesting point very ingeniously taken, and I think those of us who belong to the legal profession can appreciate it more than others of the members perhaps. During my period of time here—and I am advised by the Clerk, who has been here much longer—the tradition of this House has been to deal with these supply matters in this way. They have never been ruled unconstitutional and the matters of finance of the province have been operated in this manner for at least a quarter of a century.

I do not feel that at the moment I am in any position to rule that they have been unconstitutional during these years and therefore would not be at this time. Therefore I would say to the hon. member the ruling so far as I am concerned at this time, is that the procedure as adopted is quite in order, constitutional and otherwise, as far as this House is concerned.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Has the hon. member for Wentworth completed?

Mr. Deans: I have nothing more to say.

Mr. Good: Mr. Speaker, I would like to use the introduction of this resolution for interim supply as the means of bringing attention to three areas of government spending, which I presume will be repeated again this year and in which the muddling hand of the former Minister of Municipal Affairs was very evident. I speak of the old age tax assistance programme, the residential property tax reduction programme, and the farm tax reduction programme.

I think each of us here recognizes that there has been a great need within the province recently for tax reform. These three programmes were brought forth in the past number of years with the idea of being represented to the public as tax reform. Well, those of us in the Legislature who dealt with these three programmes know that they were in fact in no manner any means of tax reform, but just government handouts to accomplish a certain amount of political patronage to certain classes of people.

I will deal with them briefly and individually. The people themselves, at the time the programmes were introduced, in many instances were thrown into a great deal of consternation and confusion, first of all in the old age tax assistance programme. I think the provincial Treasurer is aware as well as I am of the great confusion that arose just before Christmas last year when this programme was introduced without any prior indication to the people. Suddenly people who were receiving the old age assistance cheque from Ottawa were on a list and received a $50 cheque from this provincial government. Now, needed as this programme was—and the need for tax relief for elderly people was very much required at that time—many people did not know what the cheque was for and were very reluctant even to cash it.

The direct result of this was that the government had thrown the programme together very quickly. It did not provide any measure of relief for people in that particular situation, other than the $50 cheque. It did not do anything to increase their regular old age benefit except on that one particular occasion. Many people were confused and tied this programme in with the municipal and education tax relief programme which then related as a lien against the property. That was why there was a reluctance on the part of many elderly people to cash their cheques.

My understanding is that the administration of these programmes required 200 additional employees at The Department of Municipal Affairs to administer it. The residential property tax reduction programme which has been in effect for several years was amended last year. Through that amendment it brought hardship to many people who needed that reduction programme the most.

I am speaking of people who lived in low-cost and low-rental housing which did not generate sufficient assessment so that that property could receive the full rebate. I am sure many people at the end of the year called their members, as I was called, stating that they did not receive their whole residential property tax rebate. These people unfortunately in most cases were elderly people living in very low-cost or inferior type of housing. The housing, of course, was assessed at the lower rate and the people did not get what, in fact, was rightfully theirs, and what I feel the legislation intended they should have received.

The third programme, I think, is perhaps the one in which the greatest lack of proper planning showed up. That is the farm tax reduction programme.

The idea behind the farm tax reduction programme was debated in this Legislature last spring in a private member's bill. I think we agreed on all sides that something had to be done to relieve the farm of much of the education costs. The manner in which the programme was hurriedly thrown together was evident to all the farmers in the province; that they should receive one-quarter of their taxes back was all that was said. There was no legislation put forth and no opportunity given, other than in supplementary estimates last fall, whereby we could debate the intricacies of this bill.

Many questions were asked by myself and other members at the time of both the Minister of Agriculture and Food and the Minister of Municipal Affairs of how this would work, but no answers were forthcoming.

The order-in-council was drafted and drawn up on November 5 and the farmers were told their cheques would come out last year. As we know now, the cheques did not come out last year. They came out in January over a staggered process.

Now this programme is still a long way from being sorted out, simply because no thought was put into this programme other than to say to the farmers, "We are going to give you 25 per cent of your taxes back." Granted the farmers needed tax relief, but they certainly did not get it in the manner in which this government administered the programme.

The problems arising from this programme are coming to light every day. They were spoken of in the Legislature this afternoon.

No provision has been made for direct and permanent rulings on who should receive the rebate where rental agreements exist. Where a father-and-son agreement exists on a farm there is difficulty in ascertaining who is eligible for the rebate. Where land has been improperly coded by district assessment offices; in many cases farm buildings have been coded as residential, thus rendering the rebate programmes useless to that farmer because the legal department of The Department of Municipal Affairs will not pay the rebate unless the particular land has been coded as farm land.

The other side of the ridiculous picture is simply this, that much land in the province is designated as farm land and is coded as farm land and has never grown a nickel's worth of agriculture in the last 100 years. I have here a rebate cheque for a piece of land that was received by the owner and that land has never grown any agricultural produce.

This is the kind of government that hurriedly throws together a programme without giving it proper consideration or knowing what the final results will be. Now they ask that we should suddenly give them a free hand to spend any amount up to what would probably be the entire budget for this next year.

We just do not have confidence in the ability of the government to run the programme properly. These three short illustrations have definitely proved to me that there is certainly not the expertise there nor is there the ability to put the proper thought into a programme to do something for the people of Ontario. They hurriedly throw out something which looks good on the newspaper headlines and then they worry about the problems that it creates later.

These programmes have created problems with many people across the province. There is dissatisfaction among many people and consequently we certainly feel that this resolution of interim supply should not be granted without proper debate and the proper opportunity for grievance by the members here.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, notwithstanding the casual and uncomplimentary remarks of the Treasurer, who has seen fit to absent himself from the House during the course of this debate—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): What does that prove?

Mr. Singer: I am glad the minister asked that question. It proves that the Treasurer, Mr. Speaker, has no real interest in the voting of supply. One would think, Mr. Speaker, that of all of the officials of this government who should have a real interest in the voting of supply, the provincial Treasurer should be the foremost one who should be here to see that the supply he has asked for is in fact voted.

I say it is either a sign of his ignorance or of his complete arrogance and the new arrogance that has visited itself upon this government, this newly constituted government, because in my opinion, Mr. Speaker, there has been no more serious a debate come before this Legislature, certainly in all the time I have been here.

Granted, sir, that this debate is a unique thing in the annals of the history of this House. But granted that, sir, the criticism that should be levelled at all members of the opposition is not that it has never been done before, but that it has never been done until tonight. I say, sir, that insofar as the criticism was directed in that way it is valid and deserving. But insofar as it is being done tonight, one would have thought that any opposition member would have been happy and eager to participate in this vote and challenge the right of the government to ask for supply.

I can recall, sir, sitting in the galleries in the House of Commons on many occasions when once every month the government has to come, in accordance with the rules of the House of Commons, through the House, and ask for supply every 30 days. Being somewhat of a student of these things, I have listened with very great interest to the speeches of such people as Mr. Diefenbaker, Tommy Douglas, David Lewis, and many others, whose best speeches, whose greatest contribution to the affairs of the government of Canada, have been in the speeches they have made on the debate in relation to the voting of supply.

So it is somewhat more than passing strange when we listen to the unusual and peculiar words of the member for Windsor West, the member emeritus from Windsor West, when he says that because it has never been done before it should not be done now. Or when we listen to the unusual words from the member for Hamilton. Is it Wentworth? Is he still here? He, having first derided the position that the official opposition has taken, suddenly has discovered that there is some very substantial wisdom in the comments made by my colleague from Sudbury.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that my colleague from Sudbury said that it was his opinion that this kind of motion had to be preceded by an address from His Honour the Lieutenant Governor. Very correctly he said that; my friend from Sudbury, as you well know, Mr. Speaker, is probably the foremost constitutional scholar who sits in this House today.

Unfortunately it took the hon. member for Wentworth some considerable time to go to the statute books and discover exactly what the member for Sudbury was talking about. He came to it much later. But finally, sir, if I can bring any sense at all out of the leaderless group from the NDP who speak tonight, having again been caught flatfooted, having again been caught off guard, after second sober consideration they have come to the conclusion that the debate on supply is, in fact, warranted, and is, in fact, a proper debate to have.

I am glad, Mr. Speaker, that the Treasurer is now back with us, and I want to address my remarks now to the Treasurer and these are very simply this: The motion put forward by the government and moved by the provincial Treasurer, is to the effect that the auditor be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, until such payments be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

This in fact means, Mr. Speaker, that the government is asking for a blank cheque to spend up to $4 billion, perhaps $4.5 billion, without any check, without any review, without any consultation, without any authorization. It is in keeping, sir, with what happened this afternoon when the Premier introduced a motion without giving us any advance notice, without any consultation, without even giving us a copy of it. It is in keeping, sir, with what the Premier said when he said, "I am going to pass a motion." It is in keeping with the new arrogance of the new government.

Mr. Peacock: Not even a royal "we."

Mr. Singer: Now, sir, I would think this: Many things have happened that have caused us to very seriously question the financial competence of this government; the ability to administer the affairs of this province. My colleague from Scarborough East has dealt amply and well, as he usually does, with the comments made by the Provincial Auditor in the report that was tabled this afternoon. Unfortunately it was tabled so late that there has not been time to circulate that report to the other members of the House, so that we are denied the opportunity, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Just so the record is clear I am informed that the auditor's report was placed in the members' boxes approximately five minutes after 3. I do not think that the auditor, nor this House, nor the officers of this House, should be held responsible for the fact that the member for Downsview does not look at his mail.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, that is probably as weak an effort as I have ever heard from an apparently responsible government minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Get your mail.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, surely there was only one group in this province that had control over the fact that the House did not reconvene until March 30. That group was motivated to a certain extent—and I do not condemn them for this—by political affairs which they had to set in order. The public in due course will determine how well they set them in order, but by reason of that kind of interference, the House convened on the eve of the expiry of the financial year.

After the House commenced this afternoon this report was, in fact, tabled. Some of us have been here in the House all afternoon, have been engaged over the supper hour, and the fact is that until this time this report has not been placed in the hands of the members of this House. So the pallid and feeble excuse put forward by the Treasurer just does not wash. If there is any inconvenience, or lack of information available to the members, it is the fault of this government again for badly ordering its affairs.

Now I commend my colleague from Scarborough East for having been able to obtain a copy of the report and to make very informed and intelligent remarks relating to it on this motion related to supply, and those remarks in fact speak for themselves.

There is one other thing that I think is a very important part of this story. During the course of the recess from November 13 until March 30, a government committee, called the government committee on productivity, produced its interim report number one. That interim report, in fact, made three major recommendations. The first related to the role of the Provincial Auditor, and I am sorry he has been in and out all day and I wish he was here to hear me; he usually sits under the gallery.

The second relates to the central purchasing and the third relates to the appointment of parliamentary assistants to cabinet ministers. Fascinatingly enough, Mr. Speaker, the first two points that were made, the one about the ineffectiveness of the Provincial Auditor in the financial affairs of the province of Ontario, was accepted almost completely in line with the criticism that we have presented here for several years.

Fascinatingly enough, Mr. Speaker, the government announced it was prepared to accept the recommendations of the committee on government productivity.

Fascinatingly enough, Mr. Speaker, and I do not know whether the Globe and Mail—one of the Toronto papers—was in fact jumping the gun when it was commenting on this, but it began to talk about the new Provincial Auditor and how important it was to select a new gentleman to occupy that position who would properly carry out these recommendations.

One would have thought, sir, that we would have heard from the provincial Treasurer tonight why the criticisms we made in the past were passed over so lightly and why the recommendation now made by the committee on government productivity was not commented upon in this debate about the request for supply.

One would have thought, sir, that with a new government with the desire obviously to create a new image, we would have begun to hear about how in fact they were going to be financially accountable and how, in fact, they were going to explain, not in the words of the now Attorney General that we have no right to know, that we the people of Ontario have no right to know, one would have thought that they would begin to explain in the words of the committee on government productivity, that all the people of Ontario have a right to know the manner in which public moneys are being spent.

The second thing, sir, that is of equal importance, is the recommendation of the committee on government productivity in relation to central purchasing. There was never a greater sham or waste of money perpetrated by the government on the people of Ontario than their so-called efforts at trying to set up a central purchasing system. They spent $100,000 a year on administrative setup. They brought in a new and estimable gentleman out of Kodak who was going to work this for them. He got a good salary, worked for the government, he had a nice office.

His achievement was to set up his own private business and it was so successful that by the time he had floated a public issue on the market—which was a week after he left government employment—the stocks went on the market at $1 and within a week they went up to $4. He used his time well and he used it at government expense. But the former minister admitted in this House that central purchasing did not purchase anything for OPP, Eric Silk had told them to go and jump in the lake; that there had been no central purchasing in any other facet. In fact, the former minister was unable to indicate any single instance where central purchasing had been done by and on behalf of the government of Ontario.

Needless to say, sir, having brought these facts to government attention, the government ignored them, but the committee on government productivity brings back this recommendation and is very strong in its condemnation of government policy to this point and makes certain recommendations about a central purchasing system.

Between sessions, and without the House being able to talk about it, announcements come from the government benches: Yes, it is a good idea to give the auditor a new and important and meaningful role. Yes, it is important to have a system of central purchasing for the Province of Ontario.

These, and many others, are the reasons that our amendment has been moved by my leader. We cannot and we do not have any confidence in the government's approach to the handling of moneys on the part of the people of the Province of Ontario.

I think it is particularly cogent to listen to the words of the member for Windsor West, who said, "I expected a great confrontation, and all the Leader of the Opposition is able to talk about are eggs and pork." That is what he said, and in keeping with the words of his leader, "We are going to travel through eastern Ontario and throw pamphlets out to the animals." The NDP are not concerned at all about the people of Ontario. It is no wonder they do not like this debate.

Now, sir, I say this: I think that the only mistake that exists in the procedures of this House is that there is not an opportunity every 30 days until the budget in fact is finally passed for us to have the opportunity for this kind of a debate, when members can bring their legitimate grievances before the bar of this House and express them and hopefully get from the Treasurer, who does not want to listen, and the Premier, who is not here, and the whole new front bench of this new and startling government, some kind of explanation as to their carelessness and their negligence in the handling of public funds.

I urge all members of the House to join in the support of this amendment. If there is anything more appropriate to the affairs of the Province of Ontario, I do not know what it is.

And in the event that the government is not prepared to support the amendment, I would urge upon them—and I would ask that they take the message to their new leader—that we would like them to go to the people and ask the people of the Province of Ontario, 37 days from tonight, for their confidence, because that is the least that the Prime Minister and his colleagues can do.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any other member who wishes to participate in this debate before the minister closes it? The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, simply to close the debate so far as we are concerned. It has been a wearisome one for us to have to sit through this evening.

Mr. Sopha: Nothing more boring.

Mr. J. Renwick: We in this party do not share the lack of confidence which the member for Downsview and his colleagues have in the Provincial Auditor, who is in substance a servant of this assembly.

Mr. Singer: The member had better ask his colleague from Windsor West about that. He had different views on the accounts committee.

Mr. J. Renwick: I just want to reiterate that the member for Downsview, last session—and he commences again this session—has stated categorically that not only does he not agree with the provisions of The Audit Act, but that he has no confidence in the Provincial Auditor of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Join with the member for Windsor West and many others.

Mr. J. Renwick: And we in this party take the position that since the Provincial Auditor is an officer—

Mr. Singer: Not the member for Windsor West or the member for Lakeshore either.

Mr. J. Renwick: —removable only on the address of this assembly—

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on.

Mr. J. Renwick: —If the member for Downsview had the courage to stop nattering about the Provincial Auditor, he would introduce a motion for the removal of the Provincial Auditor. We in this party happen to believe that the Provincial Auditor has, within the authority conferred on him by The Audit Act of the province, performed the service which he is required to perform as a servant of this assembly and not a servant of that government.

Mr. Singer: Why did his colleague sign the report?

Mr. Sargent: He has really climbed into bed.

Mr. J. Renwick: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we in this party are quite prepared as the usual routine matter to grant the Provincial Auditor of the province the authority to pay the salaries of the civil service of this province and we are prepared to grant him the authority to make such other necessary payments as may be required for the on-going work of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Shame. Shame.

Mr. Sopha: They have kept—

Mr. J. Renwick: And, of course, Mr. Speaker, we are going to be placed this evening in the position of watching the Liberal Party vote for their amendment and then the Liberal Party is going to vote for the government motion—

Mr. Sopha: They will be wiped out.

Mr. J. Renwick: —that they have spent the last two hours complaining about. So they will try to be black on the one hand and white on the other hand and as usual they will fall right in the middle and they will continue to be discarded by the electorate of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Why do you not resume your seat?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, our position in this party is very simple. We will vote against the Liberal amendment and we will vote for the usual, routine, customary motion authorizing as an interim measure the Provincial Auditor to make the very necessary and essential payments which are required—

Mr. T. Reid: Is the member going to run again?

Mr. J. Renwick: —for the on-going work of this government. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sarnia.

Mr. Sopha: I see the validity of the Waffle group.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise for a few moments in support of my leader's motion this evening, and I do so because something has happened in the last three weeks in the Province of Ontario that is unique and that has caused me great concern because it affects without reservation, and unequivocally, my riding and no other riding in the Province of Ontario, and the Minister of Energy and Resources Management has said that it will affect no other riding in the Province of Ontario; and that is the charade that the government is perpetrating now, connected with a corporate constituent of mine, Dow Chemical of Canada Limited.

I want to talk for a few moments because you are asking for money now. You are asking for money from the people of Ontario to continue that charade—not a charade motivated with a sincere desire to protect the public domain, not an action constituted as we requested in this party to protect the interest of the fisherman and the marina operators and those people who might well have been directly affected by the alleged pollution.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bullbrook: Last June, Mr. Speaker, through you we said to the government, to the then Attorney General, we exhorted him and gave him our unequivocal commitment that we would support any legislation enabling him to take action on behalf of the citizens of Ontario who were adversely affected. And no one can take issue with that. It is in the record of this House. I stood, with the direction of my leader and my colleagues, to make that commitment to him because there was a technical question as to whether action could be taken on behalf of those people. And during the court—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Retroactive legislation.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on.

Mr. Bullbrook: Not retroactive at all and it did not have to be retroactive and in point of fact, if it had to be retroactive, so what? So what? The minister and I and many others in this House sat when we were prepared to pass a piece of legislation—

An hon. member: The biggest bit you have ever been involved in.

Mr. Bullbrook: —and the member for Lambton will recall where we were prepared to pass a piece of legislation to be retroactive to do away with leases—to do away with leases involving oil and gas rights in Lambton county. Does he recall that? I ask my colleague to perhaps signify by a nod of his head that he recalls it. So retroactive legislation is not the question, but it is not that reprehensible from the point of view of governments.

Mr. Sopha: Wake him up and tell him that we are talking about politics.

Mr. Bullbrook: Yes. May I say to the member for Lambton that I am sure that I speak on his behalf too, because certainly his constituents are as concerned as mine.

In asking for the money to prosecute this lawsuit, we want to make something amply clear. We hold no brief, nor have we ever held any brief, on behalf of any industrial company, or any industrial polluter. We will not shirk our responsibility in taking action where action is necessary if it is a proper and appropriate action.

But, Mr. Speaker, let me show you one thing that they have done, one thing—one part of this fabulous action, about which the Prime Minister says to the people of Ontario, "This will show we mean business." One of the things he asks for is a mandatory injunction to stop Dow Chemical from carrying on the mercury cell process that allegedly pollutes the river.

I want to bring two things to the attention of Your Honour and my colleagues in this House. Thirteen months ago, Dow stopped the process; it is no longer carried on. He might make himself aware of this. The second thing is that he put them under ministerial order 13 months ago to stop the process.

You think that I perhaps exaggerate when I call it a charade? It is really a ridiculous charade. It is a fraud being perpetrated by the Premier and that joker he has now appointed as Attorney General. The one thing we could always say about the office held by the Minister of Justice in this province was that it was done, not always properly, but it was done with temperance and reasonableness, as long as that office was held by the present Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart). He sat on that lawsuit for a year and he did not issue the writ, but the present Attorney General did.

One other thing, Mr. Speaker, before I sit down, if my friend from Sudbury will let me say this. I regard it as exemplary of the attitude of this government and more so exemplary of the Minister of Justice who carries forward this tremendously significant responsibility in connection with the courts assessing the responsibility for pollution. Now, let me point out one thing to you, Mr. Speaker, if I might.

When asked about the constitutional question as to the right of the province to take action in connection with the matter involving the bed of the navigable water, clearly a federal matter, the Minister of Justice said, "If they do not like it, let the fish sue us." Now, that is what he thinks. He thinks it is some sort of a game that is being carried on.

Mr. Sopha: Who said that?

Mr. Bullbrook: The minister, the Hon. Allan Lawrence, is reported in The Globe and Mail as having said, "Let the fish sue us."

Well, my colleague from Downsview, in speaking to me, has an appellation about that, "shooting from the mouth." That is what that Minister of Justice does, and I want to convey to the Prime Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, this: that the government will not fool the people of Ontario about its sincerity in connection with industrial pollution by suing for $25 million of exemplary damages.

I invite the Minister of Energy and Resources Management and the Attorney General of this province to read the decision in the Supreme Court of the United States. Never mind the technical aspect of obiter or ratio, just talk about it. I do not want to give the government one more cent of money to continue with the charade and the fraud.

We say to the government, "Look, there is a problem in pollution. There is a problem up north. There is a problem with the Dryden Pulp and Paper Company." But that minister—and I invite him to contradict me—says, this afternoon, that they are going to do some reclamation work up north. Last week he was quoted as saying, "There will be no more lawsuits in the Province of Ontario."

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I never said any such thing. I was misquoted, and I assume it was a misquotation that came out of a speech at a meeting I had at Niagara Falls over the weekend.

I have been misquoted as saying there will be no other suits against any other industry. That is not correct.

Mr. Bullbrook: All right. Then at least you recognize the foundations from which—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have strayed considerably from this amendment.

Mr. Bullbrook: We have not strayed at all, Mr. Speaker. We are not straying at all. The government are asking me, as a member, to support a motion to supply funds to carry on this particular type of insidious charade and that is exactly what it is. So I say it is right on.

But I am going to close now. I gave the minister the opportunity; I asked him to rise because he recognized the foundation for my understanding. The hon. minister was quoted in the press as saying there will be no more lawsuits. We are concerned on this side, if there is going to be reclamation—and I want to say collaterally to you right now, that information that I have of a scientific nature, and information that I have as to government activity, does not coincide with the information that you spoke of this afternoon in the House, in connection with the dredging of that river. The minister now must rest with this. I invite the Premier of this province, Mr. Speaker, to recognize what his minister has said this afternoon, because now he has put himself in a position for the courts to assess it. He has said he is prepared to take sufficient expertise to the courts to convince them that dredging of that river is not going to do more harm than good. The only salvation that he has is the fact that we will replace those over there in a year.

The court will not decide that case in that time. That case will not be ultimately decided for four years, and, of course, that is the final fraud of all. When you issue a writ with exemplary damages of $25 million, you know full well whoever wins in the court in the first instance, or loses, it will continue on to the court of appeal, and it will continue on to the Supreme Court of Canada. This government can sit on their collective—and do nothing in the meantime.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other members who wish to speak before the minister sums up? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of various members opposite. I was particularly interested in the last remarks of the member for Sarnia. If this debate has served no purpose at all, we have at least had put on the record today the attitude of the member for the area and the attitude of the Liberal Party about doing something serious about pollution in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is just what the member said. I recall a debate, Mr. Speaker, we had on the subject some time ago—I suppose a year ago—when this problem first became evident, and they were talking a little different over there then.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Right.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But the mayor of Sarnia is a little worried about his little company of Dow and the member is just mouthing what the Liberal mayor of Sarnia has said—two Liberals who are interested in fighting pollution and getting on with the business of this province and making it a better place to live.

Mr. Bullbrook: Really, the minister does not understand.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Great stuff.

Mr. Bullbrook: He does not understand.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on what other members have said, other than the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Leave your wild claims at home.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Leader of the Opposition introduced an amendment to what has been described as a routine motion, and it is a routine motion.

Mr. Singer: Four billion dollars worth of routine.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is a routine motion and the Leader of the Opposition felt constrained to make an amendment. He spoke about a charade that has been brought in. I thought it was rather interesting.

I thought the only charade that was perpetrated in this House today was how ill-prepared the Leader of the Opposition was for the debate this afternoon and how equally ill-prepared he is for this session of the Legislature. He should have obviously spent his time—instead of going to Myrtle Beach—finding out what this House decided last November about committees, and not wasted the time of the House this afternoon, not wasted—

Mr. Nixon: Why did the minister not take part in that debate?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —not wasted the time of the House this afternoon in a filibuster because he had nothing to say—nothing to say whatsoever.

All the Leader of the Opposition proved to us today was that he had not read a report of a joint committee of this House which was tabled in this House three months ago. The ignorance of the rules exhibited by the Leader of the Opposition is really rather abysmal and I only wish that he had spent that time, instead of in Myrtle Beach, just doing a little homework before the session opened.

An hon. member: Where is Myrtle Beach?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Carolina.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I make this final comment—

Mr. Nixon: I will set Eagleson on you. Eagleson does not like your looks.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Does anybody know who the president of the Liberal Party is? Do they really know? Does anybody know? At least our president is known.

An hon. member: Does the minister have one?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Do I have one?

An hon. member: They have not even got a party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I honestly do not know who the president of the Liberal Party is.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: In that event, perhaps the minister would go back to the resolution.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I just want to make one final comment, Mr. Speaker. The Leader of the Opposition thought that he would raise two points of great significance. One had to do with agricultural policy and some criticism. This was interesting, of course, terribly interesting, obviously. The Leader of the Opposition was so overcome by the very excellent programme announced by my colleague, the Minister of Agriculture and Food, at 3 o'clock this afternoon, that it took him until 8 o'clock tonight to find a question or make a comment about it. Why did he not ask about it during questions?

It is a good programme. It is a better programme than I thought it was, but it took him—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —until 8 o'clock tonight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: And then, the Leader of the Opposition, the member for Sudbury, the member for Downsview—

Mr. Singer: From third to sixth in just a few weeks.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —the member for Downsview talked about the supply motion and we had discussions, and we have had discussions about supply motions, I think it is—what, a year ago since the rules were changed, since the members opposite were granted free opportunities to bring in or to challenge the traditional supply motion—

Mr. Singer: The minister does not understand the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and what the Leader of the Opposition said is that 12 months after this House unanimously adopted new rules, he wants to change them again. He would like to change the rules as often as they change leaders and we cannot afford it.

Mr. Singer: One would have thought he would read the rules before he speaks.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But there is one thing that does not change.

Mr. Nixon: The minister would have made a great leader.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is just one thing, Mr. Speaker, that does not change. There is just one thing in the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition which is constant again and again in his remarks. In his concluding remarks—

Mr. T. Reid: The minister should go back to Chatham.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —he took the occasion to defend his Liberal friends at Ottawa. He is not interested in our tax system. He wants to defend Mr. Benson again and again and again.

An hon. member: The minister owes me an apology.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, go to it. He apologizes for the federal Liberals sitting right there.

Mr. Nixon: The minister will sink with that separate income tax around his neck. Go and collect it now.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The Leader of the Opposition will sink with Benson around his neck.

Interjections from hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Keep on embracing Benson and his white paper and we will be very happy. Just stick with Benson.

Mr. Speaker, this is a routine motion. I submit that the amendment should be turned down.

Mr. Sargent: That was a beautiful windup.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I want to rise to place a point of order with you. I want you to rule on the validity of this motion in the light of the requirements of The British North America Act. I merely say this: The law speaks clearly that in order for this House to vote supply it must be on an address from the Queen or her representative. Now, I raise this because I say, as a private member of this Legislature, that I am delighted to see the disappearance of these monarchical trappings, and if that is the way we are going that we get rid of that abracadabra, then it is fine with me. But I think you are called upon to rule whether this motion is, in fact, in order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He already has ruled. Where has the member been?

Mr. Speaker: Well, I would say to—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: He left when the member for Grey-Bruce was talking.

Mr. Speaker: —the hon. member that I already had determined the answer and made a ruling. Subsequent to that I was fortified in it by an hon. member of this House, who pointed it out, quite rightly I suppose, to me and I give it to you for what it is worth. I think it is an interesting comment that when the appropriations which are referred to do come in they will come in with a message from the Lieutenant Governor. But, in any event, I had already ruled on that particular point and the debate proceeded.

Mr. Sopha: All right. The Treasurer will have to pay it back personally.

Mr. Pilkey: He can do it too.

Mr. Sopha: He is the only member of the government who can do it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us place the motion and the amendment and have this part of the business proceeded and done with.

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves, seconded by Hon. Mr. White:

That the Provincial Auditor be authorized to pay the salaries of the civil service and other necessary payments pending the voting of supply for the fiscal year commencing April 1, 1971, such payments to be charged to the proper appropriations following the voting of supply.

Mr. Nixon, seconded by Mr. Singer, moved an amendment:

That this House regrets the failure of the government to order its financial affairs to adequately serve the interests of the taxpayers of Ontario.

The vote, of course, will be on the amendment by Mr. Nixon.

As many as are in favour of the amendment by Mr. Nixon will please say "aye."

As many as are opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

The House divided on the amendment moved by Mr. Nixon and seconded by Mr. Singer, which was negatived on the following vote:

Mr. Nixon: Wrong side of that no confidence. We led you astray that time.

Mr. Singer: The NDP has confidence in the government. That is a good one.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): We discussed your position in that one.

Mr. Singer: Yes, we will even give it.

Mr. Sopha: That will be called the pork and eggs vote.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker the "ayes" are 22, the "nays" are 71.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost. The vote is now on the main motion by Hon. Mr. McKeough.

As many as are opposed will please say "nay."

Mr. Stokes: Chickened out.

Mr. Lawlor: All that time wasted.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, after what has been obviously a very productive and constructive day, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 1, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Our guests in the gallery this afternoon, in the east gallery, are students from Royal Orchard Public School in Thornhill; in the west gallery, Olivet Day School, Islington, and Glenview Senior Public School, Toronto. Later today we will have people from the hospital management services branch, the mental health division of our own Department of Health with us.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) indicated to the Legislature a statement would be made on the initiatives this government proposed to undertake in housing.

To combat unemployment and help meet the housing needs of low- and middle-income wage earners in Ontario, the government has asked Ontario Housing Corporation to increase its participation in socially assisted housing and, at the same time, provide an increasing emphasis on programmes designed to assist families into home ownership.

The housing construction programme is expected to contribute to a record level of housing for the province as a whole of something in excess of 85,000 units. This compares to 76,600 starts last year under the Ontario guaranteed mortgage loan programme. Greater emphasis will be placed on the construction of senior-citizen accommodation in order to meet the requests of our municipalities.

Funds generated through a joint lending programme from the private sector and the governments of Canada and Ontario will inject into the economy of the province half a billion dollars. That portion of the funds directed to construction alone will establish the potential for 30,000 units of housing, providing shelter for an estimated 90,000 persons. This housing programme in turn creates the potential for 132,000 man-years of employment, both directly and indirectly.

In 1971, the funds available for geared-to-income family and senior-citizen housing, including funds approved last year, for which starts will be made this year, will total about $202 million. An additional $15 million will be used for student housing in Ontario. OHC borrows 90 per cent of these funds from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and 10 per cent from the provincial Treasurer and repays both with interest.

To further stimulate home ownership the government of Ontario proposes to increase funds available as follows:

First, it will provide $145 million to carry out the existing home ownership programme.

Second, under the new Ontario guaranteed mortgage loan programme, the government has received commitments from the chartered banks to provide at least $100 million of first mortgage financing which will provide loans representing 75 per cent of the approved selling price. To this amount the province provides up to 20 per cent in secondary financing, with the balance of the selling price provided by the home purchasers as a down payment. A one-per-cent guarantee fee will be collected to establish a reserve fund against potential losses.

Of the total amount of $265 million for ownership housing, the province is contributing $165 million.

There is available to OHC for land acquisition and development in 1971 approximately $50 million, of which $14 million will be borrowed from CMHC and the balance will be provided by the province.

Mr. Speaker, the expenditure of all these funds, if required, should produce at least 30,000 units of which slightly over half will be for family, student and senior-citizen rental housing, with the balance for ownership.

Economists calculate that each housing unit creates 4.8 man-years of employment, both directly and indirectly. This includes on-site labour, factory labour of housing components, construction of roads and sewers and the creation of goods and services purchased by homeowners. Because of the mix of its housing portfolio, OHC uses a smaller multiplier of 4.4. This produces the estimate of 132,000 man-years of employment or one year's work for 132,000 persons.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The boys in the ivory tower have really been working.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): It is actually 0.7 manual hours.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It must be good, Mr. Speaker. It is annoying the opposition.

Mr. MacDonald: That is a simplistic attitude.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As it is difficult to compute employment generated by the $50 million land assembly and servicing programme, this is not included in the foregoing estimate. We were asked yesterday in the House to indicate the level of activity of OHC in 1970. During that calendar year, the corporation produced a record number of 9,586 family housing and senior-citizen starts. This represented nearly 12.5 per cent of all housing starts in the province. Not included in this calculation is the accommodation produced for 1,493 students.

In 1970, the corporation was Canada's largest lender for condominium home ownership, topping all banks, all trust companies and direct federal lending. A total of $50 million was advanced, which resulted in some 5,100 condominium starts during the year.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): I wonder who got the biggest share of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Relating this total activity to employment generated, the 16,000 units started—not counting starts on HOME lots—represented 70,000 man-years of employment directly and indirectly.

During the year 1,455 lots for lease were brought to market under the HOME land-lease programme and 7,525 social housing units were completed.

At the start of 1970, funds in the private sector were not readily available for mortgage loans. To bolster the home-ownership programme, as I mentioned earlier, the provincial government entered the first-mortgage field for the first time.

It is the government's hope that of the programme announced in the Throne Speech, at least 20,000 units will be started this calendar year. This indicates a 25-per-cent increase in the corporation's efforts over its 1970 record year.

However, Mr. Speaker, estimates must be considered, having regard for many factors such as the availability of suitably serviced and zoned building sites, which have as much to do with starting a project as does the availability of funds.

Mr. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The minister is going to tell us about Malvern again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the banks, the federal government and the Ontario government have all joined together to produce a massive programme of housing construction for the coming year. The fulfilment—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Don Mills.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—of these objectives and the utilization of the funds being made available—

Mr. Singer: Riverdale.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—depend upon private developers and builders joining with us. I particularly invite every member of the Legislature to encourage builders in their constituencies to take advantage of this extensive programme.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

FUNDING OF HOUSING PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, further to the statement made by the hon. Minister of Trade and Development, can he make it clear to the House what the increase—the specific increase—in commitment of provincial dollars will be to substantially support this new initiative?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I thought I gave those figures.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry, they were not given.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, perhaps the hon. Leader of the Opposition, when he gets a copy of the statement—

Mr. Nixon: Could the minister tell me what the amount is?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All of the money that I have mentioned that the provincial government is becoming involved in will be new money injected into the economy this year.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): How much?

Mr. MacDonald: How come?

Mr. Lewis: What does the minister mean, "new money"? That is an undertaking, not new money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You cannot spend new money until you undertake to spend it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If he has nothing to say, why does he not sit down?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As soon as they are quiet, I will speak.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. members wish an answer, they will give the minister an opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I will give all the details and hopefully this will answer the question.

The family and senior citizens' housing: there were 15,500 units which were committed in 1970 for 1971 starts, which produces a figure of $57.8 million.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Is that federal money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The federal money—CMHC—is for $130 million. The total amount is $202 million, of which the provincial contribution is $20.2 million.

Mr. Sargent: It is a lot of money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know. I mean, are we not supposed to take this money or do we just take Ontario's money and throw it down the drain, even if it is available from other sources?

Mr. Sargent: Take it and take credit for it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do the members opposite want houses built or do they not?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Where did it come from in the first place?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, student housing: 2,200 units, for which $14 million would come from CMHC and $1 million provincial if all is done by the Ontario Students Housing Corporation. This is a total of $15 million.

Home ownership: provincial contribution, $165 million. If the hon. member wants his specific question answered, $145 million has been available under the old commitments which have not yet been taken out.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): The minister spent more than that on Ontario Place.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Twenty million dollars of new money by the province. Private contribution by the commitment of the banks, which is new money: $100 million.

Mr. Nixon: New money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: New money.

Mr. Nixon: Not that figure.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Thirteen thousand, two hundred units, for a total of $165 million.

Land and services: there has been a carry-over of $9 million. CMHC is providing $14 million; the government of Ontario, $27 million—which totals $50 million.

If the hon. member will add that up it amounts to $532.2 million.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, might I ask the minister further if the final total that he gave me in answer to my question is the total amount of the commitment announced in the Speech from the Throne as the half-billion-dollar new programme? Would he not agree that that comes from three sources—that still, in his description to the House, he has not made it clear what the commitment of this House or this government will be in addition—new commitment over what was committed last year? I would look forward to having an opportunity of going over his figures.

A second question if I may, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If that was a question that the hon. leader asked, he should allow it to be answered. If it was a statement then of course it should not have been made.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I thought I made that perfectly clear. I was at great pains to point out, in case there was any impression that I was trying to create confusion here, I said that of the new money injected into this programme, of the provincial share $145 million—

Mr. Lewis: That was a carryover.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —had already been committed by the provincial government which has not been taken up.

An hon. member: In 1970.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not know what the hon. member is trying to prove—that we should add another $145 million to make our programme look bigger? We would be prepared to do it.

Mr. Lewis: If the government did not use it last year, why should it use it this?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member does not care about what happens to the taxpayers' money. It is there and it is to be injected into the economy this year and that is what the Throne Speech made reference to.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now we have $15 million which has not been used in 1970 and we injected into the—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Why was it not used?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is another matter. If the hon. member will ask that question—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: How can the minister guarantee that this money will be used?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that the number of housing starts last year was well in excess of that which was forecast by the government. So, if that was done I do not know why the hon. member opposite concerns himself as to whether we did not spend more money even than we did.

Mr. Lewis: The government should have, because it is away behind.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister is not answering the member for Scarborough West, he is answering the Leader of the Opposition. Would he please speak to that.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Of the $100 million private funds which have been negotiated, could the minister make it clear what interest will be payable to those investments?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Nine and one-half.

Mr. MacDonald: Another point he does not know.

Mr. Trotter: Nine?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Ask the former minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure the hon. member from the discussions I have had—

Mr. Singer: There will be no interest on mortgages.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —that it will be the interest charged currently in this field, and it will not be any higher. It could possibly be lower.

Mr. Singer: Which interest charged currently? There are about a dozen different ones.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: CMHC is going to be involved, so—

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary question if you will permit me. Now that a copy of the minister's statement is available it appears that, in fact, 9,000 new starts are the aim of the programme. Is that a correct interpretation of paragraph 3?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No. The hon. member is reading from the starts which were made in 1970 under one particular programme.

Mr. Lewis: That is total starts. The question is accurate.

Mr. Nixon: It is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Total starts—

Mr. Nixon: It says 76,600, 85,000; 9,000, less than 9,000—

Interjection by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! As I have pointed out to the hon. members, this is their time and if they wish to use it this way that is up to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The number of starts in 1970—family and senior-citizen units—was 5,568. The number of condominium units was 5,100. Student accommodation, 1,493 beds, for a total of—

Mr. Lewis: Not beds?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They call them beds for students. I have done a little more homework than the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Have you? Let us have some evidence of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Student housing is referred to as beds because they are mostly for singles. At least, that is what they are supposed to be used for.

Mr. Lewis: I thought the minister was thinking of his old department.

Mr. Pitman: That is what makes it so dull.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For a total, Mr. Speaker, of 16,161 starts in 1970 which is a damn good record.

Mr. Speaker: Has the leader a further supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister can provide an interpretation of this statistician's nightmare or public relations officer's daydream and tell the House and the people of Ontario at the next session precisely how many new provincial dollars will be injected into this programme, without simply reading this statement once more? Can the minister undertake to do that?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Tell the hon. member in the next session.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is a sort of ambiguous question to begin with.

Mr. Nixon: That is an ambiguous answer.

Mr. Trotter: Does the minister not know what he is spending?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member wants me to do it some time in the next session. I will tell the hon. member right now, Mr. Speaker. As far as this government is concerned, if we can build all the units we projected for with even less money, we would be glad to do it. It is not the amount of money we spend; it is the amount of units we are going to build. That is a tremendous amount of money to inject into this economy and I know that makes all the hon. members over there unhappy.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West, a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: A number of—

Mr. Singer: He has lost his confidence.

Mr. Lewis: —specific supplementaries, Mr. Speaker. The $100 million from the private sector, how does that break down—from banks, insurance companies, trust and loan companies and other sources?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Five banks at $20 million each.

Mr. Lewis: And that is the sum total of the banking area?

Secondly, where will the land come from? How much is on OHC land? How much is on CMHC land and how much is on private land?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have not got down to the detail of how much is on—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are people—of course, it does, you know, take long—

Mr. Lewis: How do you build houses without land?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why does the hon. member not let me tell him? There are all kinds of builders and developers who have land, who want to build, who will be coming forward and who have already come forward to get approval from OHC to use these funds to build the housing units.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, am I to understand that the total additional provincial money on the basis of the minister's calculation is $41.2 million for the year 1971?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is incorrect.

Mr. Lewis: That is exactly correct, and his own figures demonstrate it.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): How can the member be so wrong? It is incorrect.

Mr. Lewis: Let me ask another question. Is the minister aware, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: If it is supplementary, he may have another. The Leader of the Opposition had four.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: He bought it yesterday. This is going to be a repeat.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that the former Treasurer of the province (Mr. MacNaughton) indicated in his 1968 budget that we would require 90,000 units a year in Ontario—is the minister aware of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the hon. member would have read, would have listened to my statement, listened to the Throne Speech; he has the speech in front of him.

Mr. MacDonald: We did.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are talking about precisely around those figures and the number of units. But that does not mean the government is going to build them all.

Mr. Lewis: Right, but not—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We only build, as a matter of fact, 12.5 per cent, as I read in my speech.

Mr. Lewis: The minister concedes 90,000 units. Does the minister realize that the executive director of his Ontario Housing Corporation in his department says that over and above the 90,000 units, we are now 65,000 short over the last several years? Is he aware of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of it, but if that is correct then this is the way to catch up, by building 20,000 or 30,000 units.

Mr. MacDonald: No, the government is still going to give this year—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, we cannot build more units than it is possible to build with all the money in the world, with all the manpower available and with the land available. This is a damn good programme and why does the opposition not admit it?

Mr. Lewis: But the minister does not know what land is available.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has one more supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister think that an additional 8,500 units in 1971, falling 5,000 units short of the Treasurer's level, and 70,000 units short of the provincial requirement, can be called a legitimate housing project?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I do and if it is possible to build more we will get the money to build more.

Mr. Lewis: It is not a new plan and they are not new jobs. They are old jobs.

An hon. member: They will probably have a two-month strike or something.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the opposition is complaining that our plans are grandiose when we talk about 85,000 or 90,000 units. Now the member says, "Why do you not add another 8,000 or 9,000 to it?"

Mr. Lewis: When will it start?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If we would have added another 8,000 or 9,000, he would have said "My God, you are up in the clouds."

Mr. Lewis: When will the building start?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has started already.

Mr. Lewis: Where?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. member for Parkdale has a supplementary and after that there will be no more supplementaries on this question.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. The units that are going to be allowed for private homes; is there going to be any maximum price under the HOME programme; what are those homes going to cost?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: No, that is one of the details like land and mortgages.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): Pie in the sky.

Mr. Trotter: One final question: If there is no limit on what the cost of a private home will be, how does the minister expect the average person to buy a house at the cost of houses now?

Hon. Mr. Snow: He did not say there was no limit.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I do not recall saying there was not going to be a limit. All I said was I did not have this information. I am not quite as brilliant as the hon. member for Downsview or the member for Scarborough West; it takes me a little time to learn this information at the moment.

Mr. Trotter: The minister does not know the interest or the cost of a house? Those are two things—

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition for a fresh question.

FEDERAL FUNDS FOR UNEMPLOYMENT PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier.

Granting the grave concern that is felt on all sides of the House about the unemployment situation in this province, can the Premier explain to the House the three-month delay in taking up the $17 million made available from the federal level for programmes to counteract unemployment in this province?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): The programme begins as of today.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think if the hon. member perhaps had listened to the statement made by myself and others some four weeks ago at a press conference, it was very clearly indicated that the programme did not start, from the federal standpoint, until today. The regulations were not available until mid-January. There has been no loss of time as far as the province is concerned.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: The minister is aware that the announcement was made about the middle of December. Can he tell the House when the announcement was made about the provincial participation and why was there this three-month delay?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I tried to explain this to the Leader of the Opposition in, I thought, rather clear terms. The regulations did not become available from the federal authorities nor were the final commitments made with respect to funding; it does not start until today. There was no delay whatsoever on the part of the Province of Ontario; none.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Stop mouthing what Mr. Benson tells you to say. Did the member get that by wire or phone call from Ottawa?

An hon. member: When did you get out?

Another hon. member: There is Darcy again.

CONTROL OF DRUG PROBLEMS

Mr. Nixon: The minister is the millstone around the neck of government. There is no doubt the Premier should have put the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) to his left and put the Treasurer in the back.

Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Justice. Will he explain to the House what new steps he proposes to take—

Mr. Sargent: I read the Bible.

Mr. Nixon: —as the chief enforcer in the Province of Ontario to control the drug problems that are becoming more and more acute in the community?

Mr. Singer: Did the minister refer to himself as chief enforcer again?

An hon. member: Al, the enforcer.

Mr. Singer: The minister said that last night.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Did I?

Mr. Singer: Yes.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I see. Mr. Speaker, I assume the hon. Leader of the Opposition's comments are in reference to some informal remarks I was making last night at a completely non-political but very wonderful testimonial dinner for the hon. Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Wells).

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: During the question—

Mr. MacDonald: The government is going to need more than a testimonial to hold that seat.

Mr. Lewis: It will need more than a dinner to hold it.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Due to certain activities of about a month ago my voice still has not recovered and, therefore, I would appreciate it if members opposite could keep quiet for a little while while I am talking.

During the question period after the dinner, I was asked for some personal views in respect of the illicit drug trade in this province, and I indicated that one of the very few preconceived ideas I had on assuming this office was that there is certainly something very wrong, either with the laws or with the enforcement of those laws in respect of the drug racket in this country and in this province, and that I want to turn my attention to many aspects, and am turning my attention to many aspects of this drug trade in this province as—

Mr. Singer: The enforcer.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —I do not think I said chief law enforcer of the province, but as one who is charged with the responsibility in this province of seeing that the laws of this province, whether they are federal or provincial, are enforced.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary question: Following the statement by the chief of police of Toronto, when asked to comment on the Minister of Justice's statement, is he now prepared to accede that the enforcement is adequate and perhaps the laws are inadequate?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: As the hon. members know and I would hope the hon. member recognizes in any event, that if he is dealing with the question of the legalization or the lack of legalization of certain drugs, that that is outside the jurisdiction of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Does the minister have an opinion?

Mr. Bullbrook: What is legalization?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In any event, in respect of the comments from Chief Adamson, as reported in one of the Toronto papers at noon today, I think one thing that was not covered in that press report was the fact that I went out of my way to indicate that I thought that the Metro Toronto police were doing the best they possibly could under the circumstances in respect of the men and the experience and the facilities that they have available to them. In no way was I casting aspersions, either on the RCMP and their activities or the Metro Toronto police force and their activities. As my hon. friend knows, or should know, the OPP, of course, are not very active in this particular field due to jurisdictional matters in respect of the drug trade.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West, first.

Mr. Lewis: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, on the minister's informal remarks: When a question was asked, "Does he have the power to control the OPP?" what did the minister mean by his reply, "That is debatable, too; I am finding out"?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Perhaps if the hon. member had been in the House in past years when the estimates of The Department of the Attorney General were debated in this House, he would appreciate that the Minister of Justice in this province does not have control, does not have day-to-day control over the OPP.

Mr. Singer: Oh, that is nonsense.

Mr. Shulman: It is about time they did.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: This is a matter, however, quite frankly, that I am looking into.

Mr. Singer: Where was the minister the night the statute was amended?

Mr. MacDonald: He was going to cross the floor of the House or something.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The whole import of the Roach commission, if I remember rightly, was that there should be removal of political or civilian control over the police forces in this province.

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: And this was one of the imports of that report.

Mr. Lewis: What is the minister talking about? He was here during that debate.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Justice is fumbling as badly as the Minister of Trade and Development.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am certainly appreciative of the fact that there are very many problems in respect of the control of the police forces in this province. If I did not indicate it last night, I am indicating it to the House right now that I am certainly taking a good, hard, close look at this whole aspect.

Mr. Lewis: What does that mean?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am taking a look at the question of control.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is going to exercise his rights under the legislation?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has a supplementary?

Mr. Singer: Yes, would the Attorney General advise us if in his first answer to my leader's question he was implying a serious criticism of his predecessor in office when he said he feels that more has to be done about the administration of justice?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No.

Mr. Singer: No. Well what did the minister mean then?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Oh, come on.

Mr. Singer: Well, no, not "come on." If the minister thinks it is wrong, tell us what is wrong with it, and how the former Attorney General did not do his job. Tell us that.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for High Park has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: A good thing there is an aisle between those ministers.

Mr. Shulman: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is one of the steps that the Attorney General referred to in the answer to the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: A question of the Attorney General, if I may.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I cannot hear the hon. member, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Shulman: Is one of the steps that the Attorney General referred to, in answering the question of the Leader of the Opposition, to hold a public inquiry into the problems of organized crime as is recommended by the police commission?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is certainly consistent with his predecessor on that one.

Mr. Speaker: These are supplementaries.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: At this time.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, at this time.

Mr. Shulman: At this time?

Mr. MacDonald: Subject to change without notice.

Mr. Shulman: Was it at this time?

Mr. E. W. Sopa (Sudbury): Is the minister advocating here and now that there be a change or withdrawal of civilian control of the police forces of this province?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No.

Mr. Trotter: He insinuated that.

Mr. Singer: He is not aware that it exists now.

AID TO SEPARATE SCHOOLS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a final question, as far as I am concerned, of the Minister of Education.

In the light of the minister's statement last night to the separate school trustees that an answer to their request for extension of aid would be available shortly, can he inform the House what sort of review has been undertaken by the government or by The Department of Education in this connection, what does "shortly" mean, and is the review in fact simply a public opinion poll that will be available shortly to him?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, in attending the meeting last night in the company of the hon. Leader of the Opposition and the member for Scarborough West, I included in my remarks a reiteration of what the Prime Minister himself said in Ottawa on March 18, in reply to a similar—

Mr. T. Reid: Was that Trudeau? What did Trudeau say about that? Was that the Prime Minister in Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Has the hon. member for Scarborough East been here long, because the Prime Minister of Ontario is—

Mr. T. Reid: The minister said "the Prime Minister in Ottawa."

Hon. Mr. Welch: That is right. When the Prime Minister of Ontario was in Ottawa. I doubt whether there would be such a profound statement from the other Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister of Ontario, in response to a similar question, indicated that as a matter of government policy, the separate school trustees of this province would have a reply shortly to their brief. I cannot add anything further to that.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Can the minister indicate what sort of a review has been undertaken over these many months?

Hon. Mr. Welch: There has been a very careful review. The brief was prepared in May, 1969, and has reference to a good many legal and historical matters, and the government itself will respond to this particular brief shortly.

Mr. Pitman: A supplementary: I wonder if the minister can say who is making the review? Is it being made by individuals at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, or anybody outside the department or is it being done by officials in the department? If so, what officials and what branch?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, it is a very complete review within government.

Mr. Pitman: Within government? Is it The Department of Education that is carrying on this review?

Mr. Speaker: We are still on supplementary questions. Has the member for Scarborough East a supplementary?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Which department?

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition completed? The member for Scarborough West.

EXPORT OF ELECTRIC POWER

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Can the minister indicate to the House the reasons for the government's reassessment of the export of hydro-electric power in north-western Ontario to Boise-Cascade?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a natural reassessment of a matter of this kind. It is now before the National Energy Board. There has been, as the hon. member knows, some objection to the idea of exporting power from Fort Frances to International Falls, and therefore we are reviewing the whole matter.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, I understand that the government initially supported Ontario Hydro in its willingness to export Ontario power to Boise-Cascade. Has the government's position now changed?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: There has been no change. That is why there is a reassessment going on at this time.

Mr. Lewis: What does the minister mean? He has made his policy; why then the need for the reassessment? Why did the minister ask for a month's postponement at the hearings?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: So that there could be a reassessment.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is abandoning Ontario Hydro, is he?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No.

Mr. Lewis: Which is wise, in this instance.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Is the minister aware of the serious implication of the fact that Ontario Hydro and the Ontario government have, in fact, supported the application and that this will probably be the deciding factor in the decision of the National Energy Board?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I am aware of that, yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

SPADINA EXPRESSWAY DECISION

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Premier if I may, or the Prime Minister, as one wishes.

When will the cabinet be reviewing the Spadina Expressway decision?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the cabinet is in the process of a review. I understand there is further information which Metropolitan Toronto wishes to present to cabinet and we will review it just as soon as we have the complete information.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, the member for High Park raised a matter of very urgent public importance in the question period yesterday and I undertook to get an answer to his question.

I think he indicated yesterday that the cost of the four films at Ontario Place was in the neighbourhood of $3.5 million, which was comparable to the cost of a certain film, "Tora! Tora! Tora!"—which I have not seen but which I assume he has—of $3.5 million.

My research indicates, Mr. Speaker, that that particular film cost in the neighbourhood of $20 million, which I know he wanted me to find out for him. The four films at Ontario Place cost something less than $700,000.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the Prime Minister that answers are only given at the appropriate time so that there may be an opportunity to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! So that there may be an opportunity for supplementary questions.

At this particular juncture there is no opportunity for supplementary questions. There may be supplementary questions to the original question asked by the member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Nixon: But he undertook to get the cost of the building, too.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor for further questions.

Mr. Lewis: Can the Premier give us a date at which the review of Spadina will be complete, and to what extent is the cabinet divided on it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is that the way the hon. member would run a government?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, unlike the caucus of the New Democratic Party, the cabinet of this province is not divided on any issue.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think that was the question I was asked. I hope that was a very specific answer. Then, of course, the moment the review is undertaken, which will be very shortly, and as soon as we have the information, the result of that review will be announced to this Legislature.

CHANGES IN LEGISLATION ON AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr. Lewis: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs:

Will there be amendments to automobile insurance legislation this session?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): That will be a matter of government policy to be decided.

CLOSURE OF COBALT REFINERIES

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs:

Now that the Cobalt refineries are, in fact, scheduled to close, what is the government doing for that community and that plant?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may, in answer to the question of the leader of the New Democratic Party, also answer the question that was directed to me yesterday by the—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister will confine himself to answering the question asked today. He will be given an opportunity later to answer the other question.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If I may point out, Mr. Speaker, the refinery at Cobalt which closed yesterday has proved beyond a doubt to be an uneconomical operation and there is nothing that this government can do to keep the operation a viable unit.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, would the minister at any time table for the House or demonstrate publicly in what fashion the operation was uneconomic and why it was not possible for the government to rescue the Cobalt refinery?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, this is a private operation and I do not know if we have the authority.

Mr. Lewis: One final supplementary: The minister must have had some information on which to base his decision. What decision has been made about the jobs of the workers affected?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Everything possible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: What does that mean, Mr. Speaker? Mr. Speaker, the pattern of layoffs and shutdowns is severe enough in Ontario without that.

What precisely has been done by way of relocation and retraining and re-employment for the 90 workers specifically affected, and the 200 others in the surrounding mines who may be affected?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the federal government, of course, has a manpower retraining operation and this department is studying the situation very thoroughly.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Dovercourt has a supplementary.

Mr. De Monte: Can the minister inform the House how many people have been forced on the welfare rolls by the shutdown?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I did not hear the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member repeat the question? The minister did not hear it.

Mr. De Monte: Can the minister inform the House how many people will be forced on the welfare rolls by this after their unemployment insurance expires?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As far as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, there will not be any on the welfare rolls.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York East has a question?

SAFETY PROBLEM WITH "CLACKERS"

Mr. A. K. Meen (York East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker. It is in two parts. It might help if I ask him both at one time.

Firstly, is the minister aware of the safety problem concerning a children's toy that has become very popular these days? It is known as a "clacker". Secondly, is his department—and this is presuming that he is aware of it, Mr. Speaker—is his department taking any steps now to investigate this safety problem and if, as a result of that, would they contemplate taking any steps in that regard?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, we have not had any formal notice of any injuries or damages caused to children. However, when the issue became obvious, and I heard personally of complaints, I set the wheels in motion in my own department and in relation to The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs and both of them are in touch with Mr. Basford's Department of Consumer Affairs in Ottawa.

Mr. Sargent: Give it to "Jack"—

Mr. Speaker: Are there supplementaries?

Mr. Meen: No, no supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Trotter: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the minister can answer this question: Could they not take immediate action in regard to this? I have one parent here who has actually had a child's eye damaged. The principals in seven schools in Metro Toronto have banned them from the grounds. Surely the government should take action on that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: I would like to know how soon are they going to take these things off the market?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: As of this moment, Mr. Speaker, I cannot assure the hon. member whether it will be—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Removal of these from the market is a matter relating to the overlapping and combined jurisdiction of Mr. Basford's department, mine and to a degree The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mr. Trotter: Is the minister sure he has got it back?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Let me put it this way, it is not as quickly answered as might be suggested because there are, I am told, at least half a dozen different types of these clackers and it is possible that some of them are completely safe while others are not.

Mr. Trotter: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that some chain stores are already taking them off the market? All we have to do with some of them is ask them to do it and they will, because they are causing so much harm. Is the minister not aware of this?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Bowling balls are not allowed.

Mr. Speaker: Are there further supplementaries?

INTEREST-FREE FEDERAL LOAN

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier:

In his investigation into the housing needs, is he aware that last month Mr. Sharp loaned $200 million to India on a 50-year loan at zero interest? Would the Prime Minister consider making application to Ottawa for similar loans to Ontario for housing and to aid unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I assure you that I would beat a path to Ottawa's doorstep tomorrow if I felt that there was the remotest possibility of obtaining $200 million at zero rate of interest for the taxpayers of Ontario, but I happen to be something of a realist and I do not really see this opportunity presenting itself to this government.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

ELIMINATION OF GRADE 13

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education: Has The Department of Education rejected the proposition that education be restructured in order to eliminate grade 13?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No. I have no comment to make on that today. There has been a study of the secondary school programme for a number of years and as the member will know, Mr. Speaker, there are many pupils in our school system who can complete the 13-year programme in 12 years through an accelerated programme, but I have no announcement to make with respect to grade 13 today.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether there may be an announcement in the near future in regard to this matter, since the city of Hamilton has indicated it is going to build, or make available, schools simply for the purpose of providing for grade 13 education and this adds considerably to the cost?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I know nothing about the building plans of the city of Hamilton. I have no plans to make an announcement on that particular subject at the moment.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister tell us who are the members of the committee investigating the feasibility of abolishing grade 13 in conjunction with officials from the community colleges, the universities and Ryerson?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be glad to take that as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs has the answer to a question.

CLOSURE OF COBALT REFINERY

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I notice the member who asked the question, the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson), is not in his seat. May I say that when he is back, I will answer the question at that time.

Mr. Speaker: Does the NDP leader wish that answer given now or to wait until the member for Timiskaming is back?

Mr. Lewis: I think we will take it now.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, I think that is preferable.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Well, Mr. Speaker, as I pointed out to the leader of the New Democratic Party, the refinery at Cobalt which closed yesterday was an uneconomical operation, and of course there was nothing the government could do in its power to keep it in operation. At the present time there are no other facilities in Canada that will accept the output from the silver producers in the Cobalt area because of a high arsenic content. The only company on the continent that will accept this ore is the American Smelting and Refining Company whose head office is in New York City.

The present mining operations are employing approximately 345 persons and it would be impractical for the government to grant exemptions under section 106 of The Mining Act. This exemption has been provided in order to permit the existing and potential producers to continue operations. The order-in-council provides for exemptions to any mine operation in the Cobalt-Noranda areas within the next three years but it also provides for the rescinding of the order-in-council if suitable facilities become available in Canada during the period of this exemption.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister could inform the House why it has not been possible to process this silver at the mining laboratory in the area, as has been suggested by some of the municipal officials and others?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I understand, in speaking to my officials, that this is not possible, as I pointed out, because of the high arsenic content in the ore.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Durham has a question?

SENIOR CITIZENS' ALLOWANCE

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Social and Family Services.

In view of the fact that the federal guaranteed income supplement is being increased as of today, I would be pleased if he would advise the House whether any consideration has been given to increasing the comfort allowance for senior citizens in our homes for the aged?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): Well, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to tell the hon. member that changes in the regulations are in the works to increase the amount of the comfort allowance that will be retained by these needy old age pensioners in our homes. This will be increased from $15 to $25 and it will be effective today.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

CHARGES AGAINST OPP OFFICERS

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General.

Can he advise us at what stage are the disciplinary proceedings that are being taken against Wilson and Rodger and the third man mentioned by Mr. Justice Grant who were charged with having committed certain offences during the recent investigations into the Duke matter?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: My recollection is that it has been adjourned to some time very shortly but I will check into this and have an answer tomorrow.

Mr. Singer: Could the Attorney General advise us if these three men are still suspended from duty?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is correct, to the best of my knowledge. If it is not correct, I will inform the House and the member tomorrow morning.

Mr. Singer: Could the Attorney General advise us if these three men are still under full pay?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I believe a suspension merely is a suspension from active duty and not from pay.

Mr. Singer: Could the Attorney General advise us why such a long delay has in fact continued with which they are charged?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, I will not today because I do not know. But I will find out.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: Please. Will the Attorney General inform us if the other matters that are exposed in the Duke inquiry, such as buying by the OPP, are being corrected or have been corrected?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: There are matters in that royal commission report which directly relate to government policy, and government policy will be announced in this House in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary on this question.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Could the Attorney General advise us whether the disciplinary charges are going to be dealt with by a senior official of the OPP or by another person under the new regulations recently passed under The Police Act?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: These hearings are by a judge.

Mr. Singer: When was that decided?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: During the session last year.

Mr. Shulman: No, it was not.

Mr. Singer: No, it was not. Why does the minister not read what goes on and find out?

Mr. Shulman: It was to be heard by senior officers of the OPP.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sandwich-Riverside has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Takes a long time for the facts to penetrate.

Mr. Shulman: The new Premier should never have shuffled his cabinet. He is in big trouble.

Mr. MacDonald: Four to bat and four errors.

CADMIUM CONTAMINATION IN WATER AND AIR

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management concerning the cadmium levels in water and air.

Inasmuch as the Canada Centre for Inland Waters has found high levels of cadmium in the drinking water of the city of Guelph and vicinity—that is, 80 per cent in excess of the permissible levels—and has found that cadmium concentration levels in rain and snow in Ontario are surprisingly high, has the minister taken any steps to curtail or even discourage the use of cadmium in industrial processes in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the report emanating from the Centre for Inland Waters. It really did not surprise the officials in my department. As far as the cadmium levels in rain and snow are concerned, I am sure that the hon. member knows there are many other chemicals in these sources which were analyzed and which also concern us and which are in the atmosphere continuously. However, the findings regarding drinking supply in the Guelph area—I think the hon. member mentioned Guelph—are being looked into and are being analyzed. Further analysis is being made by the OWRC to verify these findings.

Mr Burr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister asked the Minister of Health to alert the public, especially ice fishermen, that the drinking of rain water and snow water in these areas may be hazardous and should be discontinued, according to the advice of the officials of the Canada Centre for Inland Waters?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I was not aware that the findings of the Centre for Inland Waters indicated that the level had been reached that would preclude the use of that as drinking water. I know there was an indication that it should not be used, that it should be avoided; I do not think there is really too much rain water or atmospheric water used as drinking supply today. I do not think the fishermen are drinking water from any of our lakes or rivers directly in too many cases.

The findings as far as Guelph were concerned, if my information is correct, were not really to a dangerous level that would preclude people from using that as a source of drinking water, although there was an indication that it could be dangerous if this buildup of cadmium increased.

Mr. Speaker: The question period has now expired.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, before you proceed. On a point of information, I think that every minister should have a microphone at his desk. I am getting old and I have trouble hearing half the time. I do not see why every minister should not have a mike. Every member should have a mike. It is unfair to ask us to sit here and to strain to hear what is going on. With all the technology we have the sound is very bad. I think the House committee should look into it.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): We can hear the member all right.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): We can hear him.

Mr. MacDonald: We can hear him.

Mr. Sargent: And the answers are bad too.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That shirt is so loud we will not be able to hear the member anyway.

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister like it? The pot belly is mine.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure we can check on the acoustics again. Yesterday, I agree, they were not very good. But today they have been very good. One of the difficulties, of course is that all the members wish to talk at once and therefore it is very difficult to hear the answer or the question.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Welch presented the annual report of the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education for the year ended June 30, 1969.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch presented the report of the Province of Ontario Council for the Arts for the year 1969-1970.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence presented the annual report of the Law Society of Upper Canada, Ontario Legal Aid branch, for 1970.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Arrangements have been made so that copies of this will be forthwith in the pigeon holes down in the post office for each of the members.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Mr. Carruthers moves that a select committee of 15 members be appointed to prepare and report with all convenient dispatch a list of members to compose the standing committees ordered by the House, such committee to be composed as follows:

Mrs. Pritchard, chairman; Messrs. Demers, Farquhar, Gilbertson, Henderson, Kennedy, Newman (Ontario South), Peacock, Price, Reilly, Rollins, Smith (Hamilton Mountain), Smith (Nipissing), Stokes and Yakabuski.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): I have a question of clarification, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know, if I can, when we will get information with respect to a list of the numbers of people on these committees, or whether in fact that matter will be decided at the meetings?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the chief government whip might answer that.

Mr. Carruthers: The members will be decided when the striking committee meets and that will be Monday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Stokes: Eleven-thirty.

Mr. Carruthers: Eleven-thirty.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE ACT, 1968

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Administration of Justice Act, 1968.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this is one of a series of very routine housekeeping bills which I will be introducing this afternoon, designed to provide for the more expeditious handling of administrative procedures in the courts. The first part of this bill would make it possible to authorize the payment of the expenses of an accused person to attend the place of trial even though the offence charged is not indictable.

At the present time the Director of Public Prosecutions may authorize the payment of the expenses of the accused only in the case of an indictable offence, and there have been many cases where the offence may have been a summary conviction matter under provincial statute and it would have been appropriate to pay the expenses of the accused to come to the place of trial.

The second section of the bill, sir, relates not only to this bill but affects the following four bills that I am going to introduce here today. It permits the fees payable in the administration of justice to be fixed under this one statute rather than having a different fee being fixed under a dozen different statutes as is the case at the present time. This will consolidate the information in one place and will permit it to be dealt with on a uniform basis.

COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The County Judges Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this is one of these routine bills. Sections 1 and 2 of the bill will provide for an additional county court judge to be named to the county of Wentworth, and three additional judges of the county and district courts will have jurisdiction anywhere in Ontario. Section 3 relates to the fixing of fees for court reporters in the county and district courts by regulation under the bill that I just previously introduced.

CROWN WITNESSES ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Crown Witnesses Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this merely permits the fees for Crown witnesses to be fixed by regulation under The Administration of Justice Act, 1968, rather than under this particular statute.

JURORS ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Jurors Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, this Act, like the others, will provide for the prescribing of the fees payable under regulations made pursuant to The Administration of Justice Act, 1968, rather than under The Jurors Act. The bill also adds drugless practitioners to those persons who are exempted from jury duty.

Mr. Singer: It is a real revolution that, changing the law this afternoon.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Justices of the Peace Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

SUMMARY CONVICTIONS ACT

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Summary Convictions Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the main part of this bill relates to the uniform traffic ticket provision, to widen the traffic offences for which it may be used and to permit its extended use to offences other than traffic offences. There are also some procedural improvements that have been made so that it can be utilized within the confines of Metropolitan Toronto as well.

As well as the uniform traffic ticket provisions, this bill also authorizes the long-standing practice by which the accused may arrange for an adjournment at some mutually convenient time and not appear to the original summons.

COMMISSIONER TO INVESTIGATE ACTS OF OFFICIALS

Mr. Singer moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to provide for the Appointment of a Commissioner to Investigate Administrative Decisions and Acts of Officials of the Government of Ontario and its Agencies and to Define the Commissioner's Powers and Duties.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Bullbrook: A rather novel approach.

Mr. Speaker: I believe that this is not the first time I have seen this bill and I am going to ask the Clerk to ascertain that this does not entail expenditure of government money before it proceeds further in the House.

Mr. T. Reid: It will save money.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, for the seventh time in a row—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The bill must be read first.

Mr. Singer: Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): After seven times one would think he would know.

Mr. Speaker: While the hon. member speaks to us he might relieve my mind by pointing out that there is no payment of government moneys either to a commissioner or otherwise included in this bill so that we would know.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, that is my opinion. The bill has been accepted six times already and put on the order paper and debated six times. One would presume that has been checked out.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Did the hon. member say it was not a money bill?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, for the seventh time in a row I introduce a bill which, if acted upon and accepted by the government, will allow the appointment of an ombudsman for the Province of Ontario who will be able to look after the problems the people have with nameless and faceless civil servants. This would add to the better administration of government in the province.

CONTROL AND REGULATION OF SNOWMOBILES

Mr. Shulman moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to Provide for the Control and Regulation of Snowmobiles.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, this is a model bill that was prepared by the Council of State Governments for submission to every jurisdiction in North America. The purpose of this bill is to control the various problems with snowmobiles, particularly excessive noise driving of game, and the large number of accidents and deaths due to alcoholism.

Mr. Sopha: Did the Waffle group approve that American intrusion?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order, consideration of the Speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton, that a humble address be presented to the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario.

May it please your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank your Honour for the gracious speech which your Honour has addressed to us.

It is a great privilege for me, Mr. Speaker, to be—

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member proceeds the motion must be put.

Mr. Reilly moves, seconded by Mr. Henderson, that a humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable W. Ross Macdonald, PC, CD, QC, LL.D, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario;

May it please your Honour:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects of the legislative assembly of the Province of Ontario now assembled, beg leave to thank your Honour for the gracious speech which your Honour has addressed to us.

The hon. member for Eglinton.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, it is a genuine pleasure for me to be called upon to move this address by his Honour the Lieutenant Governor. I am certain that all the members of this Legislature join with me in thanking his Honour for his words of confidence and inspiration that will surely guide us well in our deliberations, not only in the months ahead but deliberations which will, indeed, have a decided effect on all of us in future years. And those years, sir, promise to be among the most challenging we have ever known.

It is my privilege too, sir, to be among the first in this Legislature to offer most sincere congratulations to the new Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) and leader of our government. He is a man of quality, a man of great ability and immense experience both as a politician and as an administrator. But, Mr. Speaker, most of all he is a man of understanding and compassion—qualities without which no man could be a leader of others.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Do both the member and he have the same tailor now?

Mr. Reilly: I did not hear the comment from the hon. member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Is John Bulloch outfitting both of you?

Mr. Reilly: No. Should he?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Looks like he has.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Intellectually.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): You realize that Al Lawrence is now leaving after that introduction.

Mr. Reilly: You know, Mr. Speaker, the qualities of our Prime Minister have been ably demonstrated throughout his parliamentary career. They are well illustrated in the make-up of his new cabinet.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Look at the size of the cabinet!

Mr. Reilly: At this time, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the new members of this cabinet, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps), the Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton), the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Winkler) and the three new Ministers without Portfolio (Messrs. Dunlop, Potter and Snow).

Without doubt, Mr. Speaker, one of the most pressing problems that our new government must face is that of unemployment. Severe unemployment is a legacy of economic mismanagement. And, in this case, it is mismanagement and the fiscal and monetary policies of the federal government which have accelerated this state of excessive inflation and unemployment.

Mr. Sargent: It is the very speech he made last year.

Mr. Reilly: We can take very little, if any, comfort from the federal government's latest figures which now show that unemployment in our country rose at a slower rate in February this year than in the previous years.

Mr. Sargent: Yet they give this government 90 per cent of its money and the hon. member still blames them. What does he want, 100 per cent?

Mr. Reilly: Today, there are some 675,000 Canadians without jobs, an increase of over 7,000 over the same period in the year before.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: I would have judged that my good friend and all members of the opposition would have been intensely interested in those people who have been deprived of the right to work. Even with this staggering unemployment rate the Trudeau government persists by suggesting that the latest statistics reflect an improvement in the unemployment picture, and that the signs for the future are promising.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Poor blind Liberals up there and down here, too.

Mr. Reilly: The callous disregard, Mr. Speaker, for the many thousands who have been forced from their jobs! Rather than meet the matter with compassionate urgency the federal government has chosen to treat it as a matter of statistics.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. member gave that speech on Monday—

Mr. Reilly: The limp hope offered by Finance Minister Edgar Benson on several occasions in recent weeks that the worst may be over is hardly reassuring to those who cannot find work. Surely the government should not be falling back on statistical rationalization when close to 700,000 Canadians are jobless?

Mr. Sargent: What is the government doing about it here in Ontario?

Mr. Reilly: I will tell my hon. friend about that. That is why, Mr. Speaker, this government has made unemployment a top priority issue.

Mr. Sargent: When? When is the government starting?

Mr. Reilly: Members of the Legislature are aware that the Ontario cabinet approved a provincial-municipal programme to provide some 7,500 new jobs across the province. This is to be in the form of grants to municipalities, which my friend would know about, toward labour costs of those projects which are eligible. This move brings the total of Ontario's investment in such programmes so far to nearly $17 million. A total of 12,000 new jobs will result.

In addition, this government, as was pointed out yesterday and again today, plans to bolster Ontario's economy with a dramatic $500 million home construction programme, providing over 130,000 jobs over the next year.

Also, in addition to these jobs, as was pointed out in the Throne Speech, will be a substantial increase in summer employment for students in Ontario. Programmes have been created to enable students to demonstrate their personal initiative, respond to their concern about the environment, and acquire funds which will permit their education to be continued. Some 14,000 young people will be employed this summer by the Ontario public service.

Mr. Nixon: That is 3,000 more than last year.

Mr. Reilly: A substantial increase from previous years.

No doubt these and other programmes will be discussed, as the Leader of the Opposition said, next Monday during the special debate on unemployment, but members of this Legislature should be aware that this government not only cares about its unemployed citizens, it actually does something about it!

Let us turn for a moment to another subject—education.

Mr. Speaker, in recent months we have heard a great deal about the cost of education in Ontario. I have personally heard from many people in my own riding of Eglinton and from people outside my riding. It was—

Mr. Sopha: We hear the member was kind of shaky up there.

Mr. Reilly: Who was shaky, my friend?

Mr. Sopha: That is what we hear.

Mr. Reilly: The Leader of the Opposition told me not so long ago that they had improved the number of Liberals in Eglinton. They had moved up from the cupboard where they used to hold the conventions to the telephone booth.

Mr. Nixon: I wish the hon. member would get the unquote in the right place there.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): The member is incorrect there; he should say "end of quote."

Mr. Reilly: It was generally conceded by most of the people I spoke to that we must continue to have the best education for our young people—

Mr. Sargent: The member is better talking off the cuff; forget the notes.

Mr. Reilly: —as it is indeed one of the most important investments in the future of our province and indeed our country.

Mr. T. Reid: If it is wisely spent.

Mr. Reilly: Ontario's continued growth and development and improvement can be directly linked to the investment in education. I am sure the hon. member for Scarborough East would be the first to agree with me that it can truly be said "education pays dividends".

Mr. T. Reid: Provided there are jobs.

Mr. Reilly: Our education programmes, of course, do cost money. However, Ontario's spending on education is well in line with other provinces.

I am sure the hon. member for Peterborough, who has studied and who is interested and active in education, would agree with what has been done here as far as Ontario's education is concerned. We are still spending $22 per person less than several other provinces in the country.

Mr. Pitman: It is hardly comparable.

Mr. Reilly: Our costs per pupil are comparable to what they call the "have" provinces of British Columbia and Alberta. I understand that according to some statistics here recently the pupil cost in Ontario for 1969 was considerably less than that of all the surrounding states. In the case of New York State, our cost per pupil was little more than half.

Mr. T. Reid: How about mainland China?

Mr. Reilly: Of course, if we want to be we can be ridiculous in connection with it, but as far as my good friend from Scarborough East is concerned, I expect more from him. If he really wants to hear something, he should listen to this.

In 1969 we kept a running score of some of the suggestions made in this Legislature by the hon. members sitting opposite for improving the educational services. The total cost of these suggestions added up to more than $1 billion. I repeat, more than $1 billion, or double the education budget of Ontario at that time.

Mr. Pitman: The member said that to the people in Maple Leaf Gardens and it is not true.

Mr. Reilly: Mr. Speaker, during the same session there was not one single utterance from my hon. friend from Peterborough, or any other member of the opposition, about cutting out any services in education; not one, not one suggestion.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, he will find many. The hon. member will have to start reading my speeches.

Mr. Reilly: However, at the end of this session the same people who demanded the vastly extended and expanded services will be demanding reductions once again.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, what I wish to establish here today is that the cost increases in education in recent years have not been caused by reorganization of school boards, as the hon. member of the opposition would have everyone believe.

Mr. Ruston: Tell that down in Kent county. I dare the member to come down and challenge us down there.

Mr. Reilly: There are three major causes for the increases. One reason is an increase in the school population.

My good friend, the hon. member for Grey-Bruce—I am sorry that he has to leave the chamber because there are some things here that I am sure would interest him and be of particular interest to the constituents he represents. One reason, as I started to say, is an increase in the school population.

Since 1960 the elementary enrolment has increased by one-third; the secondary enrolment has more than doubled.

A second reason is a continued increase in the cost of construction of facilities. Even at that, we have maintained an extremely low level of cost when compared to other construction costs. For instance, on a square foot basis small hospitals cost somewhere from $36 to $40 to build, Mr. Speaker. Commercial banks cost between $24 and $31 per square foot. Commercial office buildings between $21 and $25 per square foot.

The secondary school structures cost between $20 and $24 per square foot. The elementary schools cost between $16 and $22 per square foot.

Mr. T. Reid: That is an increase by 200 per cent per student place since 1962.

Mr. Reilly: I am sure the hon. members for Scarborough East and for Peterborough agree that this presents a very favourable cost picture as far as construction costs are concerned.

Mr. Pitman: What is it all for?

Mr. Nixon: Compared with the Toronto Dominion Centre!

Mr. Reilly: The third major reason for cost increases in education is a tremendous rise in wages and salaries.

In 1960 the median salary for an elementary school teacher was $3,716 as compared to $6,549 in 1969. The median of the secondary school level was $7,078 in 1960 in comparison with 1969 at $9,149. As we are all aware—

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South) The member had better look at the members' salaries while he is doing that, too.

Mr. Reilly: I realize that this happens all across the board as one of the increased costs of education. No one will deny it.

As we are all aware, in 1969 the Ontario government placed ceilings on the maximum expenditure that a board could make for operating purposes. In addition the maximum tax increase for any municipality was one mill on the provincial equalized assessment. Any cost which might otherwise have caused a tax increase was covered by a special subsidy from The Department of Education.

This year saw a total limit to the amount of expenditure which a board may make. I am convinced that regardless of the limits, boards can and shall continue to provide a high standard of education at a reasonable cost, if they exercise care in their spending. In other words, I strongly concur with the statement made earlier this week by the Prime Minister indicating that the boards will continue to provide a high level of education to the people of our province within the established limits.

Mr. Pitman: Read the Carleton Board of Education report.

Mr. Reilly: I would like to turn for a moment to deal with yet another matter that concerns a great many of our people, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. Reid: I hope the hon. member says something better than he has so far.

An hon. member: That was good!

Mr. Reilly: I share with many concerned Canadians the conviction that we must take all necessary steps to maintain control not only of our own economy but of our own distinctively Canadian political, social and cultural life as well.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): That is not what the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) said.

Mr. Reilly: I agree that the survival and development of Canada as an independent nation must be a top priority of all Canadians, and Ontario must play its full part in doing everything necessary to bring this about.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): At long last.

Mr. Reilly: We all know that our country was founded on values, institutions, ideologies and customs that are worth preserving. We must have the courage and the will to maintain them. As stated in the Throne Speech on Tuesday, we must and will ensure that essential control is maintained here.

Mr. Trotter: The member for London North (Mr. Robarts) says that is a phony issue.

Mr. Reilly: In this respect the government has already stated its intention to convene a conference on foreign investment. This government intends to take immediate steps to enhance opportunities for Canadians to participate in the development of Ontario.

Mr. T. Reid: Invite James Coyne!

Mr. Reilly: We intend to give preference to Canadian-owned businesses seeking grants and loans under the various incentive systems. To further encourage Canadian enterprise and ownership, a venture capital fund will be established to assist in the financing of small businesses which have exceptional potential but which involve greater risks than are acceptable to the conventional lending institutions. Additional assistance will be provided to small businesses to develop technology and products.

Existing regulations and standards of the Ontario Development Corporation and the Northern Ontario Development Corporation are being revised so that assistance will be more readily available to small Canadian-owned businesses and to certain segments of our service industries.

This in my opinion is overdue and indeed most welcome. At the present time however, it appears that our growth and development cannot be realized without financial backing, and this financial backing must come from somewhere. Money must be made available from some source so that we can invest it in the future of our province and guarantee the employment of our people.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Federal government—

Mr. Reilly: Many countries have depended on outside capital to develop their resources. As I recall it, the United States itself depended heavily on German, and particularly on British money, to carry out its own development.

The hon. leader of the New Democratic Party and some of his socialist followers insist that the salvation of our nation is the nationalization of the energy resource industry, and federal co-operation to achieve public ownership of resources across Canada.

Mr. Lawlor: No, not in all phases.

Mr. Reilly: They would also wipe out incentive grants to foreign-owned corporations or their subsidiaries.

Mr. Lawlor: That is a good idea. Does the member not agree with that?

Mr. Reilly: With the unemployment situation already at a drastic level, in my view such policies would surely throw our nation into complete chaos.

During the past decade, the Ontario government has invested extensively in the promotion of economic growth and the expansion of exports. As a result, not only Ontario, but the rest of this country today enjoys a substantial trade surplus and a high standard of living.

Mr. Haggerty: All imported.

Mr. Reilly: Without continued expansion and without continued development of our economy it is doubtful that we could maintain our present standard of living.

We need to establish better incentives for Canadians to invest in their own country. Tax free dividends for Canadians, and government guaranteed bank loans to finance expansion and acquisitions by Canadian companies would be positive measures which would encourage and support Canadian investment.

The proposal of our government to establish the venture capital fund should open up an important new source of financing to Ontario's small businessmen. At the same time, we must appreciate that the great financial need for small business is for equity funds to finance inventories, accounts receivable and so forth. By increasing small business taxation from 21 per cent to 50 per cent the federal government would cut into the source of these equity funds so deeply that it is doubtful whether loans from a venture capital fund could ever be repaid. It is most important, therefore, that the government of Ontario continue to take a strong stand in opposition to any taxation which would further weaken the independent small business.

In the United States a great deal of time and talent has been devoted to the problem of small business taxation and to developing policies under which small businesses can flourish. Comparable research, concern and policies have been singularly lacking in Canada.

For example—

Mr. Haggerty: And in Ontario.

Mr. Reilly:—as part of their permanent government structure in the United States there is a small business administration agency within the Department of Commerce, and at the political level the United States House of Representatives has had a select committee on business administration which has been very active in respect of both hearing submissions and recommendations since 1941.

As far as I know, back in 1941 they were still operating in the interest of small business. Just recently a presidential task force published a report entitled, "Improving the Prospects of Small Business", in which a large number of reasons were given for strengthening the small business sector in the United States.

The United States Treasury Department also is organized to look sympathetically at taxation as it affects the small businessman. In the recent United States tax reform legislation a lower rate of corporate tax was retained as an incentive to small business. It is hardly necessary for me, Mr. Speaker, to point out that the federal government in its original white paper on taxation proposed to eliminate the low rate of corporate tax in Canada without putting some effective incentives in its place.

It is only the strong representations by Ontario and other provinces and the small business community itself that gave rise to the reconsideration of this point. Mr. Benson has established a special body to inquire into the matter of tax incentives for small businesses. But as yet he has given no indication of the kind of incentives that will be incorporated into his reform legislation.

On the other hand, my good friend from Welland has asked me about the Ontario government. Our Ontario government, through The Department of the Treasury has developed a comprehensive new system for encouraging small business through the tax system. In place of the lower rate of corporate tax, Ontario recommends the introduction of income tax credits to owner-operators, for example, those who risk their money and employ their energies to start their own businesses. It is equal to 50 per cent of increased investment in the small business concern. This tax credit system would have a maximum annual value of $10,000 and a lifetime limit of $100,000, which is approximately the same benefit now available on the lower corporate rate.

The new provision however, would be available only to Canadian residents and to active business investors. Large corporations, non-residents and passive investors would not qualify.

Mr. Lawlor: We have lots of them.

Mr. Reilly: Ontario has recommended that such a system be put into effect nationally.

Mr. Sopha: And here I am looking for somewhere to go.

Mr. Reilly: And if it were, it should prove to be an attractive and effective incentive to small business. The benefits of this new approach—I am sure the hon. member for Sudbury, and the leader of the New Democratic Party would be interested in some of the benefits of the new approach by the Ontario government through The Department of the Treasury.

Mr. Sopha: Did Eddie Goodman write this part?

Mr. Reilly: Oh, I researched this very carefully myself, hon. member for Sudbury. If there is something incorrect, I will accept the blame for it.

It would provide an outlet for the great talent and initiative of Canadians. I need only point out that many large and successful Canadian companies started out as struggling, small companies some 20 years ago.

Mr. Sopha: Like Eaton's, for example.

Mr. Reilly: Yes, it started out as a struggling, small company, very true. Let us not discount the amount of employment that has been given by these small companies that have grown and provided employment as time went on.

Mr. Sopha: Absolutely.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. Reilly: It would offset the biases against small firms in the securing of capital financing within existing financial markets.

Mr. Sopha: Sure.

Mr. Reilly: You know the problem that the small businessman has when he goes to get extra finance.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member used to be a small businessman.

Mr. Reilly: It would encourage invention and innovation. It would preserve small enterprises which play a vital role in the social and economic structure of Canadian society.

Mr. Sopha: John David Eaton was a delegate of ours.

Mr. Reilly: There is value in maintaining a balanced economic structure in which small enterprises, as well as large, can flourish.

Mr. T. Reid: Does that include book publishers?

Mr. Reilly: In short, in fostering a countervailing force in a world increasingly dominated by bigness—big governments, big unions, big business—

Mr. Sopha: Catchy phrases.

Mr. Reilly: Yes, right. The accelerated capital cost allowance proposed by Mr. Benson in his latest budget will do little for small businesses.

In the first place, it applies only to manufacturing and processing industries, not to retailing, service and commercial establishments where most of the small businessmen operate. Secondly, it applies only to machinery and equipment and will be in force only for one year, that is to March 31, 1972, which is too short a time to really stimulate increased investment. Finally, Benson's budget is expected to involve a revenue loss of only $25 million for the country as a whole. It is hardly a bonanza in terms of Canada's need for investment, growth and development.

In my view, Mr. Speaker, some alternatives on a more generous basis are required if we are going to assist the small businessman, particularly in the retailing, service and commercial areas.

Mr. Lawlor: The government is going to have to set up its own personal income tax to do it, is it not?

An hon. member: Oh, do not be silly.

Mr. Reilly: Now, Mr. Speaker, from a viewpoint of labour, I sincerely believe that we here, in the Province of Ontario, have done more for the people of Ontario than any other jurisdiction in Canada. Perhaps I should say that it may be than in any other jurisdiction in North America.

Let me remind this House that in 1970 alone, The Department of Labour made a number of improvements in its services to our labour forces, including—

Mr. Lawlor: The member knows what Edith Cavell said about sincerity does he not?

Mr. Reilly: —(a) Reorganization and expansion of the conciliation services.

(b) Improvements in the industrial training programmes.

(c) Addition of an energy branch to the department, and;

(d) The formation of a new uniform building standards branch.

Let me outline briefly the four points:

(a) The major reorganization and expansion of the conciliation services to provide additional mediation assistance has been hailed by both labour and management as an aid in helping the parties achieve settlements.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): How does the member for Lakeshore like that?

Mr. Reilly: (b) Revised and improved training programmes assist employees to upgrade their skills and open doors of opportunity for young people through on-the-job training.

Now, my good friend from Lakeshore, the hon. member there, will be glad to know that at the end of 1970 there were 18,500 apprentices enrolled in the various programmes provided by the industrial training branch.

Mr. Lawlor: Does the member know what Edith Cavell said about sincerity?

Mr. Reilly: It was the last refuge.

Mr. Lawlor: He is not going to shut me up.

Mr. Reilly: Another 5,000 will graduate this year from short term training programmes sponsored by The Department of Labour in partnership with the federal government and industry.

(c) Now, The Department of Labour assumed the responsibility for administering The Energy Act (1964) whose provisions relate to increased safety of persons and property in the petroleum industry.

(d) Uniform building standards branch has assumed the responsibility for the development and implementation of a uniform building standards code for Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, there have been many other favourable changes to the labour legislation.

By way of new legislation we have provided equal opportunity for women in our province with The Women's Equal Opportunity Act which became effective in December of last year.

Basically the Act prohibits discrimination based on sex or marital status in recruitment and hiring, training, promotion and dismissal. It also provides for maternity leave as one of its major provisions.

A number of Employment Standards Act amendments which became effective in January of this year directly benefit the working population of our province.

The major benefits of this legislation are that it will ease the tension created by anxiety over security of employment and also assist discharged workers to find new jobs by enabling them to take earlier advantage of various programmes provided by the federal and provincial governments.

Many members of this House were particularly interested in the amendments to The Labour Relations Act which were proclaimed February 15, 1971. They include some changes.

The Labour Relations Board has been given the right to issue cease and desist orders in illegal strikes or lockouts within the construction industry.

A major innovation will permit employer associations to be accredited as bargaining agents in the construction industry. Now, it is to be hoped that accreditation will achieve greater stability and improved collective bargaining relations in the construction industry.

As this new session commences, Mr. Speaker, we are conscious of the major labour negotiations now beginning in the construction industry.

In yesterday's Globe and Mail, Wilfred List reminds us of the serious situation confronting labour and management. He writes:

Construction employers in many key centres across Canada are preparing for negotiations with building trade unions. Major interest is focused on Ontario where the fate of a labour-management proposal for province-wide bargaining on a craft basis will be determined within the next month.

The collective bargaining scene in the industry has been a bleak one in recent years, as powerful and entrenched unions battled employers resisting unions' wage demands. The result has been labour relations chaos from British Columbia to the Atlantic provinces.

In another article on the same page, Professor John Crispo, director of the University of Toronto's centre for industrial relations, and co-author of a major study of collective bargaining in the industry, states:

There is at present no greater challenge to the preservation of our over-all collective bargaining system than its chaotic state in the construction industry.

Both procedurally and substantively, the results of the collective bargaining process in that industry are intolerable.

Substantively, there are wage settlements so far out of line in relation to any reasonable criteria that there is no rhyme or reason to them, save and except for the excessive imbalance of power that plagues the industry.

The article concludes by saying I suppose, "things will have to get worse before they get better."

While commending the new co-operative understanding that has been recently achieved between construction management and the building trade unions, I urge that the government and all members of this House must follow the progress of these important negotiations with care and with concern. Any repetition of the excessive inflationary settlements made by the construction industry in 1969 would have grave consequences for the entire economy of this province.

Let us offer the construction industry our hopes for satisfactory and harmonious settlements in the current negotiations, but let us also remind both contractors and building trade unions of their responsibilities to the public and of the urgent need to exercise restraint in wage increases in order to avoid new inflation which will undermine our efforts to reduce unemployment and try to get our economy back into high gear once more.

Another immediate challenge facing this new Ontario government is the problems confronting all municipalities. Our urban growth and concentration have been dramatic in the past decade and we must realize that they will increase in the years ahead. According to statistics, the population of Ontario is expected to at least double by the end of this century; that would make it well over 15 million people. What is of even more concern is the fact that we can expect that 80 per cent of the people of Ontario will be concentrated in cities and towns.

With urbanization have come all of the problems of providing adequate and reasonably-priced housing, transportation, education, medical care, recreation and generally the quality of life which we so very much want for our families.

One of the significant aspects of the growing concentration of population living in our major cities is that we have the capacity to somewhat alter this trend.

Mr. Trotter: We need a better government. That is what is wrong.

Mr. Reilly: One of the best examples of urbanization is right here in Toronto, I say to the hon. member for Parkdale.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reilly: Perhaps some of the members may have missed the article about Metro Toronto which appeared in Maclean's magazine last month. There are some interesting comments in the article. It said:

Metro Toronto is pushing toward a multi-ethnic population of 2.3 million. It mushrooms out from its lakefront roots at an annual growth of three per cent, or 5,000 new residents a month.

In Toronto each year about 50 major new buildings go up in the downtown core; some 23,500 apartment units and 8,300 houses are completed; 75,000 telephones are added to the city's 1.5-million-phone network, and so on.

In concluding the article it pointed out that expansion has left Toronto facing crises in transportation, in urban renewal and in the fundamental decision-making machinery of municipal government.

One may ask, "What has the provincial government done to help?" Here are some things that the Province of Ontario has done to ease the load for the homeowner: It established a residential property tax reduction programme. It transferred the cost of the administration of justice to the province from the municipalities. It transferred the cost of assessment to the province from the municipalities. It increased the proportion of school expenses that are met from provincial grants. It has broadened the municipal tax base by allowing municipalities to partially tax university properties. It has permitted the assessment and the taxation of shelter in mining communities. It increased subsidies to cities and separated towns for road and street maintenance and construction. It has limited the cost to the local taxpayer of establishing new water and sewage facilities.

The cost of these measures—I should tell the hon. member for Oshawa—the cost to reduce the property tax burden over the last two years has totalled more than $400 million.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): How much does that reflect on each property owner?

Mr. Reilly: That is in addition to the normal increase in government support programmes to the municipalities and the school boards.

Many other improvements are contained in the Throne Speech which are worthy of comment, but let me conclude—

Mr. Pilkey: How come we have the highest property tax in any jurisdiction?

Mr. Reilly: Let me conclude by repeating what our new Prime Minister said on March 1, 1971.

The new government will emphasize a greater concern for the individual within our society. The government will provide leadership and direction, meeting specific problems with selective solutions and providing full opportunity for the people of Ontario to solve problems without undue government intervention into their private lives.

I have every confidence, Mr. Speaker, that this new government of Ontario will do just that—and more. As a result, our province shall continue to grow and develop as never before and we shall continue to maintain our leadership as one of the most progressive jurisdictions on this continent.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lambton.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to have this opportunity to second the motion of the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) for the adoption of the Speech from the Throne presented by the Honourable, the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

The people of this province are indeed grateful that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has such a great interest and concern for their well-being. I am confident that the Speech from the Throne shall serve as a guide and inspiration to all of us in our deliberations in the many months ahead.

Some five years ago, the seconder of the Throne Speech, who was recently elevated to The Ministry of Labour (Mr. Carton) referred to the Robarts government as the "Good Ship Robarts." This reference proved to be an actuality, for in the years that passed, the Robarts administration created much good in this province.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): It is about to sink, that ship.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): The new wave is washed out.

Mr. Pilkey: It is something like the Bona-venture.

Mr. Henderson: In retrospect, I like to think of our new administration as the "Davis Jet Age Government."

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Henderson: This is the government that shall be called upon to deal with the great many complex and concerning issues in the most advanced age of our time. I am certain that the new cabinet, under the most capable and inspiring leadership of the honourable Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) shall continue to provide for this province in a most productive and beneficial manner.

I would particularly like to congratulate the new ministers of our government, the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Apps), the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Winkler), and the three ministers without portfolio (Messrs. Dunlop, Potter and Snow).

I was particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, with the reference to pollution and the environment in the Speech from the Throne. It is imperative indeed that our present programmes to eliminate pollution are intensified and that new approaches are sought to reach this end.

This government has stated its determination to enforce its policy by court and other actions against those who would pollute our environment. We are the leader in our nation, indeed in North America, on pollution control and I for one wish to see this trend not only continue, but to intensify.

Ontario was the first North American jurisdiction to establish a water pollution control agency, The Ontario Water Resources Commission, which was established in 1956. The 1970 Waste Management Act is the most comprehensive waste management and disposal legislation in the entire country. Similarly, The Air Pollution Control Act is the most comprehensive air pollution control legislation in existence in this country.

We were the first to require motor vehicles to be equipped with pollution control devices, the first to ban general use of DDT and the first Canadian jurisdiction to host The International Conference on Water Pollution in International Waters.

Those are just some of the major steps we have taken in our efforts to fight pollution.

However, to achieve our objectives of even greater controls and more and newer ways of eliminating pollution, we are now about to set up an entirely new department—to be known as the Ontario Department of Environment. Key branches of the Ontario Water Resources Commission, together with specific functions of the environmental health services branch of The Department of Health will be integrated with the existing Department of Energy and Resources Management to achieve this new Department of Environment.

In addition to this government's proposal to introduce a comprehensive bill to deal with all matters related to environmental conservation, this is yet another fight in our fight against pollution. Among the many benefits which will result from the creation of this new department will be the ability to mount a stronger programme to preserve our recreational lakes and rivers so that we do not have to fear a repetition of the mercury pollution such as we had in the St. Clair River in my very own riding.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that the announced intention of the creation of a new Department of Transport and Communications will be welcomed with a great deal of enthusiasm by all the people of Ontario and particularly those in our vast northern portion of the province. An immediate function of this department will be to undertake a review of the costs of transporting goods into and out of northern Ontario. An extremely important matter to the people of our great north.

However, this new department, which is to be made up of the existing Department of Highways, the Department of Transport and the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, will have responsibilities far beyond only those of Northern Ontario. It will be called upon to achieve a better balance between public transit, commuter services and motor vehicle traffic in general. It will take steps to integrate road, rail, air and water services throughout the province and it will continue to expand and improve our road system.

Most important to urban areas, this department will give special emphasis to the total transportation system of the larger cities and their surrounding commuter areas by providing assistance to municipalities for the development of transit facilities. There is little need for me to elaborate on the extensive projects already initiated over and above those I have just mentioned which are designed to develop the rich northern sector of our province.

There is one other area, however, that I particularly wish to bring to the attention of this Legislature—for it is an area that has been treated with a great deal of criticism, although totally unfairly, by the opposition and the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Pilkey: Lots of promises but not much substance.

Mr. Henderson: The area I refer to is education, and particularly education in rural Ontario.

Over the past few years there has been mounting pressure on the government for more and more education services to the community. Farm organizations have constantly urged better education for farm youth. In 1963, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, in its annual brief to the cabinet, deplored, and I quote, "the inequality of opportunity as between urban and rural residents." This was at a time when central high schools had already been established.

In 1964, the Ontario Farmers' Union brief to the cabinet stated in part: "High School Boards should be more directly responsible to ratepayers by being elected at the municipal level."

As late as 1967, the Ontario Farmers' Union brief included the following relevant statement:

If Canadian farms are to be well managed, an adequate level of education is of paramount importance. At the present time, educational levels in agriculture are low. In 1961, only 29 per cent of farm operators had more than elementary school education in comparison with 75 per cent of those engaged in managerial occupations elsewhere in the economy.

The farm youth continue to obtain less formal education than the city youth. Of the boys in the 15-19 age group living on farms in 1961, 52 per cent were attending school, as compared to 66 per cent in cities. This means that the coming generation of farmers, although more educated than the last, will also have less than average education.

In its 1967 brief, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture asked that services in rural school be upgraded to the level of the cities.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we have accomplished what has been necessary. We have provided educational equality across this province to the greatest degree possible.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Bunk!

Mr. Henderson: And we have done it with the creation of larger boards so that every child possible would come under a board which would be able to provide the full range of specialized programmes and services which are necessary if children truly are to be given equal opportunity.

However, the hon. members who sit on the opposite side of this Legislature were somehow hoodwinked into believing that at long last they had something legitimate to belly-ache about. They accused us of ridiculous spending on education and they blamed it all on the formation of the larger boards.

I will not bore you with the details of how our costs of education increase came about. The hon. member for Eglinton has, in my opinion, more than adequately spelled out the reasons for the rise in education costs; and they were not the result of the formation of the larger boards, let there be no mistake about that.

While I am speaking of education, I cannot help but think about our education advantages available in Lambton county. I do wish to congratulate the county public and separate school boards on the work that they have put forth for the people of Lambton. In recent weeks there have been rumours that the Watford High School might be discontinued. I hope that the Watford High School can continue in its present capacity, serving the area around that community.

It would appear to me to be not a very wise move to discontinue this school and build onto other schools. Last summer, when the Minister of Education at that time visited the Watford High School, he assured the people of that area that any time the school board decided to renovate or build any addition, provincial grants would be available.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): It must be an election year.

Mr. Henderson: I am confident that that offer still stands.

Mr. Trotter: Election year!

Mr. Henderson: Not last year!

Let us turn for a moment to another matter—the matter of marketing boards.

Production is only one phase of the agricultural industry. Of equal importance is marketing. The present-day Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act had its beginning when the Ontario Legislature passed unanimously in 1937 The Ontario Farm Products Control Act. In 1946 this Act was amended and its name changed to The Ontario Farm Products Marketing Act. Although this Act has been amended from time to time to meet the changing needs of the industry, the objective of the legislation has remained unchanged: "To provide for the control and regulation in any or all respects of the marketing within Ontario of farm products."

The legislation provided for the appointment of a Farm Products Marketing Board to supervise the operations of commodity boards, to ensure that the marketing authority was not being abused, to mediate disagreements between principals and to ensure that producers have the benefit of a sound system of marketing.

Ontario's system of commodity marketing has not only been widely accepted by producers within the province, it has also been the model for similar legislation in other jurisdictions. At the close of the sixties, a total of 19 marketing boards were operating in the province involving the regulated marketing of 37 commodities. The total annual sales volume of these commodities is approximately $500 million.

The Farm Products Marketing Board has encouraged the development of some rather sophisticated marketing machinery, including the teletype auction system used by the Ontario Hog Producers Marketing Board and the Dutch clock system that is used to determine prices of tobacco and cheese and also calves at the Ontario stockyards.

In 1963 The Farm Products Marketing Act was amended to allow for production control of tobacco. This is the only Ontario commodity subject to production controls. The turkey and chicken broiler plans, however, provide for the establishment of marketing quotas.

In 1968-1969 Ontario took another pioneering step with the introduction of the Ontario Apple Commission, which involves representatives of all aspects of the apple industry in the determination of price and other factors respecting apple marketing.

With respect to marketing, our government has indicated its support of the principle and general interest of Bill C-176, An Act to Establish a National Farm Products Marketing Council and to Authorize the Establishment of National Marketing Agencies for Farm Products.

It is our feeling that this legislation is essential if we are to prevent undue distress and unnecessary disruptions of production and marketing programmes that have been established by producers in many of the provinces, and to bring order and stability to the industry.

However, we are concerned over what would happen if one province or one area of production decided to opt out. This could destroy the efforts of the participating provinces. In my opinion the national board, in order to avoid harmful consequences of such an occurrence, should have the power to make such a province either dispose of its produce within its own borders or into export trade. Otherwise, they could dump their surplus into the other provinces and ruin the very climate of stability the national board is trying to establish.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Conservatives in Ottawa are holding that bill up. They are filibustering.

Mr. Henderson: It would be advantageous to have the right of appeal which exists in the Ontario marketing plan included in C-176, because this is a basic individual right. The hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) presented these views to the standing committee on agriculture of the House of Commons in its January 25, 1971, public hearing of this bill.

Mr. Nixon: He had better talk to his Tory friends if the member wants to make that bill law.

Mr. Henderson: The Lambton branch of the National Farm Union stand on this Bill C-176 suggests it should be amended in accordance with the following eight points:

1. We recommend Bill C-176 be amended in such a way as to make the operations of the proposed National Farm Products Marketing Council fully accountable to Parliament for its actions and activities.

2. We recommend the members appointed to the National Farm Products Marketing Council be made for a fixed period of not less than five years and not more than 10 years, subject to review and renewal of a further period of service at the expiration of their appointed terms.

3. We recommend the powers to license or issue permits for food imports be vested in the council.

4. In the establishment of marketing agencies by the National Farm Products Marketing Council, we recommend no agency be organized before the wishes of the majority of the primary producers are clearly assessed.

5. We recommend the operating costs of the farm products marketing agencies appointed by the Governor-in-Council be totally financed by the federal treasury rather than out of the proceeds of the sales of farm products.

6. We recommend that a guaranteed price formula based on farm production targets and average costs of production be provided for each regulated product to be marketed under Bill C-176 and that the annual negotiation of production targets and price reviews take place between the National Farmers' Union and the respective marketing agencies.

7. We recommend the inclusion of cattle under Bill C-176.

8. We recommend Bill C-176 be so amended as to safeguard against production of a regulated product.

I would like to digress for a moment, Mr. Speaker, to deal with yet another most important matter.

More than 170,000 acres of submarginal agricultural lands have been acquired by ARDA and transferred to such other public uses as forestry, recreation, wildlife production and water conservation. ARDA provides for an additional one-third grant to municipalities for drainage works constructed under The Drainage Act of Ontario.

Total ARDA grants paid until March 31, 1970 amounted to $6,934,873. One thousand two hundred and forty Ontario residents have sold to ARDA a total of 128,000 acres of marginal farm units and have either retired out of agriculture or moved into another area of employment. Much of the land so acquired has been attached to adjacent farms under our farm enlargement programme, and to date approximately 1,000 improved economic units have resulted.

Eight community pastures, consisting of 24,869 acres, have been established to serve adjacent farmers with extra grazing land at a nominal fee. Two of these community pastures are located on Indian lands and they are operated by Indian people.

ARDA places high emphasis on water supplies and water conservation. One hundred and thirty-three dams for rural water supply have been built by municipalities or conservation authorities, which have received grants amounting to $7,930,884. In addition, 3,486 farm wells and 1,151 farm ponds have been provided with ARDA financial assistance.

More than 7,000 Ontario farmers have received ARDA assistance to remove old fences, providing larger fields for more efficient use of farm machinery. A further 3,400 people, both farm and rural non-farm, have received direct benefits through increased income from ARDA development projects. These include expanded industrial milk processing plants, tourist industry developments, a revitalized maple syrup industry, expanded rural industries and improved livestock marketing facilities.

Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the provision of the capital grants programme for Ontario farmers in the Speech from the Throne was indeed welcome news. Equally welcome was the statement made by the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food who outlined in detail the important aspects of these grants.

Those of us who come from rural areas are quite aware of the benefits to the thousands of Ontario farmers from the 12-year capital grants programme introduced in 1967 and we are also aware of the need to expand this programme to meet the changes in times and conditions in our agricultural community.

And these conditions have had a decided effect on the cost of farm improvements. Consequently, it is most gratifying that this government has undertaken to increase the maximum amount of the grant available to any one farmer from $2,500 to $3,000. It is also only logical that where a partnership of two farmers has been formed, and because that partnership in fact is a partnership of two farms, then the amount of the grant should be $6,000 as announced by the hon. minister yesterday.

The basing of a capital grant on a straight 40 per cent of the cost is a logical and sensible amendment to the original procedure of varying percentages.

The third point made by the minister, that the farmer himself can now decide whether he will use all of his own capital allotment for a single project, or if he wishes spread it around over several classes or projects, is equally logical and sensible.

I was pleased too, Mr. Speaker, that the government has included a number of additional items in the classifications of farm drainage and farm structure. Maple syrup structures; various piping, plumbing, stabling; pumping equipment; bulk milk tanks; fixed livestock scales; fixed wastage disposal systems; electrical wiring and natural gas installations other than farm dwellings; and bridges and culverts; are indeed very important to all farmers and should be included.

The removal of the old orchards and the inclusion of cost of piping, plumbing and pumping equipment for farm ponds and wells will help many farmers I personally know in upgrading their operations.

I will watch with great interest, Mr. Speaker, the two new classifications which have been established—farm vacation hosting and removal of diseased and dead elm trees. The recently demonstrated desire of urban dwellers to spend summer vacations on farms can prove to be indeed a very profitable business for the farm people. It is essential that moneys are available to farmers to improve their homes for proper housing of this new type of vacationer.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Henderson: I will get to that. I, for one, am extremely pleased about the provision for the removal of diseased and dead elm trees. Unfortunately, these once beautiful and stately trees are today marring the beauty of our province. Their removal cannot come too soon for me.

Mr. Speaker, in 1968 we introduced residential property tax reduction legislation to reduce the amount of municipal taxes levied on residential properties.

Any separately assessed residential property is eligible for a reduction in municipal taxes in an amount of $30 plus 10 per cent of the average residential taxes in the municipality for the previous year. This reduction is not to exceed 50 per cent of the municipal and school taxes on the property.

In 1964 and 1965, Mr. Speaker, the Ontario government introduced the provincial ownership plan of providing for the construction and operation of water treatment plants and sewage treatment plants for municipalities with the costs being recovered on a usage basis. This extremely important programme is being administered by the OWRC. The plants are operated entirely at cost and are the property of the province.

When the programme was initiated, municipalities were required to provide the trunk sewers and watermains necessary to connect the homes using the services. In June, 1967, the government announced an extension of this policy to allow for adequate water and sewerage facilities. Because the cost of sewer trunks and watermains proved to be a heavy burden in some of the smaller municipalities, the government indicated that it would now include these services as well, along with the treatment plants undertaken in this provincially-financed construction programme, to be operated at cost by the OWRC on behalf of the municipality.

On October 16, 1969, two further financial programmes to assist municipalities in projects related to sewerage and waterworks were announced by the government. Under this programme, provincial assistance is provided in an attempt to ensure that the cost of a water and sewerage works in a municipality will not exceed an average home charge of $100 per year for water and $120 per year for sewerage. I am pleased, Mr. Speaker, for each and every town and village in Lambton county will benefit from this.

Mr. Nixon: Everybody's taxes will go up by $220 a year each.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Plus frontage charge and connecting charge.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Just keep quiet! Pipe down!

Mr. Henderson: There are several other significant policies that I wish to bring to the attention of this House.

Expansion of farm management services: The emphasis in recent years has been on improved farm management technology. In 1969 a new management tool, Canfarm, which incorporated modern data processing techniques, was introduced to 70 farmers.

In 1970 more than 700 farmers will be enrolled and the plan is to expand it rapidly in the future. In 1969 approximately 50 farm management specialists were added to the departmental staff to expand the personal counselling service to farmers.

Veterinary services: The programme is being expanded in area and in amount of financial assistance, effective April. It will now cover the Bruce Peninsula and Renfrew county as well as northern Ontario and a large section of southeastern Ontario. Financial assistance is being raised from $5,000 to $8,000 per year and the mileage allowance for farm calls from five to seven cents per mile.

My riding of Lambton, Mr. Speaker, has many assets, some natural and some created.

First, Lambton county is situated at the southwestern corner of Ontario in a very rich cash crop area. The county is approximately 35 miles wide by 50 miles long. The total land area is 720,000 square acres, with approximately 600,000 square acres of this being occupied farmland.

On the north is Lake Huron and on the west River St. Clair, for a total of 80 miles lake and river frontage which is one of the best resort areas in the Province of Ontario. It has many other natural waterways which the local conservation authority are attempting to harness.

It also joined hands with the city of Sarnia some 15 years ago and constructed a modern county court house, jail and also county buildings, one of the first areas in Ontario to have these modern facilities. It also has the Lambton Twilight Haven, the county home for the aged, which was a joint effort between the city of Sarnia and the county of Lambton, situated on the westerly limits of Petrolia. Just last year they opened a second county rest home which is called the North Lambton Rest Home and is situated in the town of Forest.

These two homes have a total bed capacity of close to 300. It is also blessed with the CEE Hospital which is situated in the town of Petrolia. This came about from the generosity of some of Petrolia's early citizens.

Lambton has the finest network of county roads and provincial highways that there is any place in the province of Ontario. St. Clair Parkway was created by this government some five years ago, and they are now operating several parks plus a golf course. They are hoping to construct a marina this year. The West Lambton water line, which will serve Sarnia and all down-river municipalities, including the village of Brigden, is well underway.

Several urban municipalities have plans underway to construct sewerage disposal plants which will improve our local environment. As most people know, municipal drainage is a big item in the county of Lambton and they have received two-thirds of the cost of these drains from the senior governments. The government of Ontario has also assisted our farmers in their farm water supplies, also in the capital improvements of farm buildings and tile drainage.

I did not mention earlier that Lambton is blessed with "Chemical Valley," which is situated immediately south of the city of Sarnia, and other major industries down-river that have supplied employment to a great number of Lambton citizens.

But it has brought problems at the same time. Most of the members of this House are acquainted with the problems of mercury in St. Clair River.

Of recent months we have been confronted with another problem—the disposal of by-products from chemical and other industries in the area. These have been disposed of in deep wells known as disposal wells. This has caused a great worry to the farmers of Lambton, and it is their contention that this could interfere with their farm water supply. I agree with the farmers' belief in this regard, and suggest that the government change this method of disposal, or guarantee to replace the farm water supply in the case that it should become polluted. I am sure the hon. member for Sarnia (Mr. Bullbrook) is in full agreement in this regard.

We have also many small businessmen serving Lambton, supplying employment for several citizens of the county. Due to the operation of our large chain stores, these businesses are in jeopardy. I would suggest that price wars such as we have witnessed here in Ontario within recent months are not for the good of the people but for the chain stores themselves, and in due course will put our small businessmen out of business and thereby remove the competition that now exists. Some form of government legislation should be introduced to prevent this happening.

The government is determined to assure the adequacy of our energy supplies for the future. It will ensure that the energy is used as efficiently as possible and that its use will not adversely affect the environment, health or life. The government will strive to maintain a choice between the various types of energy to match them with those uses for which they are best suited. To this end, the committee on government productivity has been asked to review the function, structure, operation, financing and objectives of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

The committee has also been asked to advise the government with respect to the long-range energy requirements of the province.

Ontario Hydro acquired land some five years ago in Moore township in Lambton county for the right of way around the Lambton generating stations in September, 1969. Some of these property owners were contacted by Hydro regarding settlement. I contacted the chairman of Hydro on January 25, 1971. He again promised to contact them, but to this date he has made no contact.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): I have not heard either.

Mr. Henderson: I would suggest Hydro have their toe nails trimmed enough to cripple them up so they might realize the position they are placing the farmers in.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Hear, hear. That is the first intelligent thing the member has said.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): It needs more than its toe nails trimmed. Did the member write that himself? Maybe Hydro had better get its hair cut too. That is a terrifying threat for Hydro, to have its toe nails trimmed. How about manicuring them at the same time?

Mr. Henderson: That is right. Does the member want me to repeat it? I would suggest that Hydro have their toe nails trimmed enough to cripple them up so they might realize the position they are placing the farmers in.

The Department of Highways has also served several farmers in Plympton township with expropriation intentions, without any guarantee regarding farm drainage. I am sure every member of this House realizes that drainage is a must in Lambton. It is my belief that expropriation authorities should have to show their complete intention before starting proceedings.

Three quarters of our soil is very heavy clay, most of which requires artificial drainage. Our expected frost-free days are approximately 140. We have an annual rainfall on an average of 28 inches, of which approximately five inches is snow.

According to the 1966 census we have 4,000 farms, of which 2,775 were listed as commercial farms; in other words, farms with over a balance of $25,000.

The population of the county, including the villages and towns, is approximately 50,000. In 1966, the agricultural income of the county was estimated at $54,095,000, of which $29 million was from field crops and vegetable production, and $25 million from livestock and livestock production.

In that same year, from the Canada Year Book, we note that the agricultural production of Prince Edward Island was $36 million; Nova Scotia, $55 million; New Brunswick, $53 million; and Ontario had $1,232,275,000. The total for Canada was $4,233,230,000. Ontario had 25 per cent of all Canada.

The riding of Lambton is also blessed with two Indian reserves: Kettlepoint in the north, situated on Lake Huron, with some of the best fishing and summer resort area in Ontario off its shores; Walpole Island Indian Reserve is an island in River St. Clair, connected to the mainland by a modern bridge which was officially opened last May 4 by the then Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme).

Walpole Island was also the first Indian reserve in Ontario to have self-government, due to their own initiative and their geographic location. Both of these reserves have a great future.

Mr. Speaker, there is one other matter that I wish to bring before this House. It is a matter of extreme importance to the members and to this Legislature. It is a matter which has more than often resulted in a great deal of doubt and confusion.

I make reference to the members of the two parties in the opposition to this government. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, one of the biggest difficulties is that certain—

Mr. Lawlor: Do not be inflammatory now. We are listening with anticipation.

Mr. Henderson: Now just listen!

Perhaps one of the biggest difficulties is that certain hon. members of the opposition are not too well informed on the rules. There is a saying that a biased critic will always find something to try to sharpen the edge of his tongue on, and especially so when he is ill-informed.

Mr. Nixon: That is what the member is doing, eh?

Mr. Henderson: It has been said many times that a good government requires good opposition. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, it is fortunate that our government has learned over the years to provide its own sort of opposition.

Mr. Nixon: Like the member.

Mr. Henderson: It would have been disastrous to have relied solely on the existing opposition parties.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): The member means liabilities; not opposition, just liabilities.

Mr. Henderson: In the years that I have sat here and listened, I have heard some—

Mr. Lawlor: It was only 44 votes was it not?

Mr. Henderson: In the years that I have sat here and listened—

Mr. Nixon: I hear the member lost a lot of Tory support because he insisted all the delegates support the Premier.

Mr. Henderson: Do not worry. We are very happy. I have heard the member's party say they wish they had him for a leader.

In the years that I have sat here and listened, I have heard some of the most ill-conceived and ill-prepared opposition material imaginable. I sometimes wonder if even they are fully aware of their intentions and objectives. I think not.

I suggest to the hon. members who are in opposition to this government that perhaps they should first of all bone-up on the fundamentals of basic opposing and get down to doing the job they are being paid to do. Perhaps then, sir, this fourth session of the 28th Parliament will prove more fruitful and beneficial to the people of this great province.

Mr. Nixon moves adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, we will carry on with the Throne debate tomorrow and we will all be waiting in eager anticipation for the Leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Nixon) hearty and enthusiastic support of that great speech.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at 4:35 o'clock p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 2, 1971

The House met at 10 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This morning, our early morning visitors are students, in the west gallery, from Nelles School in Grimsby, and later we are to be joined by students, in both galleries, who come from Eastwood Collegiate Institute in Kitchener.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce this morning that my department has produced a new and much-needed publication called "Fishermen", about mercury and fish. This 12-page booklet, which will be distributed to the members, provides concise and non-technical answers to frequently asked questions about this very important subject.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Can the minister tell us what he is going to do with the $25 million?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: For assisting us in this publication I would like to extend my thanks to The Department of Health, Energy and Resources Management, and Tourism and Information.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce the continuation of financial assistance in the form of interest-free demand loans under The Fisheries Loan Act, 1970, for the current year. Loans were made last year to fishermen on Lake St. Clair and in the Wabigoon River area as well as a few in southern Lake Huron, western Lake Erie and the lower Ottawa and St. Lawrence Rivers, where mercury contamination had required the closing of the commercial fishing seasons on important species of fish.

Loans will be made in accordance with a revised formula to be announced. Eligibility for loans will depend on the applicability of the Act during the current year and will be related to the availability of other forms of assistance. The continuation of The Fisheries Loan Act programme will mainly assist those seriously affected fishermen planning legal action against polluters.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.
Oral questions.

MERCURY CONTAMINATION OF LAKES AND RIVERS

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, further to the statement of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests, can he explain why no assistance to those game fishermen in northwestern Ontario was a part of his report? Does he have a special programme similar to the one that assists fishermen in the Great Lakes that would apply to those people who make their living either through fishing or sport fishing in northwestern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question of the Leader of the Opposition he is referring to loans to fishing camps, in that correct?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, people who have lost their business because of the mercury pollution.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Last year loans were given to camp operators where the sports fishing was closed, and the only area where sports fishing was closed last year was on Lake St. Clair for a period of about five to six weeks. Today no area in this province is closed to sports fishing. Those areas that are closed are closed to commercial fishing; some of the areas cover all species and some only certain species. Also, as the hon. leader knows, an announcement was made by my colleague the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) whereby fishing camp operators and other related businesses will receive loans. This was made, I believe, about two days ago.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Would it not be true to say, however, that in the sport fishing camps in northwestern Ontario, even though there is no designation that restricts fishing, the business has completely disappeared since the fishing-for-fun programme has been inaugurated, in which anybody who catches a fish up there is not supposed to eat it? Is it not true that many of the outfitters have completely gone out of business and in fact will not open this spring?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the statement of the hon. minister.

Mr. Singer: Which minister do you disagree with?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: It was quite true last year there were certain camp operators in northwestern Ontario who did have less business than the previous year. It was not entirely all due to the question of mercury. There was, of course, a certain amount due to mercury.

Mr. Nixon: The minister has talked to Mr. Lamb about this.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: However, I would like to say to the hon. member that at the Sportsmen's Show this year—and the hon. Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs, the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier) attended the Sportsmen's Show, and some of the Sportsmen's Shows in Chicago and other areas—the interest was very great and they are looking forward to a good tourist year.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the minister if he or his department has considered buying out those tourist camps that are in these fishing-for-fun areas—buying them out at a reasonable price so that they may relocate in other areas where the mercury contamination is not to be found at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to send to the hon. member a statement made by the Minister of Trade and Development a few days ago whereby assistance will be given to fishing-camp operators.

Mr. Nixon: Inadequate like the housing policy.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is not going to solve anything.

PROVINCIAL AUDITOR'S REPORT

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question, of the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Following the report from the auditor that he is not satisfied with the accounting of the disposition of funds during the last year in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, can the minister tell me what steps he is taking to correct this situation?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. That report of the auditor, I believe, was for a period of several months ago—the end of 1969, I believe—and was published last year. I have spoken to the auditor since I received the report and noted that, and I am checking with my own staff to see what steps have been taken to correct the situation.

I think the auditor was good enough to point out in his report that the department was a growing one—developing—and that some of the procedures were not as complete as they should be. We are taking steps to see that they are corrected. I trust his next report will confirm that.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Am I then to understand the reason for the inadequacy of the control of the expenditure is simply that the department was new?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I am not altogether certain, because the report was only made available a very few days ago. I think that is the reason. I think the auditor made some comment to that effect, but I have not yet completed my inquiry and got all the facts I should like to have. I know I shall have it soon and I am certainly of the attitude that if there were some failures in procedures in accounting, they shall be corrected.

REVISION OF OMA FEES

Mr. Nixon: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Health.

In his negotiations, either directly or through his advisers, with the Ontario Medical Association, has there been some discussion of the possibility of agreeing on a plan similar to the one negotiated with the medical profession in the Province of Newfoundland by the government of that province in which in certain instances, where payments to individual practitioners reach very large levels, there would in fact be a sliding scale reducing those payments?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary. Would the minister undertake to consider introducing that topic at the discussions that are presently under way on the establishment of a new medical rate?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Was there any discussion or negotiation with the medical profession in accordance with the obligations of The Health Services Insurance Act prior to the new schedule of fees going into effect?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am so advised by the previous minister, Mr. Speaker. I take care to use the word "discussions" rather than "negotiations".

Mr. MacDonald: Would the minister inform the House as to the nature or the result of those discussions?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well, the nature of the result was an assessment as to the basis of the new free schedule, the general policy purposes behind its amendments and an assessment of why different rates were being shifted and different fee burdens or different fee payments were being downgraded and others upgraded. As I say, their discussions were not negotiations as if it were a collective agreement.

Mr. MacDonald: A further supplementary: Was the department satisfied with the explanations that it got from the OMA?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I cannot answer that in detail, Mr. Speaker, but the new fee schedule, as I understand it, has some very good principles behind it. Namely, I am advised that there is an effort to shift the remunerations received through fees by doctors toward the family practice and general practitioners, at the same time allowing the fees of certain specialists not to reach the levels they have previously reached.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Two supplementaries, if I may: First, could the minister give an example of one of the specialties where the fees are not going to be as high? Just one?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, I cannot this morning. I have heard them mentioned but my vocabulary as of this point in the field of medicine is inadequate.

Mr. Shulman: Perhaps the minister would let us know.

The second supplementary, if I may: Does the government intend to pay the full schedule of fees beginning May 1?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, that will be an announcement of government policy to be made in due course.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

PICKERING NUCLEAR STATION

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

Can he give the House a further report on the development at Pickering? The critical point of the reactor has been reached; when can we expect first power, since it is already substantially behind the projected date when the project was announced?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, if the commissioning tests proceed normally, with only the usual number of problems encountered, we should have power in July.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Might I ask when the minister says "the usual number of problems," does he mean the usual number comparable to the type that we found at Douglas Point, or with a standard generator?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Some of these problems were encountered at Douglas Point; they are mainly mechanical problems. We hope to have full rated output at that plant in July.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition completed? The member for York South.

POTENTIAL EMPLOYMENT IN HOUSING PROGRAMME

Mr. MacDonald: In the absence of the Minister of Trade and Development, may I address a question to the provincial Treasurer?

How many more new jobs—new jobs—are going to be created by the government's housing programme?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): I think that is a question that should wait for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, since this is part of the whole economic development of the province and an integral part of The Department of Treasury and Economics, which is now my major preoccupation—and I look forward to it with some pleasure—I suggest to the minister that he, as the major spokesman for the government—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South—

Mr. MacDonald: —is not in a position to state how many more new jobs are going to be created.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South may raise it as a point of order or some point, if he wishes, but not by way of statement, because the minister may answer or not answer as he sees fit.

Mr. MacDonald: May I ask a further question? Can the minister explain the discrepancy between this government's contention that each new housing unit has a multiplier effect of 4.8 jobs, whereas the federal government, with jurisdiction over housing across the whole country, says that the multiplier effect is 0.7?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I read that statement in the paper this morning, Mr. Speaker. I would just make this comment, that those particular figures are quoted from remarks by the leader of the New Democratic Party and I would think that one would want to examine that particular quotation with some care before one commented on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the provincial Treasurer whether he is denying the fact that Mr. Andras contends that the multiplier effect is 0.7?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): On a different base.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I deny nothing, Mr. Speaker. I simply point out that those of us on this side of the House have tended not always to accept what the leader of the New Democratic Party, past or present, says is true.

Mr. MacDonald: A further question of the provincial Treasurer: Can the provincial Treasurer indicate when the tenders will be let for the private development in the government's housing programme and, secondly, when the new building construction will start?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is a question which should probably be asked of the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought this was government policy.

HYDRO RATE INCREASES

Mr. MacDonald: I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Mr. MacDonald: In view of the rumours with regard to the possible increase in hydro rates, can the minister assure the House that there will be a moratorium on the increases in hydro rates until the newly announced government study has been completed, with regard to Hydro, by the productivity improvement committee?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, the rumours to which the hon. member refers are the result of some remarks that were made at a recent Hydro convention to the effect that there would be an annual increase.

I would assume that the annual increase would be announced some time in the late fall of each year so I would assume that this committee, to which the hon. member refers, will consider hydro rates and all the ramifications of Hydro as indicated in the Throne Speech, before there is any announced rate increase.

Mr. MacDonald: Do I conclude from what the minister has stated that we can expect at least the initial report of the new review of Hydro and energy production and rates prior to next fall?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I do not want to tie down any dates or time when a report will come as a result of a review of Hydro. I would think that before any future hydro rate increases are put into effect, as mentioned at this particular meeting, that certainly the productivity committee will meet to consider all the ramifications of Hydro.

Mr. MacDonald: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the government at least—and preferably the House as well as the government—be made acquainted with the information that the committee gets prior to Hydro's announcing a rate increase or are we all going to have to come into the picture after the facts of the new increase?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I would assume that, prior to any new rate increases being put into effect, this committee—and I am only guessing really because this is government policy and timetables are certainly not final as yet—I would think that consideration by this committee and the steps that are to be taken as indicated in the Throne Speech, will have commenced. Therefore, I would assume that any hydro rate increases planned would be postponed, certainly, until that committee reports.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that is a very interesting statement. We will bear it in mind.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview has a supplementary?

Mr. Singer: No, a new question.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for York South completed his questions? If so, the Attorney General and Minister of Justice has the answer to a question asked yesterday.

CHARGES AGAINST OPP OFFICERS

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I received several questions from the hon. member for Downsview respecting certain charges that have been laid against two officers of the Ontario Provincial Police. While I did answer several of the questions—

Mr. Shulman: Incorrectly.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —there were particular areas where I think I undertook to provide further information and I wish to provide that information now.

First of all, I think the hon. member mentioned three officers. Charges under The Police Act have been laid against only two. I would assume the third officer the hon. member might be referring to was one, Wilkinson, in which there was—

Mr. Singer: Perhaps I could assist the minister. The third officer I was referring to was the one mentioned by Mr. Justice Grant in his report.

Mr. Shulman: Wilkinson.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, I looked at that very carefully, as obviously my predecessor did, and I could see, at this time anyway, no grounds for a charge under The Police Act in respect of that particular individual. There was some question as to the belief by the commissioner, I believe, of what that particular officer had indicated and, apparently, there was no way under The Police Act that we could find that a charge could be laid against him.

But charges have been laid against Superintendent Wilson and Staff Superintendent Rodgers pursuant to The Police Act. The charge against Rodgers is to be heard on April 6 and that against Wilson on May 3. As I indicated yesterday, these two men are still suspended from active duty but they are being paid during the suspension and until the disposition of the charges.

The delay in the bringing of these matters to trial arises primarily from the fact that the former government did not feel that it would be appropriate to proceed with these charges until after the completion of the inquiry and the publication of the report of the commissioner, the hon. Mr. Justice Campbell Grant. If my hon. friend remembers, the publication of that report took place, I believe, just before Christmas—around the middle of December anyway.

Mr. Shulman: This is April now.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sure that it will be apparent to the hon. member that the laying of such charges during that inquiry would not seem to be in the interests of the fair trial of those charges or the proper disposition of the inquiry either. After the charges had been laid and the matter had already proceeded toward trial, adjournments were sought by the two men themselves, through their own counsel, and the government of the day did not oppose those adjournments.

The former government and this government have not actively sought any of the adjournments, but we have not seen fit to oppose those which were requested by the accused themselves. As I indicated—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): What is the difference between the two governments?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: There are quite a few differences between the former government and this government. As I indicated in my answer yesterday, the charges will be heard before a county court judge pursuant to the regulations made under The Police Act. The question as to what charges should be laid against which persons and by whom such charges should be heard was first considered by my predecessor immediately following the disposition of the departmental estimates before the standing committee during the last session. But with the establishment of the inquiry, all of the decisions respecting these matters were postponed until the completion of that inquiry, for the reasons which I have just indicated.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the minister in light of his answer: Is it not true that charges were laid under The Police Act immediately after the conclusion of the hearing of the estimates of The Department of Justice, sometime last June?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am informed that the charges were laid before the inquiry but after the hearing of the estimates.

Mr. Singer: That is "yes". The minister answers "yes" to the question. Well then, if the minister will backtrack, why has it been necessary for the government to delay four months beyond the tabling of Mr. Justice Grant's report in dealing with these matters?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I thought I had just indicated that adjournments arose after the matter had proceeded to court trial; adjournments were requested by the accused's counsel themselves.

Mr. Singer: I see. Is it not true that the government passed the new regulations allowing the hearing of these charges by a judge of the county court only some time within the last six or eight weeks?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I will have to find out the actual date of the regulations for the hon. member. I have not got this information.

Mr. Singer: Is it not true that when the charges were originally laid they would normally have been heard, and could only have been heard, by senior officials of the OPP?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: At the time the charges were laid? Yes, that is true. It was considered, quite frankly, that senior officials of the Ontario Provincial Police should not be sitting in judgment upon senior officials of the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. Shulman: When did the minister get that change of heart?

Mr. Singer: Yes, there is no question about that. Could the minister advise us to whether or not these hearings scheduled to start on April 6 will be open to the public?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I will take that as notice. I have not considered that matter at all. My assumption had been that they would be open, or are to be open, but I had better check on that.

Mr. Singer: Yes, I think that is very important.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The innuendo there is that the hon. member thinks they should be open?

Mr. Singer: Indeed it is. Indeed it is. Is it fair to conclude, Mr. Speaker, from the remarks of the Attorney General—

Mr. MacDonald: The little man is having a big day.

Mr. Singer: —that the government has chosen to ignore the recommendations of Mr. Justice Campbell Grant insofar as charging a third senior officer of the Ontario Provincial Police?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. That is a totally wrong assumption.

Mr. Speaker: I think another supplementary on this from this member will be sufficient.

Mr. Singer: All right. This will be the last one. Is it fair to conclude that since the disciplinary proceedings are governed by a limitation period of six months, the government let that period slip by and now is unable to take action against the third senior police officer?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary.

Mr. Shulman: One question: Does the government intend to lay a charge of perjury against Mr. Wilkinson?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am considering a number of things arising from that report of the royal commissioner and decisions along this line will be announced in due course.

Mr. Nixon: Is that a threat?

Mr. Shulman: One more question in light of that comment: Does the government intend to lay any charges against any member of this Legislature?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: There are a few I would very dearly love to, but that is another matter that is under very active consideration.

Mr. MacDonald: That feeling is mutual.

Mr. Singer: The minister probably missed the limitation period again.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

DREDGING OF ST. CLAIR RIVER

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Can the minister guarantee this Legislature that the information picked up by his officials in their visit to Sweden indicated that the dredging of rivers to clean up a mercury situation is both feasible and safe?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I indicated a few days ago to the Legislature that I would give this hon. member or the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben), a summary of the information we have regarding reclamation methods. Certainly, I do not intend at this time to give a personal guarantee to the hon. member that such projects or reclamation processes will be effective. This still has an ingredient of experiment in it—it has never been tried before—therefore a guarantee at this time is certainly an unreasonable request.

Mr. T. P. Reid: May I ask by way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the dredging of the St. Clair River by the Ontario government part of a programme in which it is participating with the federal government to dredge that area, not for mercury but for transportation reasons?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the Ontario government at this point working with the federal government in dredging in the St. Clair River—specifically in the St. Clair River—but I could tell the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, that any dredging we do involving mercury will involve the federal government.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

PLANS TO OFFER DENTAL CARE

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

Will he explain what action his department proposes to take on the recommendations of the ad hoc committee on dental auxiliaries by the federal government that dental care in its broadest sense be offered to all Canadians incorporating the same principles of quality control and financing as medical care as soon as feasible; and more specifically, will they start this year with younger children and encompass new age groups on an annual basis until school-leaving-age children have all been included, and at which time they could include the whole population?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I think, Mr. Speaker, the government can accept the first principle completely, the key words being “when feasible.”

In the department at the moment there is under very active consideration acceptance of the second point made by the hon. member with regard to a beginning to be made with smaller children.

Mr. Ferrier: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if I could ask the minister if they propose to amend The Dental Technicians Act so that certain functions could be performed by the auxiliaries in the dental care field and if consideration is being given to the training of these auxiliaries?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, consideration is being given to these recommendations and also, of course, to the recommendations that have not been implemented in the report of the Committee on the Healing Arts.

At the moment the problem is to sort out how to control, and what bodies should control, the assessing of the particular medical-dental disciplines. So that is very much on the table. Consideration is being given not only to this question in relation to this particular discipline, but also to the whole spectrum of medical-dental disciplines.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question of the minister, I wonder if he is contemplating changes in the regulations governing The Health Services Insurance Act to ensure that dental disorders brought about by medical problems are governed by the Act?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The word “considering” is the key one here, Mr. Speaker. I think broadly that certainly we are considering the whole integration of dental care in a total health programme, and I come back to the beginning that the key words here relate to feasibility.

Mr. Deans: May I ask another supplementary question? Will the minister undertake to make a statement to the House during this session as to what specific proposals are likely to be undertaken in regard to ensuring that dental disorders as a result of medical problems are covered by the Act?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, I think I can undertake that.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

FUNDING OF HOUSING PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

Can the minister respond now to the question I asked him yesterday setting out specifically the new initiatives of dollars and starts in the housing programme announced in the Speech from the Throne?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, quite frankly, I do not deny at all that one could have said I was slightly confused by the figures.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I saw the handsome face of the Leader of the Opposition on television last night and he said it was a statistician's nightmare—and I agree. That is why I read the figures; obviously they are very difficult to follow.

I asked, if possible, for my staff to get me a set of figures that was more easily readable by those of us who are not as brilliant as some of those across the way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When I checked them this morning, Mr. Speaker, I found those figures are actually in the statement, but perhaps this will help clear it up a little more.

The amount of new housing money from the banks is $100 million.

Mr. Nixon: We heard that. The minister has read it before.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Certainly the member heard it; it is in the statement.

From CMHC—$210 million, which is in the statement.

From OHC—$222 million, which is in the statement.

The total amount is $532 million.

The opposition keeps asking if it is new money. It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that what they are trying to elicit from me is whether the $145 million, which is a hold-over from commitments made last year, can be considered new money.

If the Leader of the Opposition will read Hansard, he will find out that I told him at that time, in answer to his question, that $145 million is a holdover from commitments made the previous year. There is no secret about that. The fact still remains that half a billion dollars is going to be injected into the economy.

Mr. Speaker, if it gives the opposition any great satisfaction or if it will help them sleep better tonight that I say there is $145 million less—that it is not $532 million, it is $400 million—all right, let them say that. It suits us, so long as the job gets done.

Further, I wish we could pour $400 million or $500 million into the economy without using any of the Ontario taxpayers' dollars.

This business of trying to prove that we are doing a job merely by spending millions and billions does not give us any great satisfaction at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope that answers the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. To further clarify, then, from the information that the minister was able to give outside the House to the press yesterday afternoon, we are to understand that the new initiative of the department which he heads will result in 4,030 new starts not during the coming year, but during the period over which this programme will apply.

Does that mean, Mr. Speaker, if I might ask the minister, that the initiative that the Speech from the Throne referred to as a half-billion-dollar initiative creating 132,000 jobs, is in fact, on the part of this government, simply the establishment of a projected 4,030 new starts and the number of jobs associated with that would be very small indeed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is entirely wrong, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, even if the hon. member had read the press reports a little more carefully—and I do not have them in front of me—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Even if he had read the press reports correctly, he would have found that there are 4,000 and something new additional starts over the number of starts made last year. That is 4,000-and-something more starts this year than was made last year, which was a record.

Mr. Nixon: The minister did not expand it—he just put half a million dollars in it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that is just like saying you did $100,000 of business last year and if you planned on doing $150,000 this year you say to a business associate "we are only going to do $50,000 worth of business this year." That is ridiculous, and that is why you are over there and we are over here.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question: In view of the minister's statement quoted in the morning Globe and Mail that there would not necessarily be 132,000 new jobs, may I ask the minister how many new jobs there will be as a result of this housing programme?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did make that statement. Of course that is correct. No one said there were going to be 132,000 new jobs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister certainly gave that impression.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Read it.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): We read it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I will quote from the Throne Speech. Perhaps too many of the opposition were trying to read the French version and did not understand it.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister does not understand the English version, that is the trouble.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, using funds this will establish a potential for 132,000 jobs during the year.

Mr. Nixon: That is what I said. What about new jobs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It does not say "new jobs."

Mr. Singer: That is writing—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It does not say "new jobs" at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: In spite of Ottawa we are trying to save jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me answer the question. I want to answer the question for the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is deliberately misleading on the new housing programme.

Mr. Pilkey: The Attorney General would never have been caught by that one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, the minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, first, for the benefit—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First, for the benefit of the leader—

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: We are trying to save jobs, so that Ottawa is put out.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, nobody knows how many of the 132,000 jobs will be new ones. That is impossible to tell. Of course it is impossible. We do not know, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: So we are calling them 132,000 old jobs. What is the difference?

Mr. Singer: Why does the minister not read the first sentence?

An hon. member: Ottawa has eliminated jobs day by day. We are trying to save them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, nobody knows whether the person who is going to be employed next month on the new programme has been out of work for three weeks, four weeks, or one month. Nobody knows that.

An hon. member: Who put them out of work?

Mr. Singer: Come on. Phooey, phooey.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nobody knows it at all. And for the benefit of the hon. Leader of the Opposition, the apologist for the Liberal Party in Ottawa, these are precisely the terms—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —used by the federal Minister of Housing. May I read them, Mr. Speaker?

The hon. Robert Andars, federal minister responsible for housing, speaking in the House of Commons on February 10, 1971, indicated the federal government expected the national housing starts to increase from 190,000 to 220,000 in 1971.

In reference to this increase, he said in all, the new jobs—and he used the words “new jobs”

—created directly and indirectly simply by the increase in residential building activity added up to about 140,000 to 150,000 man-years. That is a very substantial part of the unemployment role.

That is the end of the quote.

Mr. Trotter: That is man-hours.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Mr. Andras was even using the word “new,” which I did not use because I did not think it was advisable.

Mr. MacDonald: They were new.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Those were additional jobs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet, the hon. member for Scarborough West yesterday said that they used a multiplier factor of 0.07. The NDP had better fire its research man.

Mr. Singer: Fraud! Bunch of phonies.

An hon. member: Under the two programmes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The 0.07 is part of the 4.8 per cent which is used by Central Mortgage and Housing—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now, why does the hon. member not listen? He asked the question. If he is interested in housing, he should listen.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He might learn something.

Mr. MacDonald: We are interested in the minister's questions on the issue.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have been learning something about it.

Mr. Deans: The minister knew nothing on Tuesday.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The 0.07 per cent is part of the 4.8 per cent which is used by the federal minister and represents only the actual on-site labour of the house construction component. That means windows and prefab stuff which is not made and produced on site.

An hon. member: Prefab stuff, is it 3.9 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it is not even that. What the member is talking about is 0.07.

Mr. Pilkey: The Treasurer should keep out of it and not put him in deeper.

Mr. Lewis: The Minister of Trade and Development had better take over as provincial Treasurer.

Mr. Singer: Please stand back.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, in this—

An hon. member: The members are awful noisy boys.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —very serious matter of housing and unemployment, the hon. members may claim I am trying to cover my ignorance by learning, but I am certainly not trying to cover it by laughing as they are.

An hon. member: The hon. minister has a lot to question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is very serious. I am waiting for the member for Scarborough West to get up and apologize for saying we were wrong in using the factor of 4.4. The factor of 4.8 is used by the federal government.

An hon. member: Apologize, oh, come on.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We use 4.4 because of the mix of the kind of housing in OHC and 0.07 is, as I say, only that part of it represented by only the actual on-site construction.

Mr. Lewis: I would be glad to get up but not to apologize.

An hon. member: Because it is Ontario welfare.

Mr. Lewis: The minister applied the 4.4 to 30,000 homes, which was a dishonest thing to do.

Mr. Speaker: This is sufficient for this debate because it is getting out of hand. I will accept no further supplementaries on this matter.

The member for Ontario South has a question.

ABUSE OF WELFARE SYSTEM

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

What steps is he planning to take to stop the abuse of our welfare system by some of our young people?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, this, of course, is a matter that has been in the press of late. Certainly it is a matter on which I have received much correspondence.

I would like to tell the members that I plan to meet with controller Paul Godfrey and John Anderson of Metro Toronto early next week to discuss this matter.

My thinking now is that some element of discretion should be added to the present legislation. Apparently, for good and just reasons, changes were made a year ago, but it appears that this had led to other abuses in the system and we are certainly considering changes.

I can assure the House that in any consideration of changes, the important principle will, of course, be preserved that anyone in need—in true need—will not be overlooked in any of our legislation.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): A supplementary question: Will the minister be able to answer my question 7 on the notice paper sometime fairly soon, so at least we can have the facts on the situation before we go into a crusade against 16- and 17-year-old kids in this province?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It will be answered in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: Does the minister intend to make any change which will prevent young people who are no longer living at home from going to school and still receiving welfare payments?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, Mr. Speaker, I think that to answer that I would say that some discretionary powers should be restored to the municipal welfare people so that they can have some discretion in this matter. You cannot just make a blanket statement that everyone over 16 still going to school and not living at home should receive welfare. I do not think that the people of this province want that kind of legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Timiskaming.

CLOSURE OF COBALT REFINERY

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour.

In what way was his department involved in the talks and discussions concerning the closing of the Cobalt Refinery?

Hon. G. Carton (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for his question. I was afraid I was going to be ignored over here.

Insofar as that particular matter is concerned, I will get the information for the hon. member. I am not personally aware of that particular matter at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kent.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker. How it is possible, even with the changes in the cabinet appointments, that an issue that has been festering in the northeast for several months—and the plant has now closed down—

Mr. Speaker: That is not a proper supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Well, how is it possible that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: It is not a proper supplementary question. I rule it out of order. The member for Kent.

SHIPMENT OF QUEBEC BROILER FOWL IN ONTARIO

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Is it likely that the Quebec broiler producers will be shipping broilers into the Province of Ontario to be placed on our markets?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I share the concern expressed by the member for Kent. I have heard rumours that this may happen. In fact, the regulations that are now in effect by the Ontario Broiler Producers Marketing Board simply provide for the sale of broilers within Ontario under marketing permits.

The rumours that I have heard, and which I assume may have reached the ears of my friend from Kent, are that there are certain producers in Quebec who may challenge that regulation and ship them in without the marketing permit.

There are other provinces in Canada that have been faced with the same problem. Their marketing legislation provides for seizure of the product within the province where they are to be sold.

In view of the fact that we do not have such legislation at present, I propose to introduce an amendment to The Farm Products Marketing Act which will make that provision. I propose to introduce the amendment immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired. It has been a very lively morning.

The hon. Minister of Trade and Development wishes the floor for a moment?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege and pleasure to introduce and welcome to this House two very distinguished visitors who are in the Speaker's gallery: the Japanese Ambassador to Canada, His Excellency Ambassador Shinyichi Kondo, and the Japanese Consul General Itaru Tsuge, of the Japanese consulate in Toronto who are in the Speaker's gallery. I am sure the hon. members would like to give them a welcome.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle presented the legislative assembly for the Province of Ontario report under subsection 2 of section 2 of The Fisheries Loan Act 1970 for the period commencing October 1, 1970 and ending March 31, 1971.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that Mr. Reuter, member for the electoral district of Waterloo South, and Mr. Rowe, member for the electoral district of Northumberland, be appointed chairman and deputy chairman respectively of the Committee of the Whole House for the present session.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I may say Mr. Speaker is exceedingly pleased, Mr. Prime Minister and Mr. Nixon, with this motion.

Mr. Nixon: In speaking to the motion I am just a moment late; I say even though I was not consulted in this I am delighted to accede to the Premier's motion and say that I wholeheartedly second it and it is a very wise choice indeed.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: House in Committee of the Whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Before I assume the Chair I would like to say to all hon. members that I deem it a very great honour indeed to accept the responsibility of being your chairman once again for the fourth consecutive session.

I want to thank the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Leader of the Opposition for introducing the motion which has put me in this particular position, and indeed I want to thank all hon. members of the House for supporting the motion. I can only say that it has always provided me with a great deal of pleasure to serve as your chairman at the table during committee.

I know that in the past I have perhaps made a lot of rulings which were not too popular and perhaps which were inaccurate on many occasions. I can only say to the members that I will endeavour to improve the quality.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves the committee of the Whole House rise and report and ask for leave to sit again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I cannot say "report progress" at this point, but I am sure I can very shortly.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the Committee of the Whole House begs to report progress and asks leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in reference to the Speech from the Throne, I want to say at the outset that I had hoped with the new Premier (Mr. Davis) our procedures might have been changed, modernized, so that he in fact would have taken upon himself personally the responsibility of putting before this House the programme and the goals of the government that he should be responsible for during the coming session. Instead we stuck with the time-honoured procedure in which the words were put in the mouth of His Honour the Lieutenant Governor.

I would say to you, sir, without detracting in any way from the honour and dignity of the gentleman or his office, I would hope at the next session of the Legislature that His Honour will come into this chamber with us all standing, perhaps with someone else accompanying him, and with the responsibility and the advice from his first minister, that he simply welcome the members and charge us with the responsibility of conducting the business, with the responsibility of raising the funds to pay for the business, and then with his usual cordiality and hospitality, leave the chamber, and leave it for the Premier to put forward the programme of the government of the day.

It is a small point, but I feel that the administration opposite is more entrenched in the appearances of tradition than the understanding of the real tradition, which is that democracy does move forward and that our method of government has, I believe, improved, become more efficient and must become more sensitive to the people.

I am prepared to recognize and to bolster and continue the concept of our government that the power resides with the Crown and the Crown's representative in this province. But the approach that has been taken in recent years which more and more emphasizes the tradition and perhaps empty pomp of the office of the Lieutenant Governor is one which I personally would like to see reversed.

Naturally the Lieutenant Governor of the day would have his own preferences, and these must be honoured. But my own recollection extends to an occasion when I sat somewhere up under the clock on an opening day when His Honour came in in a business suit; it happened to be the late Louis Breithaupt. All of us who from time to time attend in the Lieutenant Governor's quarters should examine the portraits—and they are excellent ones—hanging on the walls of each of the rooms of that fine apartment. There is one—I think an outstanding one—of Louis Breithaupt sitting in a business suit. In no way is there any dignity removed because he does not have a cocked hat with ersatz eagle feathers running down the back and the gold braid that is associated with the traditions of the royal prerogatives that were established here 175 years ago.

This is a personal preference, perhaps a prejudice, Mr. Speaker, and I wanted to put it before you.

There is the concept of loading the honourable gentlemen into an open landau and bringing him from the Royal York—I do not know how it got such status, he does not live there—up University Avenue in a freezing wind. There are no cheering crowds there; lots of OPP, I suppose, as is fitting. He comes up here, the cannon boom. I suppose there is nothing wrong with that, but surely, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when real dignity and real recognition of the position of His Honour would grant him perhaps a broader choice in the way procedures are undertaken.

I have the understanding, with the emphasis more and more on the traditions associated with these prerogatives, that one of the next steps will be the restoration of knighthoods in this particular jurisdiction. I was not thinking of "Sir Robert of Brant" so much as maybe "Sir Bob of Muskoka." I do not know; it has not got much of a ring to it—not the same ring as "Sir Darcy of Kent."

An hon. member: The duke.

Mr. Nixon: I have felt for a good long time, Mr. Speaker—perhaps that is not something that can be charged to the new Premier, but certainly to his new chief adviser, the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—that his main philosophical and political inspiration, if it did not come from his father-in-law, and undoubtedly much of it does, it really came from R. B. Bennett and Lord Thompson. I think that it reflects more and more the attitudes of this administration than the previous one.

This was made clear by the Minister of Justice (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) a few minutes ago in drawing the line of demarcation between the old guard and the new way. The attitude is really a reactionary one. I do not think that a Progressive Conservative need be reactionary and surely the Premier would agree with this, even though the Minister of Justice might not.

Mr. Speaker, I am not here to say that the lessons of history are not important and I would tell you, sir, that I have a great respect and understanding of where we have come in the democratic process—that I think that these traditions are essential and that sometimes history repeats itself.

I do not know whether you aware, sir, that it was just a century ago that an established, well-financed, deeply rooted political party, oddly known as the Liberal Conservative Party in those days, was defeated at the polls by the precursors of the present Liberal Party in an election which was essentially similar to the ones which we may face in 1971. The issues really were that a family compact had been re-established and that the will of the people had been overlooked because the government of the day felt that it had some divine right to order the affairs of this province.

A young man, Edward Blake, much younger than myself and much younger even than the boy Premier who sits opposite, was the leader of the Liberal Party in those days, the reform party, and stumped the province with great success. He had at his right hand as well a gentleman who went on to become Prime Minister of Canada—as a matter of fact he was briefly the Treasurer of the province—Alexander Mackenzie, and I urge upon you, sir, to examine, as I know that you frequently do, the portrait in the rotunda of this chamber and you will see that that Premier, Mr. Blake, the hon. Mr. Blake, thought so highly of his chief lieutenant that he had his visage included in the official portrait which was taken, or at least which was painted, with the background of these very desks.

It is interesting to note, however, that a century ago the problems of the province were similar, as far as politics are concerned, with the entrenchment of a well-heeled establishment party, a party that felt that it could do no wrong and that when it looked around at their political opponents it could see no one who could measure up to its high standards.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Liberal-Conservative establishment.

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): What about the Liberal establishment?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, this is the sort of blindness that comes with being too long in office and this is the sort of blindness—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: —that affects even the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) who, even though he does not understand the responsibilities of his department, is prepared to come into the House, sit in the front row, and defend what is really the indefensible.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Surely the point is that there are those who are prepared to say in support of the Conservative Party that even though the Conservatives are in trouble and that the new Premier had a substantial difficulty in grasping the powers of his office, still it looks as if they will be able to carry it over through these difficult times.

Another lesson that has come to my attention more recently, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the politics in other Canadian jurisdictions under these circumstances. The taxpayers in this province have been good enough to send me as an observer to a number of federal-provincial conferences over the number of years that I have been leader of this party, beginning in 1967. And during the last occasion—not the most recent which was supposed to be a closed conference but the one about a year before that—I well recall sitting in the galleries with others from across Canada who were there in the same capacity. On my right was an amiable young man named Gerry Regan and on my left an equally amiable and able young man named Dick Hatfield, and we were in the “peanut” gallery watching the movers and shakers of the nation sitting around the horseshoe table with their advisers nearby.

Mind you, it was a very educational process indeed but at the end of the first day, I remember, all of these men that hold the power of our nation in their hands, rising upon the motion for adjournment, and going out to have dinner with His Excellency the Governor-General, and Regan, Nixon and Hatfield went out around the corner to some greasy spoon and they talked politics while they sipped a cup of coffee or two and discussed the problems—

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Coffee or two?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, he was a Maritimer. That is right. They still drink a little coffee down there. We discussed the same kind of political problems that must have been imposed on Edward Blake as he looked at John S. Macdonald—the heavy financing, the entrenchment, the feel that these people cannot be beaten short of some revolution—and still we now know that within a few months Gerry Regan is now the hon. Gerald Regan, having turfed out the entrenched Tories in Nova Scotia; Dick Hatfield is now the hon. Richard Hatfield, having turfed out the entrenched Liberals in New Brunswick. The point is that there is a wind of change, similar to the one that blew through this province a century ago and it is going to blow that minister opposite out of his department—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: —and it will blow this government out of office and result in the election of a Liberal administration in this province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: There will be very few of the present ministers back to sit in opposition and the hon. Minister of Trade and Development will not be one of them.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): You want to bet on that one? There was not much applause on that one.

Mr. Nixon: The minister did not seem to be in favour.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): There were a few in the government back benches. The member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall).

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the whole subject of reform must surely capture not only our attention but our commitment, and as we examine the contents of the speech there is no doubt that reforms have been predicted in that speech and I expect they will be entered into.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): I am told we stole the member's platform.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Grand larceny.

Mr. Nixon: I am not prepared, Mr. Speaker, to be in any way critical of the hon. gentleman opposite who persists in interjecting. It seems difficult to get him stopped.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He will find it even more difficult if I keep on.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Why does the Premier not write another housing statement?

Mr. Nixon: It is 10 after 11. It is almost time for you to retire.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Are you not having a conference on tides at 11:15?

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development is fixing me with his glittering eye because both he and I know that the hon. Premier is going to go and meet our esteemed guests who are still sitting under the clock entranced by what they are hearing. But I do want to refer to the contents of the speech—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Unentranced.

Mr. Nixon: —and while the Premier seems to be sensitive to the charge that he stole good ideas from elsewhere, I say fine, that he can take all the ideas we have—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is tremendous.

Mr. Nixon: —because they are all good.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: He has undertaken the establishment of a department, The Department of the Environment, one that has been accepted by many other jurisdictions in Canada and been pressed upon the government by this party for a good long time. I welcome that. He has seen fit to allow the wheel to come full circle and put The Department of Transport, which never did amount to anything, back in with The Department of Highways. The reason for this supposed reform is that it will give the government, for once, a modern instrument by which urban transportation policy can meet the needs of the times.

But it is interesting, it is still under the direction of the seed merchant from Huron county, an estimable man but probably not as committed to the development of public transit as some others would be. He took over, of course, from his predecessor in The Department of Highways, who was a lumber merchant from Lanark county, an estimable man once again although I have not seen him in the House since it opened; he has been relegated to the rump of the Conservative Party, sitting over here with some of those who seem not to be in favour with the government. My point, Mr. Speaker—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I noticed that almost all of the members for eastern Ontario have been put over there, except for the new Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence).

But, Mr. Speaker, this approach to cabinet reform is inadequate. Regarding The Department of the Environment, certainly I welcome the idea that the whole approach to the improvement of our environment is going to be put in one department. But this is an old story; we just wonder why it was not done five years ago. The formation of a Department of Transportation and Communications involving highways is simply putting the administration back to where it was before the development of a separate Department of Transport many years ago.

The only other reform that is mentioned—and it is here, really, where there may be some improvements—is a commitment in His Honour's words that the government is going to start using committees at the cabinet level. We have heard of these before. I can remember the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) talking about his control of the Design for Development and that a committee chaired by the Premier himself was going to co-ordinate this approach.

One of the most serious failures during the last eight years has been the inability of the former Premier to whip his cabinet underlings into line so that in fact they could and would co-operate on such matters as planning, which the public relations officers translated into Design for Development.

I think that the substantial indication of the new Premier's approach to cabinet reform was the fact that he was able to get rid of four of the old ministers but felt constrained to replace them with seven new ones. I do not know whether that is a commentary on the efficiency of those who were dismissed or whether it was a commentary on the political requirements to bring certain people into the cabinet who had no other justification for such high office as far as many objective observers, including the Toronto Globe and Mail could see. I am not an objective observer but the reasons for replacing the four with seven new ones certainly remains a mystery.

Stepping further into the whole area of cabinet reform, I see that the former Attorney General (Mr. Wishart) has not quite left the chamber, and while I do not particularly want to single him out, I must say on my part that I have been delighted he has been given the responsibility of House leader. His well-known and undoubted reputation for fairness and understanding, and also perhaps his new position as sort of—I hesitate to say—a senior member of the cabinet is accepted on all sides.

Mr. Lewis: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: I remember—I should not really dredge this up again but it is part of the public record—The Globe and Mail once warned the former Premier that he had a cuckoo in the nest. I do not know whether the former Attorney General remembers that or not, but he seems to have lived down that criticism.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): A cuckoo in the clock.

Mr. Nixon: I think it is very fitting indeed that he did so. This leaves me also to recall that more recently The Globe and Mail attacked—in a most vicious and personal manner, I thought—the former Minister of Health (Mr. Wells), who is now presently the Minister of welfare, and said that he was “a clueless reactionary.” Frankly, I have a stronger feeling of agreement with that than I have about their former statement. But I suppose that more than anything else it meant the minister had to be at least removed from his responsibility in The Department of Health.

I am talking about cabinet reform as the government opposite has attempted to bring it about. Surely, it is sensitive to the feeling that is expressed not only in Ontario but in Canada and many other jurisdictions that it is essential that cabinets not be allowed simply to proliferate in their numbers without some plan and organization.

I noticed the picture of the new cabinet that was printed in most of the newspapers, and as I saw the men sitting around that long, long table I was struck by the fact that one end was so far away they seemed to sort of fade off into the fog. It was necessary for most of the newspapers to print a plan with the outlines of the heads of each man and a number in each, so that in fact we could identify the huge throng of people, having achieved this ultimate position, gathered around with fixed smiles pasted upon their faces—very similar to one that the Minister of Energy and Resources Management has fixed on his face now.

I felt that the new Premier, supposedly making new waves, had failed dismally; that there was no cabinet reform, that it was the same old game. And it is evident in the difficulties they have had in recent days in simply expressing the positions and policies of their departments. Perhaps one of the more important policy decisions taken by the new government leader was that there would be a big game of musical chairs and that people would have new responsibilities.

Only the Minister for Energy and Resources Management was able to have any continuity with policies that he had introduced, and I have felt that even he is having some problem legitimatizing the suit against Dow Chemical, and that is something that will be discussed a bit later in this debate.

The real reform, Mr. Speaker, must be predicated upon the reduction in the size of the cabinet itself: that there are obviously too many departments, there is a tangle in the lines of responsibility and the focus of the responsibility for administration. This is clear, not only in this House but to the people of the province who must deal on a day-to-day basis with this bureaucratic nightmare. Steps must be taken by this Premier or his successor to impose efficiency and a clear responsiveness in the cabinet of the province.

There is a second advantage in a reduction in the size of the cabinet. It is only a relatively small cabinet that can effectively decide priorities for the province; each minister in this proposed small group should be able and willing to comment effectively on the policies of his colleagues. We must get away from the present order of government, whereby each minister simply defends his own growing empire and agrees, for self-protection, never to interfere with those of his colleagues with similar responsibilities. This kind of free exchange essential to the hammering out of basic decisions on the direction of policy is necessary if modern government is going to be responsive.

Instead, under present circumstances it appears that the cabinet becomes bogged down in trivia, that ministers are concerned only with the expansion of their own direct area of government. This expansion has resulted in a public service of close to 60,000 employees, not counting the additional 23,000 employed by Ontario Hydro. We feel that an approach to a committee system is an important one, but I will be dealing with this from our point of view, by way of Liberal policy, a bit later in my remarks.

One of the recommendations put forward by the productivity improvement committee of the government was that legislative assistants should be bought forward to assist those ministers who have fairly extensive and large departments to work with.

This was one of the recommendations that was not accepted by the government opposite, and I think the reason is obvious. Because, as I counted, there are only nine private members of the Progressive Conservative Party elected to this House who do not already have separate and extra responsibilities and emoluments under this government. It would not be possible to find enough back-bench members to appoint any of these special officials.

Many of these who are not part of the administration have been granted important positions, like the former Minister of Energy and Resources Management, the present member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett), who just last week was appointed as second vice-chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway. If the Premier is going to continue with an extension of the old patronage policies that were so much a part of the previous Conservative administrations, then obviously cabinet reform is completely beyond his abilities.

I want to say something a bit more about The Department of the Environment since the minister has seen fit to remain in the House. While he has not received this appointment as yet, it is generally understood, and in fact hoped, that he will be designated as the minister of the new department, and that when it comes to matters involving mercury pollution we will not have to listen both to the Minister of the Environment as well as to the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) and some others, when we get information about this area of the infringement of our environment.

We welcome the appointment of this department. I do, however, want to talk about what should be his main thrust as he takes over the new duties.

Mr. Speaker, you may perhaps recall, and I believe attended, the conference on Great Lakes pollution called last fall, in which representatives of most of the jurisdictions around the Great Lakes attended at the Science Centre in Toronto in an effort to co-ordinate our approach to improving the environment in the Great Lakes basin.

I have described on other occasions the expense that came from the public purse in order to make this an important conference. There were banners from floor to ceiling with the crests of Ontario and other jurisdictions. One felt that he was attending the Sportsplatz of Nuremberg because of the grandiose approach to the conference itself. Everything that money could buy by way of meat and drink was provided, but unfortunately the approach to policy was completely inadequate.

There were two people in attendance at that conference who, I felt, were significantly aware of the crisis that we face in the environment in the Great Lakes basin. The one was Governor Milligan of Michigan, who went back and was re-elected, and the other was our own Minister of Energy and Resources Management, soon to become the Minister of the Environment. It was from those two gentlemen alone there came any grasp in their own remarks that this conference could, in fact, respond to the crisis situation in the pollution of the Great Lakes and take some action.

As a matter of fact, Milligan got up and objected to the communique which had been passed around among the heads of governments, or their representatives, and said—I can only paraphrase his remarks, Mr. Speaker—that it was essentially meaningless and did not reflect the crisis situation which we must face in the Great Lakes basin.

To his credit, the present Minister of Energy and Resources Management, in his remarks and in one of the papers that was provided for his use, indicated clearly that we could accomplish nothing unless some of our own provincial powers—call it sovereignty if you will; the word does not apply properly to the province—was handed over to some impartial and international body which, in fact, would become a legal tribunal, able to enforce its judgments and having application in the Great Lakes basin. His proposal was shot down by the former Premier of the province. He said, in his own statement, that there would be no thought of anything but co-operation, which was simply one way of saying that we were not prepared to accept the jurisdiction of an international body in this regard.

I felt that the former Premier substantially failed not only the people of this province but the people in the whole area of the Great Lakes. It was on his initiative, responding to the urgings of myself as Leader of the Opposition, accepted by the present Minister of Energy and Resources Management, which called for the conference in the first place, and it was his lack of leadership which degraded that conference into simply political window dressing for himself and other politicians from other jurisdictions.

It was a shame and a crime that from that conference did not flow some kind of an international organization, such as the International Joint Commission, which would have powers to act as a legal tribunal and enforce their findings on those jurisdictions which come under their control.

I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, that unless we do this we may very well lose the quality of life that we have in the Great Lakes basin and, in fact, we are not serving the citizens and the taxpayers in our own province. If you think of the basin, it can be relatively easily set off with specific geographic markings; it would involve all of the land which is drained into the Great Lakes system. It has one of the highest populations and one of the most rapid population growths of any area in North America, in fact in the world.

I would predict that it will become the richest area in the world within the next 20 years. It is the area in which we live, and unless some specific action is taken other than what has been done in recent years, then even the development of a Department of the Environment will be nothing but a wasted window dressing in preparation for just another election campaign.

I am prepared to grant, Mr. Speaker, that the minister who will take on this responsibility is probably the one man in the Conservative ranks who can take this leadership. He was shot down by his former chief, the present member for London North. It remains to be seen whether the new Premier will support this sort of initiative or, in fact, treat pollution and the environment as just another political issue which maybe does not seem to be as important as it was last year. I would say to you, sir, that this is the issue, political or otherwise, which we must face between now and the end of the century, and probably from now as long as man infests the earth.

We still have no legislation allowing or requiring the Attorney General to sue polluters on behalf of groups of people whose livelihood has been adversely affected. There is this famous $35 million suit against Dow but we must be clear that this government's suit is not on behalf of affected fishermen and the fishermen have no legal right to the proceeds from that law suit. It was made clear by the minister whom I have been praising in recent words, that those fishermen have the right to sue Dow Chemical themselves, and it was made clear by the present Attorney General that the real effect is against the fish in the Great Lakes system and maybe the fish ought to sue, or some irresponsible light remark like that—which I am afraid is indicative of the attitude that the front bench of the government have been exhibiting with the possible exception that I have brought to your attention.

Mr. Speaker, we also urgently require legislation allowing class actions for environmental pollution. There has been no indication that the government is prepared to extend technical assistance to individuals suing polluting companies and agencies, to ensure a proper balance of competing interests. You are aware, sir, and I believe you visited the premises with me some years ago, of Barney Lamb's Ball Lake Lodge, you perhaps recall that? Here is a man who has spent many thousands of dollars—$200,000 I am told—of his own funds in preparing a suit against the mercury polluters in northwestern Ontario. There has been no action on the part of the government; no assistance on the part of the government.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, visiting that particular location about 1965, I believe—I am not sure of the year—when we saw the setup that he had in one of the most beautiful remote lakes in northwestern Ontario, Ball Lake. It was a huge tourist outfitters establishment. He maintained a fleet of about 25 aircraft so that from that particular point he could fly those people who could pay for his services into the recreational areas of the great north of the province.

It appears that Mr. Lamb will be out of business because there are signs all through the area, euphemistically saying, "fish for fun." What it means is that these lakes in one of the most remote areas of this huge province have been polluted—I would say irreversibly—by mercury and that, in fact, these people are not prepared to go up there simply to fish for fun, pull out the trout, the whitefish and so on and simply to take them off the hook, realize they are riddled with mercury pollution and throw them back in. Those people are out of business and the government has done nothing to assist them.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that the head of this new department is going to have to take many more specific actions. I recall him almost splitting the top of his desk about 18 months ago when he said "the polluters must pay" in reference to Dow Chemical, which company was then in the headlines associated with mercury pollution. He now says the polluter must pay and they have entered into a $35 million lawsuit. Without any special legislation associated with this everyone predicts that it will be somewhere between two and 10 years before any judgement is entered into.

It appears to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is the best thing that has come to the legal community since legal aid. All we are going to have is suits at every level of court, and without the initiative associated with upgrading some international tribunal we are never going to come to grips with this huge and growing problem.

We are informed that the government has given many industries deadlines for the installation of antipollution equipment. As a matter of fact, I well recall the minister getting up in this House and saying that he had placed his personal order on Dow Chemical that they should lose no more mercury from their processes. And yet, in an interjection here yesterday, he informed the House that mercury was still being lost from the Dow Chemical plant in Sarnia and polluting the Great Lakes system and, specifically, the St. Clair River. I find this unbelievable, incredible—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Very little.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, very little? Oh, well.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It is down from 40 pounds a day to less than one pound.

Mr. Nixon: Less than one pound? Well, Mr. Speaker, 40 pounds a day to some people might have been considered very little pollution. Certainly it was considered as no pollution by this minister until it was discovered that in fact mercury, a stable metal, does not simply sink to the bottom of the water and stay there and that we can forget it, but that it methylated and polluted the whole of this important waterway.

The minister's activities in this regard have been obscure, difficult to understand, particularly when he says pollution is continuing, that he is suing for an extra $10 million in order that the government might clean up the pollution but that he himself, surely, cannot be sure that any means exists to safely clean up the pollution by mercury.

We should immediately provide tax incentives to industry to recycle products such as used automobiles, appliances and paper where the technology already exists, and intensify research efforts where technology is not yet available. We ought to build immediately a prototype municipal waste reclamation unit. I have heard Alderman O'Donohue in Toronto talking about this, arguing with others on the city council that it cannot be done.

It might be difficult for Toronto city council to do it, but the Minister of the Environment should have, as one of his projects, the establishing, at provincial expense, of a prototype unit to show municipalities what can be done not only to effectively get rid of these solid wastes but to recycle them so that those useful components will not be lost and so that the energy associated with the burning can be put to useful purposes.

We had a pollution conference. It was staged, with great expense and fanfare. Nothing came out of it. Nothing at all came out of it that was useful. If the minister thinks that his appointment can be directed back to that, then let him say so. But all that has happened is that it is expected the conference will continue in the jurisdiction of Michigan in a few weeks.

I, frankly, have more confidence in the Governor of Michigan in making this thing meaningful than I have in the former Premier or the present Premier of this province. I hope that I will have an opportunity to attend that conference when it is called. But this is not the only conference, of course. This government has had a tendency, over the years, to use a highly stylized, expensive, public approach to take the heat off it when the public demands action.

We had a municipal conference in which the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) called representatives from the municipalities across Ontario into the same great hall at the Ontario Science Centre. Once again, no expense was spared. The minister's and the Premier's speeches were well scripted, if not well prepared, and a minimum of 10,000 copies printed with the crest of the province embossed on the front of the speech and handed out to anyone who could be persuaded to grab hold of one.

But still, aside from one catch-phrase from that conference, nothing was accomplished. The phrase was "a new partnership." There is a tendency for even the most jaded politician who hears these public relations approaches to policies so often, to say, "Oh, the public relations boys have been at it again." Yet I sense that this phrase, "a new partnership," somehow came as a natural emanation from what everybody knew must be the cornerstone of the approach that this government in this Legislature must take to the municipalities of the province. "A new partnership"—I like it. I think it is something that we must strive for. A new partnership that emphasizes the autonomy of our municipalities.

In The Department of Municipal Affairs—and I regret that the present minister and even the previous minister are not here—there are some substantial problems. The present Treasurer, the member for the Chatham area, had had that ministry for, I believe, about three years. Somehow or other everything he touches in politics seems to disintegrate under his hands. During his short tenure he decided to centralize assessment, and it is his responsibility as the Minister of Municipal Affairs, not of the elected politicians in the municipality, to set the assessment on the properties of our community. This has developed untold difficulties. It has increased the expense by a factor of 10.

There are many small towns and bigger jurisdictions in the province that had their assessment in order in years gone by, but now find that there is property left off the rolls, that the assessment is late and they are losing tax funds because of it. It is obviously a serious problem to all concerned.

It was a mistake on the part of the former minister. He also undertook a reassessment with the broad approach that everybody would be paying a fair and equitable contribution to the cost of local government. This has developed into a nightmare; so much so, that because of the experiments in reassessment in about five municipalities the former minister had to get up in his place and say that he was postponing reassessment until sometime in 1973.

Of course, all this means is that as a political issue it was a killer and he had to put it on ice until he hopefully would have a chance to return after an election and go ahead with what is certainly a job that is not in the best interests of the taxpayers.

The same minister has been responsible for in-tr-a-cabinet warfare in the planning field of the type that is completely incomprehensible. I have already referred to the fact that the former Premier could not keep his three chief planning ministers in harness and that the Treasurer and the Minister of Municipal Affairs were arguing about these planning responsibilities under the cover of cabinet solidarity. We could see the steam coming out from under the cover and the fists coming up through the cover from time to time, and it was generally accepted in the public service that there would have to be a showdown between the Treasurer and the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Well, the showdown eventually came when the cabinet was reshuffled. The former Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton), with a tired look on his face, has decided to stay on for the time being. He has been moved considerably away from his new chief whom he, more than anybody else, I would say, was responsible for placing in office. It looks to me as if the former Treasurer lost that battle.

It is interesting that the former Minister of Municipal Affairs is now the Treasurer and he has taken over that other arm of the planning responsibility; he must see it now from the other side of the coin. It would be interesting indeed to hear his frank assessment of just what the other side of the planning coin looks like.

But I am trying to point out to you, sir, that in The Department of Municipal Affairs over the last three years we have got into an unholy mess and that the responsibility lies entirely with the present Treasurer, who seems to have a knack for disrupting everything he touches, whether it is politics or a government department. I refer to centralized assessment and reassessment, the warfare over planning and last, and probably most important, the chaos in the province resulting from his imposition of regional government.

I want to say something about this because I think that now the problems are coming home to roost. This morning in The Globe and Mail the headline is "Niagara Regional Government is Called a Failure." It has been going one year. Yesterday in The St. Catharines Standard: "Regional Government Review Urged to Halt Further Deterioration." I read the first paragraph from this article:

St. Catharines aldermen are hoping that a well-prepared 50-page brief will spark provincial government action on the inequities of Niagara regional government.

Another clipping from The St. Catharines Standard dated March 23, 1971. The headline: "St. Catharines Defers Bid to Secede From Niagara Region." The first paragraph:

Niagara region received another reprieve last night as city council rejected a bid to secede from it in favour of a personal audience with Premier William Davis.

I well recall the debate in this House when the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator) got up and pleaded with the government opposite to postpone the imposition of regional government. He is a former warden of the county and his experiences were such that he said this programme would not work; he pointed out that it would elevate costs; that the government's approach to changing the fiscal basis for regional government was inadequate; that there was no provision for proper policing, and he predicted at the time that the bill would give rise to a regional government which would not work as planned.

He asked for a postponement of a year or six months. We voted to hoist it for six months until such time as further research could be done upon it. The government, with the support of the NDP, bulled the bill through and now the problems are coming home to roost.

We have seen similar articles referring in detail to the problems of the Lakehead amalgamation. It is not really a regional government, it is an amalgamation. Ottawa-Carleton has municipalities which have been in the courts over the last months to determine what responsibility a small rural municipality has to contribute funds to build sewers and waterworks in another municipality far removed from themselves. This is the sort of chaos that has been introduced into municipal government by the present Treasurer, the former Minister of Municipal Affairs.

It is based on the kind of approach which is associated with another layer of government, resulting in high costs. It is also based on the political philosophy of the administration opposite, which is surely that centralized decision is the best and that the imposition of these reforms is the only way that they can be accomplished.

This, we as Liberals totally reject. We predict to you, sir, that the chaos that is presently visible in the regional governments and some other governments at the municipal level, is just the beginning unless this government moves in an entirely different direction, and this I trust will be the aim of the new Minister of Municipal Affairs. I think that the minister has taken over an unholy mess—

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): That is right.

Mr. Nixon: —that the former minister was like a child in the kitchen, grabbing at everything and throwing it around in some puerile effort to "leave his mark on the face of Ontario." I guess essentially that he is going to do that, but it is going to take a Liberal government to get municipal affairs back in order.

We have heard many speeches, Mr. Speaker, on the advantages of regional government. Believe me, they are very difficult to determine now that regional government is in operation in at least five areas of the province. One of the advantages is supposed to be to consolidate and strengthen the borrowing powers of the municipalities. In my view, Mr. Speaker, it should be the function of the government of Ontario to undertake the borrowings of the municipalities, in which case it is not necessary to regionalize it.

We have heard it said that unless planning is put on a regional basis it cannot be meaningful. In my view, there should be a broad plan for the whole of Ontario arrived at by the government with the advice of the membership of this Legislature and with communication and consultation with the people of the province. Into this broad plan can be fitted the official approved plans of the municipalities at the smaller levels, or at the county level, or at the regional level, in the regions which are now established, and in this way we can accomplish the purpose much more effectively and with a much closer association with the people who are concerned.

The third thing is that unless there is regional government you will have the inequities associated with the distribution of assessment. One municipality may have many manufacturing plants or businesses and the tax return from that large assessment would accrue only to that municipality; therefore regional government must be imposed so that all can share in the distribution of this largesse. In my view, the distribution of funds is important only in paying for education costs.

The Liberal answer is to transfer the cost of education, at least to the extent of 80 per cent, to the tax base of the whole province and this obviously will negate the argument for regional government on the basis of assessment. I believe our experience is that the advantages of regional government are very few and are overcome by the disadvantage of high cost and confusion, which has been the experience of regional governments already established. The imposition of another layer of government is not working well. Certainly this province, this government, the government of this province, has to provide leadership and initiative in the improvement of municipal government.

I would call to your attention, sir, the experience of a group of municipalities in my own constituency, known as the county of Brant. It is a small county, admittedly. It has the city of Brantford with a population of about 70,000 right in its centre. But through the kind of co-operation and public spirit that politicians at the municipal level seem to be able to exhibit, we now have in that county, county-wide welfare, county-wide planning, county-wide police and fire protection, a county roads committee and it was county-wide assessment before it was centralized by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Surely this approach, emphasizing the counties or the counties with additions and subtractions of certain municipalities, if that appears to be in the best interest of the citizens concerned, is the approach, rather than the imposition of a rigid formula of the type that the former Minister of Municipal Affairs has handed on to his successor.

Certainly groups of municipalities will always want to undertake studies to improve the efficiency of their own local government, and the government of Ontario must stand ready to finance those studies.

The city of Brantford and the county of Brant have requested for many months that The Department of Municipal Affairs assist in the payment for such a study. It was not until about three months ago that they finally got the approval to go ahead with a study in their own right to solve their own problems in a manner which was not imposed by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): It is the same in Oxford.

Mr. Nixon: My hon. friend says it is the same in Oxford. My hon. friend, the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Good) knows that in his particular area, which is the next regional government experiment, there have been many millions of dollars spent on studies in an attempt by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and his predecessor to consult with the local people. I hesitate to raise this again, but you know that even though these millions of dollars were being spent the minister responsible for housing was still prepared to go in there 24 months ago and carve out of that community 7,000 acres—which is going to be a new town—without consulting with anybody.

Surely this shows that the government opposite does not understand the spirit of consultation, nor do they understand what a new partnership with the municipal government must be. They have failed the municipalities and they know as well as I that this is going to be an important primary political issue in the election which we face, and from a political standpoint I can thank the present Treasurer for making this a political issue. Not only has he created chaos in the municipalities, but he has done the same thing in his own political party. I believe it was the present House leader, one of the few members of the cabinet here listening to my remarks, who got up in his own constituency and said "Yes"—and I paraphrase him when I say this—said, "Yes, we are going to have to cool Darcy down. There is not going to be much more regional government."

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): And he nods "yes".

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I would only wish to say that was a very extravagant paraphrase.

Mr. Nixon: But essentially the truth. And I would say to you, sir, that not only has he created chaos in the municipalities, but that the new Premier, when he came in, made haste to change him out of that department and get him in the role of the Treasurer so that perhaps some repairs can be made before we go to the polls. I have a premonition, however, that the new Treasurer will carry on with his inimitable personality in the same way in his new capacity as he has in his old one, that he is already rattling the sabres of a separate tax system when he goes up to Ottawa to speak to those people who are usually referred to as "my good friends".

He rattles the sabre of a separate tax for income; he says that perhaps we should cut up the provincial tax base and allow the municipalities to levy sales taxes, separate gas taxes, separate income taxes even. It looks to me that the great innovator is going to create chaos in the fiscal basis of our province just as he did in the municipal basis and just as he has in the Tory party.

An hon. member: The great destroyer.

Mr. Nixon: The great destroyer? Not that. He is certainly a political millstone and it is one of the unfortunate aspects of the recent leadership convention that because of his Uriah Heep opportunism that when he was finally counted out by the delegates to the convention, instead of doing what his colleague, the member for Lincoln (Mr. Welch), did and saying, "My delegates are free to do as they choose," he went over and placed his arms around the former Minister of Education and said, "That is my man".

For a person watching that on television it really was shattering. I thought we had got away from that years ago.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Great move. The Liberals never do that.

Mr. Nixon: Right. We do not do it. The member is right. Certainly it was old-fashioned politics of the type that the former Minister of Municipal Affairs understands.

Mr. MacDonald: The Liberals do do it.

Mr. Nixon: The interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that with all of the fanfare associated with that, the delegates—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: The members opposite are making a lot of noise since there are only about six of them there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: The interesting thing is that the delegates themselves were offended at this approach and it almost was a failure. As a matter of fact, it would be interesting to note if we had some sort of a magic time machine and could push a button for an instant replay, and this time let the former minister let his delegates vote the way they wanted. I think the new Premier would have had more votes than he got. He would have won by 50 votes instead of 44.

Mr. W. Hodgson: I would not worry about that.

Mr. Nixon: The member has got a lot to worry about; he has some real worries. I say he particularly had better worry because the new Premier is not going to be accepted in the member's constituency.

Mr. W. Hodgson: He sure will—and the cabinet too.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): As a matter of fact the member will not be, since he took his stand on regional government.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Want to bet on that?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I know that you are anxious that I proceed with a commentary on the reform of the cabinet, which was referred to in the Speech from the Throne and which I think is of some substantial importance.

A third priority, as far as the Liberal party is concerned, would be the establishment of a new department combining at least two of the old ones, known as The Department of Social and Community Services. It would combine the existing Departments of Health and Social and Family Services, and probably the area of the Provincial Secretary dealing with citizenship.

Only with responsibility for the full range of health and social services centred in one organizational structure can we deal effectively with the enormous administrative and management problems that we now have with those programmes. How can we have a comprehensive policy for health care in Ontario that maximizes the efficient use of our scarce resources when homes for the aged are the responsibility of The Department of Social and Family Services, nursing homes are licensed by The Department of Health and hospitals are the responsibility of a quasi-independent body, the Ontario Hospital Services Commission?

The answer that has been suggested by some is the interdepartmental committee. But the history of these committees, particularly as controlled by the present administration, which now has abandoned the Legislature entirely—not one of them is in his place—is a bad one.

I want to deal with this in some detail, because I feel that The Department of Health has been foisted upon the new administration in just as bad a mess as The Department of Municipal Affairs. I ask you to think about this, Mr. Speaker. The problems in co-ordinating OHSIP and hospital services are obvious to everyone.

It was announced many months ago by the then Provincial Secretary that they were going to be integrated in a new approach to efficiency. Of course, nothing has been done. As a matter of fact, even then his timetable put a time of about two years on the final integration and rationalization of this complex series of operations.

Anyone who sends their premiums in directly and personally for hospital and medical insurance knows what a fiasco this is. We are billed four times a year for each one; that is eight separate billings. The bills arrive in separate envelopes; they are correlated by separate computers. We, as citizens and taxpayers, have to sign our cheques to pay for the premiums very carefully and make them out carefully, because one is payable to the Treasurer of Ontario and the other to something called HIRB, the Health Insurance Registration Board. Heaven help you if you were to include both cheques in the same envelope, because the computers would simply break down and you would probably lose your coverage for one or the other, or both, until your member of the Legislature phoned somebody and had it set right. This is obviously a mess. It is an important matter, but it is not a matter of high policy because it has already been accepted by the government opposite; they do nothing about it.

The second problem is the shortage of hospital beds. I come from a community where there is no shortage. The planning by the local municipality and the local hospital board has been excellent over the years and we are well provided with the most modern facilities. But one certainly cannot say that for anybody living in the metropolitan area of Toronto. For an emergency situation there is a waiting period of three weeks, and for elective surgery one might as well come up to Brantford and have it done because the situation is that bad. We used to read about those problems back in the years right after the war—before 1950—but, if anything, it is worse now than it was then.

Little or nothing has been done to use government funds and initiative to establish a clinic approach to the practice of medicine. We have seen doctors moving out of small communities—and why should they not—and going into the larger centres to practice individually or in co-operation with some of their colleagues. After all, it is much easier because they can actually arrange for some time off; they can take a month off in the winter and go south or take a month off in the summer and have a holiday. I have no objection to that; after all, why should they not? They are among the highest-paid people in the province. Surely they should have an opportunity to enjoy their gains.

But this government should have some programme so that this clinic approach can be established in the rural areas as well, because we have to have more effective leadership.

There is a third problem, that of double billing. The government has not yet come to grips with this, and I personally am fortunate in having available the professional services of doctors who do not double bill. For example, I have a daughter who gets regular injections because she is allergic to bee stings. She goes up every two weeks and I never get a bill. And that is the way it should be. I pay high premiums.

I am not asking for services that we do not require, but there are many doctors—and, Mr. Speaker, you know this—who make a fetish of charging some additional small fee, maybe 10 per cent—maybe it is not so small—and they either get the money directly from the government or insist that their patients be billed separately for it. And I call it a fetish because I think it is meaningless. It is associated with the ridiculous argument which surely was laid to rest about 1963, that it would interfere with the doctor-patient relationship.

I will tell you what interferes with the doctor-patient relationship, and that is when you get a separate bill for services of a normal, regular, routine variety. This double billing is something the government is going to have to deal with.

The high cost of doctors is another. I am not concerned that doctors are overpaid. I simply want this government to realize its responsibilities when our own law, our own statute, says that we must pay whatever the Ontario Medical Association decides. We must have some means not just to discuss but to negotiate with the doctors' professional organization.

I am here to say that I believe the doctors and the medical profession would welcome this. An example is what has been established in Newfoundland. They do not often set an example for us, and yet I read from a headline in the Toronto Star of four days ago: "Newfoundland Doctors Agree To Limit Income."

There is nothing startling about this other than that the government of the province has met with the professional people and worked out a rational programme, accepted on both sides, so that the public service is going to be maintained and the costs are going to be held at a proper level.

We must recognize that the doctors are perhaps, I would say, our most important professional people in the community. This has got to be recognized in every way, as well as in their remuneration; but surely this government cannot lie down like a young pup with its belly up and be walked over by every professional group within this province. I think it is essential that we do this.

The high premiums themselves are, I guess I am up to five, the fifth serious problem in The Department of Health. You have heard the litany of the fact that we in this province pay the highest Medicare premiums of any jurisdiction in Canada, and you have heard frequently from our side that even the funds payable by the government of Canada are not properly applied to our Medicare programme in a reduction of direct costs.

Our approach is that these costs go on a phase basis, and I use that phrase—you may call it a weasel phrase if you want, but it cannot be done all at once—and that these costs be transferred to the tax base of the province. After all the premiums I pay, it amounts to, eight times a year, a very inconvenient tax and a very high tax indeed. We feel that we should accept the approach that it is a service that is paid for through taxes and those people that have the money pay more than those people who do not have the money.

I am supported in this by the member for Quinte (Mr. Potter), the former chairman of the health committee and the present Minister without Portfolio. I hope to goodness that his conviction in this matter has not been destroyed simply because for some reason not clearly understood he has been taken into the cabinet as a Minister without Portfolio.

I would say further that my conviction and contention is supported by the Minister of Health himself, because he recently said that in his view such a transfer should take place. I quote from the Toronto Daily Star—I really should mix up my sources a little more than this—but the Toronto Daily Star of March 19, 1971 in the body of the article I read as follows, and I quote:

Davis put a damper on Bert Lawrence's recent proposal to finance Ontario Health Insurance schemes from income tax revenues rather than premiums. Lawrence said earlier this week he hoped the government would drop the premium method of financing within a year or two.

So there is support on all sides. The NDP do not support that contention. I am sure that when the opportunity comes for their spokesman, they will want to stick with premium financing.

Mr. Singer: They want to support the government. They have confidence in the government.

Mr. Nixon: Well, they can do that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Very weak!

Mr. Nixon: It may be weak, Mr. Speaker, but it is not as weak as the position put forward by the NDP.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: This might be a reasonable occasion, when the member for Oshawa (Mr. Pilkey) is here, to say something about this because I have said publicly, and just a few days ago in the presence of the hon. leader of the NDP himself, that I felt his elevation to the leadership of the NDP was as important politically for me and for the Liberal Party, as the selection of the Premier to head the Conservative Party.

I say this, we do not often talk politics here, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: No, no. The whip does not like it.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Rather rare.

Mr. Nixon: —but with the range that you give us, sir, I just want to say something about that. I think it is a matter of substantial importance. I have been asked what do I think is so good about it, and I can simply point to the fact that objective polls have shown the bottom is dropping out of NDP support. Back prior to 1967 they had 27 per cent of the support—at least it dropped to 19 at that point—now they say it is down to 14 per cent; and I attribute this to a number of things.

Mr. Trotter: Eleven per cent!

Mr. Nixon: Certainly one of them is the leadership they now have.

Mr. Speaker, it is in bad taste to indulge in personalities, but I must on this occasion because I would say to you that I have the highest regard for the leader of the NDP, both in his ability and as a person, so do not say I am attacking that man. I am simply saying to you, sir, that the people—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just sounds like it.

Mr. Nixon: —of the province are not interested in either encouraging or supporting an alternative which they see—

Mr. Pilkey: The Leader of the Opposition made a better speech last year.

Mr. Nixon: —which they see as a radical alternative. The leader has a number of problems. I read from the Toronto Daily Star of February 24: "Waffle Candidate Says NDP Stephen Lewis Interfering with the Party". I read from the Toronto Daily Star January 21, 1971: "NDP Win This Year Would Surprise Morton Shulman."

I read further from an article in the Toronto Daily Star January 13, 1971, written by Sally Barnes. I quote two paragraphs:

Asked by a member of the audience what chance NDP leader Stephen Lewis would have defeating Davis at the polls, Shulman said "pretty small". Reminded by reporters after the meeting that he had predicted at last October's provincial NDP convention that the party would win the next election, Shulman said that opinion was based on the premise that Walter Pitman, not Lewis, would win the leadership.

I quote from Ron Haggart's column of January 22:

The question was put to Mr. Shulman: "What would your reaction be if the NDP won the next election?"

Answer by Mr. Shulman, "Surprised".

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: I read also from the Toronto Daily Star of March 17 and the headline is: NDP POLICY BOOKLET CALLED DISHONEST

A policy booklet outlining the NDP's platform for the next provincial election was denounced as a dishonest betrayal of socialism.

A second paragraph.

At that convention Penner said the party took a decided turn to the left.

Mr. Lewis: Who are Steven Penner and Morty Shulman anyway?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the hon. leader of the NDP said who is Steven Penner; he is the man they have been attempting to nominate in Dovercourt.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: They have had two abortive nominating conventions, the last of them ending in fisticuffs, sir, and even—

Mr. Lewis: And there is a third scheduled; imagine the possibilities.

Mr. Nixon: If there is a third scheduled, or whatever the word is, Mr. Speaker, it looks as if the leadership of the NDP is trying to nominate Steven Penner who considers the NDP policy booklet a dishonest betrayal.

Mr. Pilkey: The Leader of the Opposition did a much better job last year.

Mr. Nixon: The reason the member for Oshawa has not been here for the last day or two is that he has been down in Detroit picketing the headquarters of the UAW.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: One of the most interesting newsclips I have seen for a long time on television was the tense, drawn face of Gordon Woodcock—Leonard Woodcock—the international president of the UAW and the member for Oshawa's boss, as his picture was taken as he drove his limousine through the picket lines into the headquarters of the UAW office.

Mr. Pilkey: Very responsible, very responsible man.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): What a disgrace.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it is a fact, is it not. And
Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pilkey: One of the leaders in American—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Woodcock, like the management man he is, and just like I have seen managers of plants and the presidents of plants who say: "Well, we must go into our premises in order to carry on the business, you know", and so as he went through one of his employees went up to the rear end of the car and pasted on a sticker that said "scab." You know that word.

I must say that I did have just a few of these press clippings gathered together. I thought they might be of use, and I have not got too many of them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have a few too.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I would not say he was well prepared but—

Mr. Nixon: But you see, I have said that the member for Scarborough West's election as leader and the policy stands taken by the NDP were just as politically valuable to me as the election of the new leader of the Conservative Party—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member is home free.

Mr. Nixon: —because it really means that the Liberal Party is going to win the next election.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have heard people say the leader of the NDP is not a radical—and perhaps he is not, but certainly his party has a radical stance—that the section which he controls does not control the party, that there is a group—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Ask him if he is a radical?

Mr. Lewis: I think so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There you go.

Mr. Nixon: There is a group called the Waffle group which imposed the policies of nationalization of resource industries, and nationalization of the automobile insurance industry.

Mr. Lewis: I am never sure.

Mr. Nixon: I have a quote from the Toronto Daily Star once again, March 17: "NDP would take over gas firms." I am just here to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I think this is appropriate, that the NDP have the right leader. Their policies are correct for a third party. Why have a third party which is not offering this sort of an alternative? They are now led back where the old CCF was back in the days of the Forties when they almost won an election.

The member for York South, of course, was endeavouring to bring the party into the centre of the road where there was some opportunity of political viability and success. He advised the delegates to that convention, you will recall, Mr. Speaker, not to vote for anyone who was either a radical or had a radical image or for policies which would move the NDP beyond any possible chance of getting the support at the polls. Unfortunately the party did not follow his advice. And for that reason I would say that the NDP support has dropped the way I have indicated in the polls that I have expressed to the House.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): What about how the Liberal support dropped from 1967 to 1970?

Mr. Nixon: I do not know; you rely on the leadership of the UAW. Certainly if I were to dig out that column about the member for High Park—maybe I should.

In that same column, January 27—

Mr. Lewis: The government is over there.

Mr. Nixon: —the question "What is your view of the influence of the labour movement in the NDP?" was answered by the member for High Park. "Of course the labour movement is the backbone financially and member-wise." So you see, you have got a fairly restricted base. But I should depart from—

Hon. Mr. Davis: A restricted financial base?

Mr. Lewis: Very.

Mr. Pilkey: Very restricted.

Mr. Nixon: Restricted to labour support. However, we will no doubt have that discussion. Now the Premier is back; of course he has his own problems. The leader of the NDP has to contend with the Waffle group and the interesting thing is, of course, in the NDP the Waffle group is the biggest section of the party.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on.

Mr. Nixon: The member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk) supports the Waffle group—

Mr. Lewis: He does not. Now do not attack his integrity when he is not here.

Mr. Nixon:—and it is a very, very difficult problem that he has. But you know, the Premier of Ontario, the leader of the Conservative Party, has to cope with the Lawrence-ites. We well recall that in the days immediately following that great evening, and believe me, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Morning.

Mr. Singer: That was the night the machines would not work.

Mr. Nixon: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was morning. I was there. I can tell you.

Mr. Nixon: There was a tremendous interest and concentration, and we would see the people representing the television, thrusting their microphones into the face of some charming little lady and saying, "How do you feel now that your husband has lost?" I had the great sympathy, and perhaps I was sensitized as much as anybody to the crass approach that some of the newsmen took, and had the greatest admiration for those charming ladies who would give an answer probably worthy of or better than the answer that their politician husbands came up with.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): How did you feel the time you lost?

Mr. Nixon: I know. That is why I say I am as sensitive to this as any of you might be. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the former Treasurer once or twice felt that he would like to have been a candidate himself because he could really show them how to do it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Never.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: It did not even cross his mind.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He probably could have—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Very good candidate.

Mr. Nixon: After the decision was taken there was a small lull over the weekend and then in the front page of the Toronto Daily Star there was the second man standing on snowshoes looking out with his glittering eyes, and the cleft in his chin saying: "Bill Davis better clean out the deadwood or the Tory party is going to be beaten." Was that not his quote?

An hon. member: Yes, yes.

Mr. Nixon: The deadwood is still there. There is a certain amount of rearrangement. However, the new Premier, the new leader, certainly wanted to paper over these problems as quickly as possible and I was here sitting almost in my place during the swearing-in ceremonies—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Two rows back.

Mr. Nixon:—in which the present Attorney General was brought forward as the Premier's chief lieutenant, the man who was going to have position second to none in the new administration.

Mr. Nixon: Well, second to one, in the new administration. And I thought, well that is politically required and a good decision.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have a whole lumber yard back there.

Mr. Nixon: Then we come in here, Mr. Speaker, for the opening of the House and we see that really the Treasurer's decision has paid off; that while the House leader is sitting on the Premier's right as is proper—

Hon. Mr. Davis: As a matter of fact, it is on my left.

Mr. Nixon:—his chief adviser is Childe Darcy, the man who has wreaked chaos in at least two departments and is really the main destructive force in the Conservative Party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was over there, the House leader was here last time.

Mr. Nixon: All right, I am just pointing out to you, Mr. Speaker, the way it appears from here, the way it must appear in the province and most important the way it must appear to that large number of people at the convention who did not vote in support of the present incumbent.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): You see through a glass darkly.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Take whatever comfort you can.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there are one or two things I wanted to refer to. I think it is very doubtful I will finish these remarks today. But I did want to say something about the other leadership candidates. Not specifically here, but it is as good a time as any.

The present Minister of Health is not in his seat, but I had a great deal of respect for him as a candidate, because he was one of the few people who was prepared to open up with the Tories and with the people of the province and talk about the problems of modern government. He pointed out, for example, that there had to be a review of Ontario Hydro policy, which has been accepted by the government, by the Premier, and this we applaud. But in his rationale for his statement, he as a candidate said there was not enough information available to the members of the cabinet to justify the rate changes that were imposed by Ontario Hydro.

Now forgive me for seeming to quote him. I simply give my understanding of the essence of his remarks, and this was in direct contrast to what had been put to this House many times by the former leader of the government, supported by the present leader of the government, that in fact they were in continuous consultation, that they were prepared to substantially bolster this policy. I felt that his contribution was an important one to modern democracy, that he was not prepared simply to walk around each issue time after time, never grasping a hold of any of them—he was prepared to say something of a meaningful nature.

I should not leave these remarks without just referring to the present Minister of Education. I was particularly interested in what he was doing as a candidate. He took the other extreme and refused to talk policy at all. That is all right. Probably he had assessed his own chances and knew what they were. There was a chance that he could win, particularly if there was a substantial hangup, as there really was, in which they might look for an alternative.

But the interesting thing really was that a good many of the people employed in the government and by the politicians over there thought of him as their candidate because they knew that he would be around long after the dust had settled, to fight again—and I think that is fine, and they want to be around to fight again too. Their insurance policy was the Minister of Education and he served a tremendously useful purpose.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That does not make sense.

Mr. Nixon: Yes it does. It makes eminent sense. But as a result of this, the change that we have is something less than a new way. Up until last year, we had the former Premier and Treasurer sitting in those two chairs. On occasion I would call them white-lipped and trembling, because the Treasurer would get up and tremble when he talked about his dealings with the government of Canada, and it seemed so appropriate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Enough to make anybody tremble.

Mr. Nixon: We are going to have to now, as we take part in the debate—it is great when there are other people here—but frankly, the former Treasurer has been moved a little bit far out of the main rank. We are looking here at the Premier obviously and his left-hand man, the Treasurer now. Once again, there is a certain similarity that you may not be able to see over there but we can see it here. I do not want to refer to it other than to say that Alan Eagleson has noticed some of these—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: But there is a great similarity and there is a great difference. I wish he were here now—I truly wish that he were here—because the members would all be able to see it. On the one face there is a smile, a friendly smile of sweet reasonableness and, on the face that is absent, there is that scowl that has become associated with the political personality of the Treasurer and which has been so destructive in the Conservative Party, in The Department of Municipal Affairs, in planning in this province and now I predict in our relationships, fiscal and otherwise, with the government of Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was discussing my views of cabinet reorganization as an introduction to my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Was that accepted at the member's policy convention? I know your educational policy was not.

Mr. Worton: What position does the Premier hold on that?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think that once again the Premier is substantially misinformed.

Mr. Trotter: Very much so.

Mr. Nixon: There may be another occasion when we can debate the Liberal Party pronouncements and I would welcome it. But I do want to move on, hopefully, to complete my remarks in only one sitting, although I cannot guarantee that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Single school system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier has interjected "the separate school system."

Hon. Mr. Davis: I said "single."

Mr. Nixon: I want simply to say to you, sir, that our position has remained unchanged and will remain unchanged. We believe in the extension of public support to the separate school system and we await with interest any statements or comments that the Premier might make when he says, time and again, that we have never given an official response to the separate school trustees. We will wait for that, because we know that the Premier has the matter under careful study and as soon as Mr. Goldfarb tells the government what to do, it will do it.

I want to refer to at least one other area of cabinet reform and I intend to refer to this again in the unemployment debate that is scheduled for Monday. That is the need for the establishment of a department which I would choose to call "Construction and Supply". It in fact would build the roads. It would therefore have about $600 million to deal with in building and maintaining each year.

It would also have the responsibility for the erection of all public buildings and, depending upon the year, this would amount to another $200 million.

It would also have the responsibility for purchasing for all government departments—and I say all government departments. Frankly, I would extend its services so that we could centralize a good many of the purchases in The Department of Education and The Department of Health as it affects the facilities out across the province.

I feel that such a department, while it would not itself make policy, would for the first time give the government a fiscal instrument in which they could apply this kind of leverage to the economic cycles in the province. I am going to refer to this on Monday.

I am not just sure of the schedule of that debate. If I only have 10 minutes, I will have to do it more hurriedly than I am now, but I think that is extremely important.

I did want on this occasion, however, to refer once again to the problems of centralized purchasing that have been experienced by the government offices. The Treasurer was the author of the programme. In my years of experience, I have heard him rise in his place as Treasurer and say that the idea had no merit and reject it out of hand. I heard him rise 18 months later and say that it was a good idea and would save us $10 million the way he was prepared to administer it.

I have heard his statement on the acquisition of staff and I notice that he was not the one who made the statement when the top echelon of that staff was either dismissed or was severed from the government service under rather strange circumstances just a few months ago.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Will the member show me those statements some day?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I will do that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Send them over.

Mr. Nixon: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to quote briefly from an article in The Financial Post of February 27, 1971, by Philip Mathias. Mr. Speaker, I quote about four paragraphs and the first one is this:

By its own admission, the government could save at least $10 million of taxpayers' money through centralized purchasing, which is used at least to some degree by most provinces, states of the United States and big cities. The main obstacles to centralization are fiefdoms, such as the Ontario Provincial Police, which stubbornly refuse to come under the central purchase and supply umbrella.

Purchase of vehicles has been centralized under The Department of Highways. However, both the OPP, the largest single purchaser of passenger cars in the government, and The Department of Correctional Services refuse to buy through Highways, believing their own car purchasing system to be superior.

Purchase of drugs has been partly centralized under The Department of Health. Correctional Services, however, does not buy through Health when a doctor prefers to prescribe brand name drugs for his inmates.

The Department of Education under Minister William Davis, which is one of the biggest printing buyers—

I think he means the department—

—is particularly notorious for going its own way with printing purchases—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are really some errors in that statement.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, the minister will have an opportunity to enter the debate. But, Mr. Speaker, a final quote from The Financial Post:

Financial Post asked one deputy minister why such chaotic purchasing could be tolerated in Ontario. "Poorer provinces such as Saskatchewan need the economies of centralized purchasing," he said. "We are a little wealthier in Ontario."

Mr. T. P. Reid: What is $10 million?

Mr. Nixon: This is the kind of policy, as Winston Churchill would have said, up with which we will not put. Now if the Premier wants to make a new wave—and he is yet to do so—it is in areas such as this where, beyond talking about economy and efficiency, he can effect economy and efficiency.

I want, Mr. Speaker, to refer next to The Department of Education. I do not intend to change its name but I will broaden its scope to include University Affairs and Correctional Services. I feel that until we begin looking at correctional services as an emanation of our education responsibility, that they will not be fulfilled properly.

We believe that such a large department would not be unwieldy as long as the minister did not feel it was his responsibility to interfere with the direct day to day administration of any of the organizations or facilities that came under his direction. The government can say what it likes about that. When we get to discussion of the estimates of The Department of University Affairs, if we ever do, we can talk about ministerial interference.

We are concerned with cost cutting. I mentioned just a moment ago centralized purchasing which, I believe, would save $15 million if applied by a Liberal administration. It will not save anything until you people take it up seriously.

In this area the present government, led by the Premier when he was Minister of Education, has taken a meat axe approach to the control of the cutting of education costs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member does not support that?

Mr. Nixon: All right, let me finish my remarks please. I feel very, very strongly about this.

Before I got this job I used to be a classroom teacher. I say that now with some hesitancy because this is an area of some sensitivity since the leader of the government opposite is trying to provoke a confrontation with those people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, no?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition would like to.

Mr. Nixon: Right, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that in my experience I have had to conduct classes in chemistry and physics with 46 young people there trying to do experiments. This is the sort of thing we are heading for if the government continues to apply a meataxe approach to the cutting of education costs.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Nonsense.

Mr. Nixon: Now I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that we can make substantial cuts and if they have to involve a change in the pupil-teacher ratio I will support it. I think we can cut costs in other areas, even our commitment to OISE—and frankly I do not feel that we can do away with educational research. I have a certain degree of a difference of opinion with people very close to me in this connection. But I think it is essential that we maintain a degree of responsible and reasonable research, not the commitment that has been made over the years with those people working in that $60-million building on Bloor Street—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member want a larger commitment?

Mr. Nixon: —and is wasting millions of dollars. Surely this is something that we can improve on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nonsense.

Mr. Nixon: But I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, in the areas of administration, construction and support that are directly under the control of the Minister of Education, and therefore under the control of the Premier, we can accomplish real savings without downgrading the quality of education as it occurs in the classrooms.

The teachers have a heavy responsibility, not only as citizens but as people on the scene in education. Not everyone knows what that is like. They have to see that in their professional and personal capacities they bring every pressure to bear on the government so that the quality of education is not infringed. But I would say to you, sir, that the threat on the part of the secondary school teachers to walk out of their teaching responsibilities on May 3 is totally irresponsible and has nothing to do with putting the kind of responsible pressure on the government of the day that is required.

Surely we do not have to embark on some sort of government by confrontation in this regard; we, as members of the Legislature, can direct the pressures from the community on the government opposite so that in the words of one of the editorialists, "the fight to reduce school costs is a fight that the people are not going to lose, on matter what the pressures." That was well stated.

Mr. Deans: Was that the Toronto Daily Star?

Mr. Nixon: That was The Globe and Mail. But, Mr. Speaker, the pressures of abandoning the kids in the classroom surely is one that does not fit responsibly in this situation.

I have referred to a number of changes in the makeup of the cabinet of the province; I have indicated previously that I feel rather than the 21 departments with—what, up to 25 ministers now, or 23?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Twenty-three.

Mr. Nixon: Twenty-three. In order to direct the affairs of this province we should reduce the ministry to about 12. There are many over there who will say, "The body of work simply could not be done." But I accept, and have stated it previously, the contention of the committee for government productivity which said that a minister with a large department can have the assistance of someone elected in support of his party as a parliamentary assistant, or whatever the name would be.

I have pointed out already, I think in the Premier's absence, that the reason he cannot do it is that all of his members already have jobs. There are only nine over there who do not have some special—perhaps not responsibilities, but certainly emoluments which are the direct gift of the politician sitting opposite.

Mr. Lewis: No, they should not have.

Mr. Nixon: That is why the new Premier cannot undertake the kind of reform I am talking about. I want to talk about The Department of Energy and Resources Management. I have already spoken about the environment. Perhaps I would leave that area for another day because there is one area that I do want to deal with before concluding my remarks. That has to do with the Premier's department itself.

I think he is interested in "pulling a Trudeau," if you want to say that, and making the Premier's department the nerve centre of government, which I believe it should be. I think we are not here to debate the merits of the previous administration or particularly the outstanding abilities and some shortcomings of the previous Premier, but I believe one of his failings was that he gave too much freedom to the cabinet ministers who should have come more directly under him. I have already referred to the problems that the province has suffered in the whole field of planning.

For this reason I believe that the planning function and secretariat must be centralized in the Premier's department. It cannot be left to the Minister of Municipal Affairs just because he has got the community planning branch. It cannot be left with the Treasurer even though, in his estimates a few months ago, he called himself "the chief planner of the province." It cannot be left with him.

On the other hand, it simply cannot be coordinated by a simple committee with the Premier himself as its chairman. We have tried that. It does not work. The planning secretariat and the functions must be directly responsible to the Premier and no one else. Here is an area where I would second a member supporting me as a legislative minister, if you want to call it that, not as a minister of planning, but who would have specific responsibilities in this area.

This area of planning is tremendously important. I will not refer too extensively to it at this time. I have already said that one of the reasons for imposing regional government—that it would give a broad planning area—we can reject as long as the government of this province is prepared to accept its responsibility in two ways: First, to have a broad plan for the whole Province of Ontario, similar, I would say, to the Toronto-centred region plan—I reserve the right to be very critical of that in a moment—but similar to that, extending over the province. If one wants to regionalize it in three or four areas, I would not mind.

The second responsibility is that when a municipality or a county or a region does satisfy itself that it has a plan which it wants to have classified as official—and many of them pay many hundreds of thousands of dollars for these plans—then the government of the day must recognize it, once it is approved, as official and not require centralized approval for all of the decisions that are associated with these plans in the municipalities around the province.

In other words, there can be a broad plan into which the municipalities' official plans will fit. And at that point whoever is responsible for planning at the centre has "hands off" and the locally elected officials—the mayor, the reeve, the corporation or the planning board which they appoint—have the power to make local decisions as long as the government is informed. They do not have to wait until the government sees fit to pick up that particular piece of paper six months later and start discussing it.

In this broad plan for the province, it is my feeling that more than anything else we have to designate growth areas which, in fact, will decentralize the growth in Ontario away from this particular area.

The biggest criticism of the Toronto-centred region—and it has been brought forward very successfully by the leader of the NDP—is that it contends not only that this area will continue to grow but that it will grow at a greater rate both in population and industrial concentration than any other area.

I think we must reject that. We must set up growth points around the province that in fact will decentralize this sort of growth.

I remember very well a statement made at a Liberal policy meeting held in Ottawa by John Reid, MP for Kenora, brother to another very effective and knowledgeable politician we all know.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: Who would that be?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): What is his name?

Mr. Nixon: His statement was that we in northwestern Ontario cannot accept the complaints of you people down in Toronto that the Americans are dominating our industrial expansion and our business responsibility simply because we are not prepared to forego the influx of capital from any source in northwestern Ontario." He said there is only one way that can be made meaningful and it is if the government of the province undertakes a policy and a programme of real decentralization. Then we can say, "Let us have stringent regulations, review boards and development boards which will in fact encourage the Canadian aspect of our business and the management of our business."

Mr. Pilkey: How would the Liberals carry out decentralization?

Mr. Nixon: I will tell the hon. member.

Mr. Pilkey: All right.

Mr. Nixon: He made a point which I think has great validity in this continuing debate, because in this broad plan of the Province of Ontario we Liberals will enact there will be the designation of growth points which in my view should be the centres of electrical and gas power in this province. That means that at Nanticoke on the shores of Lake Erie, which is now farmland—I have visited the place; many people have visited the place—there is one of the largest electrical installations of fossil fuel in the world under construction. It is going to cost a minimum of $800 million when it is completed.

Now that area is obviously a prime point to be designated for industrial growth. The government, under Ontario Hydro is building large dockage facilities and unloading facilities. There will be sewage disposal, there will be water facilities, there will be rail sidings, highways must be built; and there will be a plan for the development of new communities, although that is not so essential. But surely, if you think of that; and think of our commitment in the Bruce Peninsula; not only at Douglas Point, which is miniscule compared with the Bruce power station which is going to be the third largest atomic plant in the world when and if it is completed.

It is going to have major dockage facilities right on the Great Lakes. It will have to be equipped with the same sewage disposal, water facilities, rail sidings, everything that a growing industrial community must have.

Think of Lennox, down near Kingston. The minister from Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps) is not here. I would like his views on this. Here is a major oil-fired installation in the eastern part of the province, and there are at least two locations in the north to which these remarks also apply.

Now these should be the centres of industrial growth. Our party policy would not permit us, and I would not lead it into this sort of a policy, to say to any industry that wants to expand or locate here: "You must locate at A or B; at Nanticoke or Lennox, or Lambton."

Mr. Pilkey: How would the Leader of the Opposition decentralize it?

Mr. Nixon: All right; but public funds, with our initiative, and using the development scope of Hydro, which is going to be borrowing $1 billion a year at that rate, starting in 1975, can set out these facilities which can be so attractive they cannot be rejected by growth industries.

That is the way it can be done, that is the way the Liberals will do it.

Now the spokesman for the NDP says it cannot be done.

Mr. Pilkey: I did not say that it could not be done. I just wondered how they would do it.

Mr. Nixon: He is either prepared to throw up his hands or to take the socialist approach and say industry must be directed. Well, that is it.

Mr. Lewis: That is what the Tories have been doing for 10 years. There is no difference.

Mr. Nixon: So, Mr. Speaker, this is the form of plan that we must accept, and a Liberal government will accept.

Mr. Lewis: There is no difference.

Mr. Nixon: The member says there is no difference. He will have to vote for it! Actually, he does not have to vote for us.

Mr. Lewis: Okay; I will not.

Mr. Nixon: Very good; there is one vote lost.

Mr. Deans: It is not lost.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the other area which I think deserves expansion in the Premier's office itself is the whole area of foreign influence on our economy and culture. This is a substantial issue. I feel the present Premier has made it an issue and has in fact rejected those of his colleagues who were prepared to argue with him. I can remember well the story in the newspapers, and I wish I had the appropriate clipping, referring to the member sitting up in the back row there, the former Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall); I do not know what the headline was, but the paraphrase was these candidates for leadership are going to have to come down to earth when the campaign is over. In other words they are going to have to reject all that political promise stuff. The result was that they were elected and now that minister is sitting up there; in a place where he would rather be, I guess.

Mr. Trotter: The greatest thing since sliced bread.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Singer: Whatever happened to their education programme?

Mr. Nixon: I think it would be unwise if the instruments of the implementation of the Conservative policy in this regard, when they get one, were to be left to the tender mercies of any minister, but I would say least of all the present Minister of Trade and Development. He has been making speeches recently. It sounded to me as if he was using his predecessor's speech writer. His jokes are not quite as good yet, but the approach is much the same.

In this area, Mr. Speaker, I believe the control must be at that centre of responsibility, the Premier's office. There may come a day when we will be complaining the Premier is spending too much money and building too big an office, but I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, that one of the criticisms of the previous administration was that there was not this kind of control, that he was prepared to say to the Minister of Trade and Development: "Whatever you say, Stan, is right"; to the Minister of Municipal Affairs: "You go ahead, I really am too tired to worry about that."

Well we cannot have that any more. If there is going to be any water in the new wave, it has to be in the emphasis in the position and responsibility of the Premier.

Mr. Randall: Has the member been listening to Trudeau's speeches lately?

Mr. Nixon: As a matter of fact, Mr. Trudeau is in Brantford right now and there is a place I would rather be than here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member means he would rather be at home than here?

Mr. Randall: With Mr. Trudeau?

An hon. member: I would rather be there than listening to the hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: All right, Mr. Speaker. That is devastating.

Mr. Speaker, the final area which I think must be concentrated in the Premier's office is the federal-provincial-affairs secretariat. I, for one, would be horrified if he left it with the Treasury and particularly with this Treasurer. I am displaying my prejudice for the abilities that have been exemplified. He is a sabre rattler, even worse than his predecessor.

I believe that federal-provincial affairs must come under the Premier's leadership and not the Treasurer's. I think the time has come when we must deal with the government of Canada as the government of Ontario, and get away from the ridiculous political confrontation which has been characteristic of this government's predecessors, white-lipped and trembling.

The government can immediately say we are selling out to our Liberal friends in Ottawa. We will put up with that and it will cut ice with no one except the government's enthusiastic supporters sitting in the back row.

The future of Confederation is co-operation—and I mean real co-operation, not the old-fashioned backwoods Tory political confrontation that is characteristic of the Minister of Highways and Transport and of the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is a two-way street, as I understand it.

Mr. Nixon: That is fine. All right. The Premier can insist on co-operation and he is the best judge as to whether he is getting it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I always have.

Mr. Nixon: Is the Premier saying he is not getting co-operation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not been here long enough.

Mr. Nixon: All right, so he waffles on that too.

Mr. Speaker, while my remarks have been based on my view, and the official view of our party, on the re-organization of the cabinet—where the problems are and what the legitimate answers would be—the real thrust of my presentation has been to emphasize reform in the cabinet, reform in policy, and to reform the tax base of the province. There will be other opportunities to talk about taxation and our dealings with the government of Canada, and I intend to do that. The second thrust is on decentralization. The policies of this government have been centralist. One of the weirdest things about the recent leadership campaign was to hear the Treasurer, talk about more autonomy for the municipalities. He is the greatest centralizer that we have had here in 100 years and he has been supported in this area by the others.

Now, decentralizing—giving autonomy to the municipalities, decentralizing the business of government so that the Minister of Lands and Forests has his headquarters in the north, and the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) does not have his headquarters at the corner of Bay and Bloor, in that brand new building, but he is somewhere in some good agricultural area like Brant county and the decentralization also of growth.

I have told the hon. members of our plans as a party and as a government this year—

Hon. Mr. Davis: And all in 20 minutes.

Mr. Nixon: —to establish a plan for the province which will decentralize this growth.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, the thrust is on democracy and democratizing this House—

An hon. member: Hear, hear. That is right.

Mr. Nixon: —and the responsibilities of government.

All right, all right. The Premier is nodding. Perhaps he is the one who wrote the section in the speech delivered by His Honour, the Lieutenant Governor a few days ago, that the government was going to listen to the people and act accordingly. We would have thought that they would have been doing that up until now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have.

Mr. Nixon: Yes. So once again the Premier's words were meaningless.

The second criticism that I would have of the last Premier is that he downgraded the effectiveness of this House. That is the most serious thing, in my view, that I can say.

An hon. member: Shame.

Mr. Nixon: Over those years, we know that the time for debate in estimates has expanded to incredible proportions. In that sense maybe he lost control of the House. But the role of the private member, the role of the standing and select committees, has essentially been reduced under his leadership and certainly we are looking for a reversal of that trend under the new administration.

I believe that there is nothing new over there. The Attorney General said that they had to get rid of the deadwood and they have not done so. It is going to take an election to get rid of the deadwood and replace the Tories with a Liberal government.

We have come a long way since Governor Simcoe had all the powers in his own hands. You can see his portrait downstairs. He looks like a fellow who can wield them. With great respect to the present government, and the dignity of his office, the only thing he can say to us without advice is "Pray be seated." Everything else must be written and put before him by his advisers, and that is responsible government.

So we have come this far, but surely we do not believe that democracy has achieved perfection. We must take the steps that I have outlined at the governmental level, to reform government, to decentralize it and to democratize it. We feel that this administration and this Conservative Party has lost its initiative. The commitments that the present leader had to make in order to achieve his present high office have bound his hands and, in fact, covered his eyes. Because of this, he leads nothing but a caretaker government. The province needs new leadership. We on this side, are ready for an election. It is an election that we confidently expect to win.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was wondering when that matter was going to be brought up.

Mr. Randall: Sit down while you are ahead.

An hon. member: You blew it.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): I think there was a tack in that seat.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: I have a substantial amendment for the consideration of the House, Mr. Speaker, and I move, seconded by Mr. Singer, that the following words be added to the motion:

This House regrets:

1. The failure of the government to come to grips with the grave problems of unemployment and inflation.

2. The failure of the government to propose and implement realistic measures of economy toward spiralling education costs consistent with the high quality of education and training required by our young people to fit them to compete in the nuclear age.

3. The failure of the government to adopt the appropriate policies and to implement the necessary action to ensure to those of our people engaged in agriculture a fair return for the contribution they make to the economy of Ontario.

4. The failure of the government to provide adequate hospital, nursing home and convalescent facilities to those of our people suffering from illness.

5. The failure of the government to extend financial aid to separate education through grades 11 to 13.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is an interesting wording. Did you check that carefully?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Politics.

Mr. Nixon: To continue:

6. The failure of the government to provide leadership to those engaged in local government to recognize the disabilities they face in dealing with the high cost of administration, and to inaugurate policies which would bring to reality a new partnership with the municipalities to replace the present autocratic approach and encourage local initiatives in autonomy.

7. The failure of the government to move toward decentralization of government services in order to bring those services into a closer contact with the people of Ontario.

8. The failure of the government to adopt consistent and realistic policies to control pollution, arrest the deterioration of the environment and to restore the benefits of clean air and pure water as the rightful heritage of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer:

That the following words be added to the motion:

Mr. Singer: Is the motion carried?

Mr. Lewis moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Randall: So ends the 28th reading of the Liberal Party.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, just before the adjournment, are we to understand there is no particular time limit in the special debate?

Mr. Speaker: There is normally a private members' hour on Monday. Has it been determined whether that—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the whips can meet on this. From our standpoint, we would be prepared to forsake the private members' hour for this rather important debate on Monday, if there is consent. I would never suggest it without consent.

Mr. Lewis: The Prime Minister does not preempt the rights of the House, of course.

Mr. Speaker, since it is such an important debate, and if there are not time limits, some of the speeches may go 20 or 25 minutes; could the debate then continue beyond 6 o'clock on Monday? Could it therefore be done in one continuity rather than an interruption, that is, pick up again on Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I had not planned to carry on until Tuesday. We will see how the debate is going on on Monday and will make some determination Monday afternoon.

Mr. Singer: No evening sessions unless there is an emergency?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. Unless there is an emergency.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 5, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon we have as our guests in the east gallery students from Hillside Public School in Clarkson, and in the west gallery from Burlington Central High School in Burlington, Oak Park Junior High School in East York and King Edward Public School in Toronto. Later this afternoon we will have the First Queensway Rangers hosting Girl Scouts from Lansing in Michigan.

Statements by the ministry.

Oral questions.

LAKE OF THE WOODS HOSPITAL ADMITTANCE PROCEDURES

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker while we wait for the rest of the ministry to arrive, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Health.

Is he aware of the reported undue hardships suffered by the people living in the Lake of the Woods hospital administrative area because of the admittance policy established by that hospital board, which has resulted in the resignation of Dr. W. A. Baker?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the problem there. The details, or my judgement on it, I do not have at the moment, because I am just that—"aware."

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Might I ask the minister if he would report to the House when further information is available?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

OSSTF NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Nixon: A question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Education: Can he tell the House what steps he is taking to negotiate further with the representatives of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation regarding the May 3 deadline?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I am in the process now of drafting a letter to be sent to the executive members of the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, inviting them to my office so that we might review the guidelines and all of the facts used as a basis of this year's guidelines. I hope that that will be a very productive meeting.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Does the minister know when his committee on negotiating procedures might give an interim report?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that by date, but I understand their public hearings start around May 5. Do not hold me to that date, but certainly early in May they plan to hold public meetings following up the briefs that have already been submitted. I have no idea when the committee may be ready, either with an interim report or its full report.

Mr. Nixon: But it will probably not be this year.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, since the minister has been drafting this letter of invitation to the teachers for some considerable time, does he have a date in mind, particularly in advance of May 3, when he will be meeting with them?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I think I am suggesting in the letter—although I would rather the letter itself be read by the teachers—that right after the Easter break I am hoping we might get together.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier: Can he report what plans he and his confrère from Quebec made over the weekend in their plan of approach to the federal-provincial negotiations, or the next federal-provincial conference to be held in June?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I met with the Premier of the Province of Quebec late Friday afternoon and Friday evening. It was really an opportunity to meet him in my capacity as Prime Minister of this province to discuss a number of those matters that will be raised at the federal-provincial conference. We exchanged a few thoughts that we had and I really have nothing beyond that to report to the House.

SWEEP PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of policy, I wonder if the Premier can report to the House what steps are going to be taken in the immediate future to implement the programme known in the Speech from the Throne as SWEEP, which has something to do with student unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, a point of order!

Mr. Speaker: Point of order!

Mr. Bullbrook: I did not realize my leader was going to ask a new question. May I ask a supplementary in connection with the meeting with the Premier of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: No. Unfortunately, no. The hon. member was in the House and if he wished a supplementary he should have risen to his feet and indicated such and Mr. Speaker would have—

Mr. Bullbrook: May I invite your consideration that what you are asking of this hon. member is to read the mind of my leader?

Mr. Lewis: And that is difficult.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): That is not easy!

Mr. Bullbrook: I cannot tell whether the Leader of the Opposition is rising to ask a new question or a supplementary question. I afford him the courtesy of asking a supplementary if he wishes to—

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member wishes to ask a supplementary question in the future he should rise to his feet, and if the person asking the question, whether he be the leader or not, does not have a supplementary then the member will be given that opportunity.

Hon. Mr. White: I have news for the member, his leader is not very pleased at what he is doing. I wish the member could see his face.

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that I cannot object unduly to your ruling, I ask you to consider the fact that my leader rose, and I could not tell whether it was to ask a supplementary or a new question.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know what would prevent the hon. member for Sarnia rising also.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Now that the hon. member has heard him does he still not know?

Mr. Bullbrook: I rise now, therefore, and ask Mr. Speaker if I might direct a supplementary to the Premier?

Mr. Speaker: The answer is no; the time for that supplementary has been passed.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

SWEEP PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order just raised, I draw to your attention, sir, that we have not seen the Minister of University Affairs for some days since the House convened. It is nice to have him back.

Now I would like to return to my questions until such time as my hon. colleague from Sarnia can ask his own further question about the negotiations with the Prime Minister of Quebec. Is the Premier going to tell us something about his programme on student unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I expect that during the discussions going on this afternoon, and I assume again tomorrow, there will be a specific reference to this particular programme.

Mr. Nixon: So that we can have the information available for the debate this afternoon, can the minister confirm that the student unemployment rate in this province is expected to rise to 18 per cent within the next month?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I find that very difficult to confirm as far as the student unemployment rate is concerned, because the bulk of the students are still in the school environment I do not know how I can confirm that to the hon. members. There will be suggested figures as to the numbers over the summer months, but certainly to confirm an 18-per-cent figure today, when the universities and the post-secondary institutions are still operative, would be very difficult for me to do.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): A supplementary question: Is the minister aware that the youth unemployment rate, by which is meant the 14 to 19-year-olds, in this province is at present 18 per cent? Does he have a specific programme dealing with youths who are out of school to get them back into the productive labour force?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I see the member for Scarborough East has been able to update his leader's knowledge of this matter.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly far in advance of the Premier's.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): He is just jealous.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is a very real distinction between student unemployment, when the students are still within the school system, and young people who are not in the school system and seeking employment. There is a very real distinction, Mr. Speaker. I am aware that the rate is high, far higher than we would like it to be.

Mr. T. Reid: What is the government doing about it?

TRAFFICKING IN DRUGS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General: Can he explain to the House why, evidently, the reporter writing in The Globe and Mail this morning was able to determine that illegal trafficking in drugs is extensive in almost every community of Ontario, and yet the police forces under his direction seem to have great difficulty in determining this?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear that the question was directed to me.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, it is directed toward the Attorney General.

Can he explain to the House why a reporter for The Globe and Mail, writing in this morning's edition, was able to point out, specifically, in a number of communities in Ontario, where the illicit sale of drugs is going on? Why is it that the law enforcement officers cannot determine this and do something about it?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I was out of the city on the weekend. I have not yet read the morning Globe and Mail. Before answering the member, I would much rather take a look at that story.

Mr. Nixon: A further question, Mr. Speaker; it follows so directly on the rather outraged comments that the Attorney General made—off the cuff, he said—last week that I thought he would be deeply concerned with this matter.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The enforcer, the enforcer!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am concerned.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

NURSING HOME COVERAGE IN HOSPITAL INSURANCE PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: I urge him to examine it.

If I might ask a further question of the Minister of Health: Can he tell the House whether negotiations are continuing with the government of Canada toward the covering of nursing home facilities in our hospital insurance programme in this province?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I have not had an opportunity of meeting with Mr. Munro as yet, but it is on the agenda for discussions.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Can the minister tell the House whether this is a matter of some priority in the government opposite or whether it is something that has been downgraded since it was discussed in the Conservative leadership campaign?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I would consider it of the highest priority.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): A supplementary question: If the federal government does not agree to make the necessary adjustments will the Ontario government proceed on its own to cover nursing home care under the hospital plan?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): What a question.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): That is a good question. It puts the ball right in that court.

Mr. Lewis: That is an excellent question.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I would think, Mr. Speaker, that my position would not be improved by answering that question.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The answer must be no in that case.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

COMMUNITY COLLEGE TEACHERS' BARGAINING RIGHTS

Mr. Lewis: To gladden his day, Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of University Affairs.

What will happen to the collective bargaining rights and status of community college teachers when the new Department of Universities and Colleges is formed?

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, this is not in my department now. I think perhaps the question might go to the Minister of Education, although it must be self-evident to the members of the Legislature that these government policy announcements will be made in due course.

Mr. Lewis: Well then, a question for the Minister of Education—whatever that meant:

When the new Department of Universities and Colleges is formed and the community college teachers are thereby transferred, what would be their collective bargaining rights? What would be their jurisdiction? Would Bill 217, which was withdrawn last session, still apply; or would they have a status different from that?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think it is reasonable to assume the status of the particular professional group to which the member alludes would be determined at such time as the government either reintroduces the respective bargaining bill or makes any further statement with respect to that particular policy matter.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, in view of the fact that the community college teachers have now taken a vote and the results of that will be announced, is there nothing the government might now say to them by way of its plans in view of the major change in their status?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, what is the major change in their status as of this afternoon?

Mr. Lewis: I read the Throne Speech—some of it, I felt, might be substantial. There was a part of it which implied a new department of universities and colleges which would affect their status fundamentally. Is the minister saying that part of the Throne Speech has also no relevance to this?

Hon. Mr. Welch: If the hon. member had listened to my comment on the question, Mr. Speaker, I understood he was making reference to their status by virtue of a vote which had been taken. I cannot understand why there would be any change in that particular matter at this time. After all, they follow certain procedures to make a certain determination; why would it be any different this afternoon?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary; when the government changes their status as announced in the Speech from the Throne, what then is their jurisdiction? How then will they have the right to bargain collectively or otherwise?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Government policy in that matter will be announced in due course.

MOOSONEE HOSPITAL

Mr. Lewis: Might I ask a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker?

Has the minister had an opportunity—I realize his assumption is recent—to look into the problems of building another hospital in Moosonee and the apparent conflict for the citizens of that area with Moose Factory; as well as the effects it might have for the whole area?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have.

Mr. Lewis: Has the minister a considered opinion as to whether or not the hospital will be built? If so, what size; and what will be the effects on employment opportunities for those in the federal hospital in Moose Factory, should it close down?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I cannot know what the federal government will do with regard to its hospital, but I am advised that good sense supports the province building its hospital on the mainland and not using the island. What impact this would have on unemployment or on employment itself I cannot measure, but there is no immediate need, as I understand it, for the federal government to close its hospital merely because the province goes ahead with the mainland hospital.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask one final supplementary?

Has the minister an assurance from the federal government that the hospital in Moose Factory will continue to remain open and provide services and employment at the present level?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, I have not, Mr. Speaker. There is a direct conflict of opinion here between my department and the federal department and that has not been resolved; so I have not any such undertaking.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: I have a final supplementary then.

Since the whole economy of the region would be dislocated, totally, were the federal government to close down the hospital, as they have implied they might, why is the provincial government moving ahead with its smaller hospital without considering all the community groups and individuals involved in the area? I gather they have not yet been consulted?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: We are considering all these facets of the problem; but fundamentally, I am told the hospital on the mainland makes sense and supporting a hospital on the island does not make sense.

The federal government would like to see more attention paid to its hospital and we would like to proceed with ours. This has not been resolved but I hope it will be soon.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber has a supplementary?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Is the minister aware that half of the wards in the federal hospital at the present time are unoccupied for lack of patients?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, but I am also aware that this particular hospital, which is on an island, is not as efficient, not as useful—certainly not during parts of the year because of ice and water conditions—and therefore that ultimately a hospital on the mainland makes good sense.

Mr. Ben: If I can follow that up: if water and ice conditions are going to interfere with the transportation of patients to the island hospital, will not the reverse hold if you put one up on the mainland and the one on the island is closed down? That is the people on the island are going to be isolated from hospital and medical services?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: They have been told—let me put it this way, I have no word from the federal Minister of Health to suggest that he is going to close the island hospital.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie) a supplementary? No. The member for Scarborough West?

AMENDMENT OF BILL 96

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour.

Will the Minister of Labour be amending Bill 96 regarding length of notice of termination or layoffs to conform with federal legislation, which is rather more generous in the terms? Will the minister introduce, for the House, his amendment?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Labour): I will take it under consideration.

AMENDMENT OF BILL 83

Mr. Lewis: Another question of the same minister, Mr. Speaker.

Would the minister consider amending Bill 83, which provides certain rights and security to women in the work force, to conform with federal legislation which will allow maternity leave of 15 weeks, rather in excess of provincial legislation?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Again, I will take it under consideration.

CLOSURE OF COBALT REFINERY

Mr. Lewis: Well fine!

One last question of that minister, Mr. Speaker, and I shall relinquish my time. Has the minister yet ascertained what his department has done to provide alternative employment for the 90 or more employees who lost their jobs by virtue of the termination of the Cobalt refinery?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This particular problem arose before our termination legislation became effective in January. As a matter of fact, my understanding is it started some time last summer. At that time there was the involvement, as I understand it, of The Department of Mines in connection with whether or not this particular plant could or could not stay open. It apparently was uneconomic and could not stay open. To answer the question specifically, my department has had absolutely no contacts with the people up there. Neither have the Manpower consultant centre people. I phoned the Manpower centre at New Liskeard this morning and my understanding is that there are 20 people registered at Manpower centre, and there would be employment for most of that 20 if they would relocate, say in Timmins, or Kirkland Lake. There is employment, but apparently they do not want to move.

I have had no requests. I am advised there is nothing in my file in connection with any requests from anyone in connection with that particular matter.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Supplementary, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Jackson: Would the minister tell us exactly where in Kirkland Lake and in Timmins these men are going to find employment, when as a matter of fact Timmins and Kirkland Lake both have one of the highest unemployment rates in Ontario?

Mr. Lewis: What is the use of registering at Manpower?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I am advised by the Manpower centre that there were 20 jobs available some time last month and only four wanted to move.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peel South.

CAPITAL FUND TO ASSIST SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Would he advise just when the capital fund which will be established to assist small business might be in operation; and may applications be submitted to the department, in anticipation of approval?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is a matter of government—

Mr. Singer: It just happens I have a four page statement.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, it just happens that I do not have a four page answer.

Mr. Nixon: The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) has his speech ready.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The details, Mr. Speaker, will be announced to this Legislature before release; I should have an announcement ready in a few days.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sarnia.

DOW CHEMICAL LAWSUIT

Mr. Bullbrook: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General and Minister of Justice. Could the Attorney General advise whether he was properly quoted in a recent column in the Globe and Mail, relative to the government action against Dow Chemical and the constitutional questions involved, in saying "Let the fish sue us"? Secondly, is that representative of the attitude of the government in connection with this lawsuit? Third—and most important—was there any liaison between this government and the government of Canada in connection with them joining in the action to avoid any constitutional obscurity?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Permit me to take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wellington South.

GRAND RIVER GRANT

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Is the minister in a position to inform the House as to when he is going to make an announcement in regard to the giving of moneys to the Grand River Conservation Authority in regard to various dam projects?

Hon. A. G. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Mr. Speaker, anything on the grant structure for the Grand and other authorities will be made some time this month.

Mr. Worton: This month?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park.

OMA FEE SCHEDULE

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): A question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister made a proposal to the Ontario Medical Association that beginning May 1 they accept somewhat less than 90 per cent of the fee schedule, specifically 80-odd per cent; and what was the response of the OMA?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not made such a proposal, but it was among a group of alternatives that I asked them to consider and they are still considering those alternatives.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Is this not in contradiction to the minister's statement the other day that the intention of a new fee schedule was to get more money in the hands of the general practitioners and less in the hands of the specialists?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not think there is any conflict, Mr. Speaker. There were half a dozen different permutations and combinations discussed in relation to whether it be 100 per cent, 90 per cent, 90 per cent without extra billing, 87 per cent—as the member can see, there are four or five different alternatives available and they were all put on the table and left there for consideration.

Mr. Shulman: A final supplementary, if I may. Would the minister not agree with me that if the OMA were to accept this proposal this would result in a larger amount of extra billing to the public?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I suppose that is correct. I cannot say how the medical profession will react but it would seem to be possible that this is the way they would react.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: I have two supplementaries. Is the minister then saying that the request of the OMA to accept 87.5 per cent was not contingent on that being full payment?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I never made a request to the OMA to accept any particular amount, 90 per cent or 87 per cent. My answer is categorically that this is one of many alternatives discussed. I have made no request to them specifically to accept any particular figure.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a final supplementary for myself, Mr. Speaker, why does the minister not share this kind of discussion and policy proposal with the House inasmuch as it involves a major outlay of public funds?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. Lewis: Well before the minister negotiates, as it were behind the scenes, why can it not be shared with the Legislature?

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): It is discussed in our caucus.

Mr. Lewis: Well, why should it not be shared?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): If the NDP gets elected, the member can make the decisions.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

PLASTIC CONTAINERS FOR ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I should like to ask the Provincial Secretary if my understanding is correct that the Liquor Control Board is actually studying the feasibility of dispensing alcoholic beverages in plastic containers in order to decrease the pollution potential of the landscape by the bottles they presently use?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): It may well be, Mr. Speaker. I will look into that and bring the answer back for the hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: At an early time?

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Immediately.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

CITY OF TORONTO PLAN

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Can the minister indicate whether he will accede to the request of the Chinese community in Toronto that the recent amendment to the city of Toronto plan extending the area for residential development west of McCaul Street might be referred by him to the Ontario Municipal Board?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that request has not come to me, but when it does I will give it consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ottawa Centre.

TREATMENT FACILITIES FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): A question of the Minister of Health regarding crippled children in Ottawa; does the minister believe that before this year is over he can give complete clearance for the construction of adequate facilities for treatment of crippled children in the Ottawa area?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think so. And it will be a part, I hope, of the general facility involving the new Ottawa children's hospital.

Mr. MacKenzie: A supplementary: Do I understand the minister to say that the facilities will be available for crippled children in the ensuing year in Ottawa?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, I cannot commit myself to that, Mr. Speaker. All I can say is that in conjunction with the development of the Ottawa area children's hospital we will come to a position in relation to the facility for crippled children, and it will be done at one time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

TESTING OF NEW NON-PHOSPHATE DETERGENTS

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management regarding non-phosphate detergents.

Are new non-phosphate detergents being tested and approved by the minister's department before being allowed on the market?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. I believe that as far as the safety aspect of detergents or any soap product is concerned, this is checked to see that there is not any detrimental effect resulting from the use of that particular product, but we just test it from the point of view of the effect on the environment.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary. Is the minister aware that some of the new detergents consist of 45 per cent mere table salt; and if so would this not be detrimental eventually to the rivers?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, Mr. Speaker. We are satisfied that although some of these detergents are not effective cleansing products, as they are not really doing a good cleansing job, they are not a menace or a detriment from the point of view submitted by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale, a supplementary.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the minister's department has any guidelines to warn the general public if a product replacing a phosphate is actually worse than the phosphate, or in the alternative completely useless for the purpose for which it is advertised?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, to answer the last part of the hon. member's question first, which was similar to the previous question, we have not advised the consuming public that a certain detergent without phosphate is useless or is not effective. We certainly are concerned about any substitute for phosphates and detergents. One of the best substitutes that we thought would be on the market—that is NTA—apparently has the same bad effects and possibly even worse effects, according to the U.S. Surgeon General, as phosphates. Of course, we would make sure that any substitute—that is the catalytic substitute—for phosphate does not do any damage to our water or lakes and we would impose the same control as we do now for phosphates.

Mr. Trotter: One final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the department finds a product is useless and does not warn the public, does it warn the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, this is, I suppose, more along his line.

Mr. Trotter: But he would not know whereas the minister does!

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We are not really concerned in my department whether or not a product will do the job it is advertised to do, as long as it does not harm the environment. Now I suppose there could be communication between myself and another department—

Mr. Trotter: Oh, surely the minister's department would be concerned?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: —but this is not really within the realm of my responsibility.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Sandwich-Riverside a further supplementary?

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the minister to say that NTA is not allowed now?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, Mr. Speaker. There are some soap companies, some detergent manufacturers, contemplating using NTA as a substitute for phosphate. Just recently the U.S. Surgeon General indicated that NTA may be just as harmful in the receiving waters as phosphate, but there is no conclusion or no final decision on that particular product.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, whose decision is it?

Mr. Speaker: There have been sufficient supplementaries on this question. If the member wishes more information he can get in touch direct with the minister.

The member for Renfrew South.

RAILWAYS SETTLEMENT

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Labour in four parts. First, does he have for the House the terms of the settlement arrived at shortly before 8 o'clock this morning between the operating engineers and the two major railways?

Mr. Singer: If not, why not?

Mr. Lawlor: Just happen to have it.

Mr. Yakabuski: Second, was that settlement along the lines of the Pearson formula, namely a 30 per cent increase? Third, what effect does he feel the settlement will have on the already exorbitant freight rates? Fourth, what disastrous effects will this have on the residents of rural, northern Ontario and other parts of Canada?

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Glad you asked that.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): There is a loaded question.

Hon. Mr. Carton: The answer to the first part is, no. As to the other parts, I will take them under notice.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is going to have a full desk of advisories pretty soon.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Could the Attorney General tell us, in view of the statement by his predecessor that Ontario wants to assert some form of control over off-track betting, what representations, if any, either he or his predecessor have made to date to the Minister of Justice in Ottawa?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The Minister of Justice in Ottawa has been here in Toronto, in this building, speaking to me about the matter.

Mr. Bullbrook: Shows the relative importance of the thing.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: As far as the government policy is concerned in this matter, it has not yet been fully determined.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, can I imply from the Attorney General's statement that he repudiates the previous policy statement made by his predecessor some time after November 13, and prior to his ascension to this prominent office?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege!

The hon. member for Downsview puts words in my mouth which are not correct. I did not assert that Ontario wanted to assert control over off-track betting. Our position was that when the federal government saw fit to pass legislation placing off-track betting within the jurisdiction of the provinces, as they have done with lotteries, we would be prepared to carry out our obligation in that regard.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further supplementary question to the Attorney General; could he advise us if and ever the Ontario government is going to have a policy about off-track betting?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes; sometime, if and ever.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

SUDBURY HOSPITALS

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): A question of the Minister of Health: In view of the fact that the province has made funds available to alleviate the long-term crisis facing patients in the Sudbury area, what assistance can be anticipated to alleviate the short-term problem confronting patients of at least a month waiting period to get a bed?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I will see what can be done, Mr. Speaker, and report to the hon. member.

Mr. Martel: Could I ask the minister one more supplementary question that he might consider? Would the government consider making available funds to the hospital board wherein they could rent portable classrooms, and with a little remodelling make these into convalescent areas adjacent to the hospital, and thus make the active treatment beds available for active patients?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I shall have the department assess the proposal, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Waterloo North.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): A question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: Would the minister look into the actions of Scottish and York Insurance Company to see if their present policy contravenes any section of The Insurance Act, whereby they give special car insurance rates to anyone who is an employee of Peel county Board of Education or Bell Telephone Company?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we have a committee looking at the whole question of insurance, particularly car insurance; the matter of claims, the matter of how they are handled, the question of delays, the time taken, the treatment generally with respect to this matter. Each individual complaint that comes to our attention is immediately investigated thoroughly and reported to the plaintiff.

Mr. Good: A supplementary question: Is the minister aware that, in my interpretation of The Insurance Act, no special rate may be given to any group of people in car insurance; and I am asking him whether he would look into this and see if that section of The Insurance Act is being violated?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we are looking at this type of thing. If this is a particular complaint, certainly we are looking at it; and if we have not got it, if the hon. member will be good enough to let us have it, we will deal with it and I will give him a reply.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Huron Bruce.

DEAD ELM REMOVAL PROGRAMME

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): I have a question of the Minister of Highways and Transport.

Why did the government buy German chain saws under the dead elm removal programme on Highways 400 and 401? Second, since the programme had the purpose of creating employment here in the province, does the minister not find that there is a contradiction in buying equipment outside the province, thereby creating jobs outside the country?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, if indeed he does, he was not aware of the fact that German chainsaws had been purchased. The best I can say is that I will look into it.

Mr. Gaunt: Would the minister give the undertaking to report back to the House on the matter?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would be delighted to report back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Citizenship and Provincial Secretary has the answer to a question asked by the hon. member for Scarborough West.

GRANTS TO INDIAN GROUPS

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Scarborough West had asked on March 31 about the confirmation of a grant to the Nisku Corporation Co-operative in pulp and paper. That grant has been announced in a press release on March 5. It was one of six at that time and the parties had been notified prior to the announcement in the press.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary: Does the minister have the size of that grant? I am sorry, it did not come to my attention.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was not only the $8,000 for the pulpwood operation, but an additional $4,000 to establish a handicrafts industry in Moosonee.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane South.

TRAINING OF DOCTORS

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health.

What plans has the minister under consideration so that a great many more Ontario young people will be able to study medicine in Ontario, and thus we shall be able to provide more of our own doctors for the province?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I think that "plans" would be too strong a word. The discussion relates to improving the flow of students which I understand is hung up by inadequate clinical facilities at the hospitals for teaching.

I am told that the academic support, the buildings and the scientific support is there and is adequate, but the phase in relation to clinical training has fallen behind. As soon as that bottleneck can be removed, I would think the percentage of Ontario trained doctors and those attending medical school can increase substantially.

Mr. Ferrier: As a supplementary: Is the minister considering the construction of any more medical schools per se within the province?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker. There is one I have heard discussed and I cannot even remember the details of that.

Basically, as I understand it, it is a question of reorganizing the teaching system so that the students within the reach of the hospital itself have adequate facilities for training under the doctors on the spot.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister then completely rejected the recommendation of the Ontario committee on the healing arts for the establishment of one new additional medical school in the province of Ontario?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: No, I have not rejected this—and this is probably the point that I have in my mind, that I know there is a discussion of another one being made available.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber.

TERMINATION OF EMPLOYMENT OF HOURLY-RATED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Public Works tell us how many hourly-rated employees have had their employment terminated during the last year, and how many of that number during the last six months?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the actual number. I can give the hon. member the figure in a day or two.

I can tell him that those hourly-rated employees who had left the department since the beginning of the year are in the process of being reinstated. The policy of letting go our hourly-rated people, which was announced last year, is being held in abeyance for the time being in view of the general employment situation.

Mr. Ben: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is this reinstatement only going to go back to January 1, 1971, or, if I may finish my question, is there some seniority system that you have in effect which would bring back into a state of employment those that had so many years seniority?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to take a great deal of the time of the House at the moment to explain the situation. As I understand it, a number of the people who had been hourly-rated tradesmen with this department for varying terms of from two weeks to 10 years were offered, in most cases, the opportunity of joining the permanent staff instead of being permanent casuals, in line with Judge Little's recommendation and submission to the civil service association.

I cannot give the member the figure of those who transferred to permanent staff as opposed to those who left the department and worked elsewhere, but I will attempt to get the breakdown and either table it in the House or send it to the hon. member, whichever he prefers.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Dovercourt has a supplementary.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): In some of these job reclassifications the department has actually reduced the hourly rate, has it not; and when they reapply for their own position, they have to take it at a lower rate of pay?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the situation was that the hourly-rated employees who were so-called casuals, who were at the going rate for the trade in the area, did not have the same benefits as the permanent staff civil servant, where there was a lower rate with some additional benefits.

Mr. De Monte: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, am I not correct in assuming that some hourly rates have been decreased by at least half, and that when they reapply they must reapply at the half rate?

Hon. Mr. Auld: What I attempted to say, Mr. Speaker, is that the civil service permanent staff rates for certain classifications are less than the so-called casual rate, or the going rate in the area, but there are other factors to take into consideration regarding civil service benefits, which would tend to narrow the difference between the rates.

Mr. Speaker: One final supplementary.

Mr. De Monte: Then may I assume that the civil service benefits are worth 50 per cent of a man's hourly rate?

Mr. Speaker: That is sufficient, the hon. member is getting into a debate. He can get this information from the Minister if he gives him specific instances.

Has the hon. member for High Park a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: No, thank you.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Justice and Attorney General has the answer to a question.

CHARGES AGAINST OPP OFFICERS

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker on Friday last the hon. member for Downsview left with me two unanswered questions relating to the inquiry into the conduct of certain OPP officers.

The first was the date of the regulation appointing Judge Steen. I am informed that the regulation was filed in the office of the Registrar of Regulations on January 12, 1971.

Second, whether there had been any instructions from this government to Judge Steen as to whether it would be an open or a closed inquiry. I indicated that it was our assumption that it was to be an open inquiry, but that these matters are left entirely to the discretion of the presiding officer or the presiding judge.

In this case I would assume that it would be open, but in the event that argument or evidence was presented to the judge that it should be closed, then certainly we would want to leave entirely to him that option as to whether it would be open or closed.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Could the Attorney General advise us whether the regulations that he refers to particularly dealt with the appointment of Judge Steen or gave power to appoint a judge instead of the senior police officer?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I have not seen the regulation. I will take that under notice.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, and perhaps to clarify that question. It is my understanding that the regulation to which the Attorney General refers was a general regulation. What I was asking was when it was decided that Judge Steen would be appointed in accordance with the terms of that regulation, and that was in fact my question.

The second supplementary that I have, Mr. Speaker, is what criteria will Judge Steen apply in determining whether or not there should be an open or closed hearing? Will the criteria be such as that presently set out in the Criminal Code, or does he just establish his own criteria out of the blue?

Mr. Speaker: The question period has expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. Mr. Bales presented The Department of Municipal Affairs 1969 summary of financial reports for the municipalities.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, by way of explanation, the amendments of the Act simply provide for the seizure and detention of a regulated product and prescribes the powers and the duties that will be given to a local board by the Ontario Farm Products Marketing Board.

THE UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO ACT, 1947

Mr. Ben moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The University of Toronto Act, 1947.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is two-fold. It is intended to entrench the provisions of The Ontario Human Rights Code, 1961-1962 in the Act and to begin carrying out the recommendations of the commission on the government of the University of Toronto, 1970.

The bill is an interim measure designed to more positively involve students in a university community and to preserve Canadian cultural values.

THE HIGHWAY TRAFFIC ACT

Mr. Young moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): This bill stipulates that every passenger motor vehicle sold in Ontario or manufactured therein after January 1, 1973, shall have bumpers, front and rear, which can sustain a crash at the tremendous speed of five miles an hour without damage either to the motor vehicle or to the occupants; and that after January 1, 1975, the crash shall be 10 miles an hour with the same results.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

NOTICE OF MOTION

Clerk of the House: The government notice of motion No. 1, by Hon. Mr. McKeough,

RESOLVED,

That this House express its grave concern over the serious unemployment prevailing in Ontario and throughout Canada.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me to lead off in this debate. I think all members of the House have certain views on what can only be regarded as a most serious condition both in the economy of Canada and of Ontario in particular.

Others of my colleagues will be more specific on their particular aspects of the problem. I propose, in the course of the next 20 minutes or so, to range over the broad field and to make certain recommendations for action which the government believes will be helpful to solve the present unemployment crisis.

I should like to comment first on the current economic situation in Ontario and Canada. This winter there has been an intolerable degree of unemployment in every part of Canada. Not only does this cost the country and each province enormous sums of money in additional welfare payments, but also the value of lost output is almost incalculable.

In addition to these costs are the even more significant ones: The fears and distresses of the individuals and their families who, through no fault of their own; are now unemployed. Our citizens have every right to be angry at this turn of events.

The restrictive monetary and fiscal policies pursued by the federal government in 1969 and most of 1970 not only produced intolerable levels of unemployment, but havoc in all other sectors of the economy as well.

Economic growth as measured by the gross national product rose by 7.5 per cent, but the real increase was only 3.3 per cent, and in per capita terms was less than 1.5 per cent. An illustration of the seriousness of the problem facing the community is reflected in consumer sales. The value of retail sales during 1970 increased by only 1.7 per cent while prices rose by 3.2 per cent. Thus the physical volume of retail trade actually fell during the year.

The business community in Ontario, as elsewhere, was hit badly by high interest costs and declining incomes. This has been a particular concern to us because of its impact on investment decisions by businesses, and incidentally because of the provincial revenue losses. For example, in the 1970-1971 budget we expected Ontario provincial corporation taxes to yield some $457 million during the last fiscal year. In fact, by the end of February, the severe upset in business earnings had progressively reduced our expectations to some $410 million, down $47 million or 10 per cent from the forecast.

We are not talking about something new in the concern of the government of Ontario. At the federal-provincial conference over a year ago, in February, 1970, the then Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) warned the government of Canada that unemployment would soon be our problem. He suggested that the federal government should carefully review its policies and give serious consideration to measures to counter the unemployment that would undoubtedly appear. Regrettably, this advice was large ignored. Once again, in the Ontario government budget presented to this House in March, 1970, by my predecessor, the now Minister of Highways (Mr. MacNaughton), these warnings were repeated.

The government's position at that time was stated as follows:

The Ontario government recognizes that the control of inflation has a high priority among economic policies. However, it does not agree that the objectives and methods of current fiscal and monetary policy are irrefutable. If the federal and provincial governments continue to retard economic growth, Canada would experience both higher unemployment and inflation as in the mid and late 1950's.

The basic strategy of price containment through tight monetary and fiscal policy measures has a number of disadvantages:

It is economically wasteful because it puts people out of work and limits the nation's growth capacity; the less-developed regions suffer most; it hits industries indiscriminately and regardless of their direct influence on prices; it hurts small businesses and raises the cost of doing business; it restricts the supply and raises the cost of housing; it is accompanied by rising unemployment, hitting hardest at low-income earners and unorganized labour; it results in slower growth, lowers capacity utilization and productivity, and raises the unit cost of production. And finally, even if inflation is cured, the problem of the eroded purchasing power of the fixed income groups remains unless compensation is provided.

I am still quoting from the 1970 budget.

Ontario, with a rapidly growing population and labour force, needs a continuous stream of private and public investment to create new jobs and raise living standards. Any attempt to cure inflation by creating unemployment runs counter to the Ontario government's objective of keeping unemployment at no more than 3 per cent of the labour force. This is a reasonable economic objective, and it is imperative that a more sophisticated strategy than induced unemployment is found to cure inflation.

The Ontario government is not willing to accept the view that unemployment is a just and effective way of solving the problem. The effects will fall on the lowest income groups in the community. It is inconsistent to propose economic goals of tax equity to help these citizens while contributing to their loss of livelihood as a price of solving inflation.

Those were the words of my predecessor one year ago; words which regrettably were not heeded by the government in Ottawa. After the passage of a year, the current employment situation is graver than our most pessimistic predictions at that time.

The Ontario economy now has the highest level of unemployment experienced since 1961. It is a fair comment to point out that the current high unemployment situation was created by deliberate federal policies designed to offset the pressures of the economy, which 18 months ago—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): It has been this way for 18 months. Why start now?

Hon. Mr. McKeough:—were generating an inflationary spiral. At that time, the federal government initiated policies aimed at curbing the rate of growth of both public and private sector demand. The philosophy of this approach was that with less public sector demand, the pressure for price increases would be less severe.

The capacity of provincial and municipal governments to involve themselves in economic stabilization policies is considerably more restricted than that of the federal government. We simply do not have the same massive access to income tax fields and credit facilities. We have, however, tried to keep in step with federal objectives and policies and there was some tightening of the belt by the provincial-municipal sector across the country.

The major instruments of slowdown were tight money and a massive federal government budgetary surplus. These policies began to take hold in the early part of 1970, and until quite recently, aggregate demand declined progressively. There has been some improvement in economic growth in recent months, but it is still fragile and in the initial stages of recovery.

The federal government has over the last few months introduced new measures and relaxed older policies in order to bring about such a recovery, since inflationary pressures have become much less severe. The private sector is now slowly beginning to show some signs of renewed growth, having been through a period of severe profit declines and cost-cutting.

However, the recent relaxation of the anti-inflationary monetary and fiscal policies pursued by the federal government has not immediately improved the situation in the labour market. The rising trend in unemployment, which started in the last quarter of 1969, continued throughout 1970 and into the beginning of 1971. The unemployment rate in Ontario increased from 3.2 per cent in 1969 to 4.3 per cent in 1970, and in February, 1971, was 5.2 per cent on a seasonally adjusted basis and 6.5 per cent in actual terms.

The number of new jobs created decreased sharply in 1970. Employment increased by only two per cent as compared with a 3.7 per cent increase in 1969 and an average annual rate of growth of about 2.8 per cent for the period of 1957-1970.

While on the average we had 134,000 persons unemployed in the province in 1970, this winter unemployment increased to over 200,000. This compares unfavourably with an average of 134,000 unemployed in the first quarter of 1970. Bad weather, the prolonged General Motors strike, and the recent rather sharp rise in the female labour force participation rates can be offered as partial explanations. However, increased interest in employment opportunities shown by females comes partially as an effect of difficult labour market conditions rather than as a cause. As the family breadwinners are laid off, it is a sad fact of life that many housewives are forced to seek work in order to maintain the family income.

There has also been a most disturbing increase in the number of older persons losing their jobs. It is difficult to believe that these people, with many years of service to the community, will find it easy to regain entry to the job market when the economy recovers.

The problem is not just one of numbers of unemployed but is also one of the duration of unemployment. The long-term unemployed, that is those on the unemployment insurance claims registered for 27 weeks or more, increased from an average of approximately 13,000 in 1969 to over 30,000 in 1970 in Ontario. These are people who have been in the labour market for some time.

The rate of economic growth late in 1970 accelerated slightly, but this growth can be maintained only if continuous stimulus is applied. The Bank of Canada is pushing an expansionary policy—short-term interest rates are dropping rapidly and the money supply is growing at a record pace. Monetary policy itself, however, is not enough. Vigorous fiscal measures are needed to secure the necessary expansion in real demand to absorb the normal growth in the labour force.

We have a right to expect the federal government to adopt the required policies, and now. A reduction in taxes could bring and maintain the required stimulus to keep the Ontario unemployment rate to the 4.3 per cent level of 1970. I should like also to emphasize that a general slowdown in the economy cannot be tackled properly by concentrating only on regional measures designed for areas of highest unemployment. There should be a concern for maximizing growth everywhere in economic and fiscal policy packages.

It should be stressed here that young people in the 14 to 24 year age bracket have been hit most severely by the rise in unemployment. There were almost twice as many people in the 14 to 24 year age group unemployed in the first two months of this year than there were in January and February, 1970. There may be 60,000 young people in this age group unemployed in 1971 on average, or about 40 per cent of all the unemployed.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say, sir, this picture is bleak and it is likely to remain so if there are no substantive changes in the present federal economic policy in the next few months. The unemployment rate could easily average 4.9 per cent of the labour force, which means that we would have an average of 157,000 people out of work in Ontario.

The implementation of appropriate fiscal and monetary policies could bring a higher rate of growth to the Ontario gross provincial product in 1971 and considerably improve conditions elsewhere in Canada. Much of this growth would be an increase in the output of goods and services with moderate price increases.

There is an immediate need for increases in consumer spending and investment to bring the provincial economy back to a full-employment level of three per cent. To do this we shall need at least 150,000 new jobs this year. To put that in perspective: Normally we have been creating in the neighbourhood of 100,000 jobs a year; 100,000 jobs this year would reduce the rate of unemployment to 4.3 per cent. To get back to three per cent unemployment we need to create at least 150,000 jobs this year.

The province, as I have pointed out, has been aware of these problems for some time and we have repeatedly pointed out to the federal government that we are prepared to co-operate to reinforce any measures which it implements to support the economy.

The time is now appropriate for the federal government to enact further measures to reinforce the early recovery of the economy. Steps must be taken which are resolute and positive. Action must be prompt and must be such that it will have an immediate impact on the economy as a whole. For this purpose we strongly recommend the elimination of the federal surtaxes on personal and corporate incomes—

Mr. Sargent: What is this government going to do? Forget about them?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This would allow increased consumer spending and provide business with an incentive to invest.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): The minister should be sitting beside Stanfield.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Without such fiscal measures the recovery of investment expenditures may be long delayed. In addition to a tax cut, monetary policy should be mutually reinforcing. By forcing interest rates down and lowering the exchange value of the Canadian dollar, a powerful stimulus would be given to our export industries—automotive parts, pulp and paper and small manufacturers. Consumer purchases of durables and housing—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Is the Treasurer pronouncing a tax cut today?

Mr. Sargent: He has said this before.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Pay attention to this. This is good.

Mr. Sargent: Did the minister read the editorials?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Consumer purchases of durables and housing would also expand.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Take the tax off production machinery then.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: At the present level of economic activity inadequate demand is undoubtedly an important factor in the low rate of investment. There is, however, another factor which has a great influence. The factor to which I am referring is the uncertainty engendered by the lack of decisiveness in a number of federal economic policies. The discussion of the federal white paper on taxation was a valuable exercise in participatory democracy.

Mr. T. Reid: His speech is bombing like the government's housing project.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: However, it did have the disadvantage that it was difficult for those who were about to make business investments to assess the conditions under which they would have to operate. We look for some mechanism whereby a full examination of taxation measures can be achieved without creating the public uncertainty that we have faced during the last two years.

Mr. Sargent: And people will still be unemployed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But the tax policy is not the only area of uncertainty to which I must allude. Another major area of uncertainty in federal policies is Canada's position concerning foreign investment. We consider a discussion of these issues to be vital and, as you know, we plan to have a full public examination of these matters in the near future.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): The former Premier said that was a phony issue.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is our hope that the conference announced in the Speech from the Throne will bring many issues into the open and allow sound government decisions to be made.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): They have been in the open for years.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, I have dwelt at some length on the measures that we expect and hope the federal government will implement during the next months. We feel that the situation is very serious, and have taken cognizance of this in formulating our own policies. May I first draw your attention to a number of policies that we have already announced. As you know, we plan to participate in a $500-million housing programme over the next few months.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): He is back on that one. What a phony.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He did not know anything about this programme when I asked him a question on Friday.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will do it in spite of you fellows. You fellows would hate to see it, would you not?

Mr. J. Renwick: This should be a great psychological help to the unemployed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In addition, we have provided jobs for approximately 12,000 persons through a variety of programmes during the present wintertime crisis. We also plan, as announced, to provide 14,000 jobs for students during the summer months.

Beyond this, the province is dedicated to policies—

Mr. Sargent: So this is the government's programme.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —that eliminate all unnecessary government expenditures—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Yes, yes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and, at the same time, stimulate the private sector of the economy.

Mr. Singer: Why not start with the ONR; that is a good one.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Does the member want to speak, Mr. Speaker? Has he a question?

Mr. Singer: Later.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —and, at the same time stimulate the private sector of the economy where there is sufficient flexibility in the provincial budget to allow us to do so. I must remind members of the House, through you, sir, that the amount of discretionary fiscal policy that the provincial government can normally undertake is very limited, representing no more than a few per cent of the total budget.

Mr. Sargent: Did the minister ever hear of fixing the building code?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are, however, actively reviewing tax measures that will serve, as we explained in our discussion of federal government policies, to stimulate the economy further. It is not possible for me to proceed further on this matter until my budget speech on April 26, but let me assure you, sir, and the members of the House, that we will take all measures that we can conscientiously countenance to relieve the present deplorable situation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we join with the government in expressing our grave concern of the serious unemployment prevailing in Ontario and throughout Canada. I listened to the Treasurer with a great deal of interest, particularly when he was talking about steps which should be taken not only by the government of Canada but which could reasonably be adopted by this government.

For that reason we shall pay some very careful attention indeed to his announcement in the provincial budget, expected on April 26. Certainly his comments regarding tax reduction would lead us to believe that he has come as close as is humanly possible to an announcement, before the fact, of budgetary tax reduction and we look forward to seeing just what form that will take.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: I feel that this debate is a useful one. If we were simply to leave it to the Throne debate itself it would of course be diluted in a good many other important matters that must be discussed which are strictly federal matters. Therefore, setting aside this day, or whatever period of time is necessary, to give the members of the Legislature an opportunity to express their views is certainly welcome on this side.

I think it is essential, however, that we stress—certainly from this side of the House

—what steps the government of Ontario might have taken in the past and should take in the future to improve this situation. I had the impression that the speech delivered by the Treasurer, completed a few moments ago, might well have been delivered by his federal leader. There seems to be a certain weakness in the opposition at the federal level and perhaps the Treasurer of Ontario is attempting to fill that gap.

In answer to my questions asked on the second day of the session, the Premier of Ontario stated that the reason the federal funds to assist in measures combating unemployment were not taken up more quickly by his government and that of his predecessor was that the effective date of the regulations was April 1 and Ontario was ready with plans for that date—at least it met that deadline by about eight or nine days.

I feel that his comments were essentially misleading. He knows as well as I, and all other members of the House, that $17 million has been available to the province and it was necessary—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): What does the hon. member mean by “available”?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I can explain to the Provincial Secretary, who as usual is labouring under a heavy load of misapprehensions, that other more progressive governments were able to bring forward specific programmes, have them approved and spend the money.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No. Just tell us what he means by “available”.

Mr. Nixon: That money has already been put into circulation; for example in the Province of Quebec, and I give the House these specific pieces of information.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Borrow money, borrow money!

Mr. Nixon: The federal announcement was on December 9, 1970, and the federal government made available to the Province of Ontario the right to $17 million to counteract unemployment in this province. Obviously that is not enough money, but it is a specific programme and I want to refer to it.

The Premier's statement with reference to the deadline of April 1 was seriously misleading. As early as February 15, in this year, Quebec had signed an agreement with the federal government for $16 million of capital projects and as of April 1, $10 million of that fund had actually been disbursed to fund specific projects in that province.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is amateur hour over there again.

Mr. Nixon: Again, by April 1, out of a total federal programme of $160 million—and again I would say it is inadequate, but it happens to be the federal programme for this year—

Mr. MacDonald: A Liberal programme.

Mr. Nixon:—a total of $115 million worth of provincial projects had already been approved—none of these in the Province of Ontario, because this government did not follow the federal initiative.

The reasons for the delay are obscure. Obviously the government opposite, under the present Premier and his predecessor, had its mind on other matters. But surely in those calm days, when the former Premier of Ontario was beginning to relax and put his feet up and look at the plans and specifications for sailing ships and other things, he might very well have taken the advantage to use these federal funds. Instead of that, he passed it over to his successor who, I must say, in the few days immediately following his appointment, saw to it that at least the announcement was made.

We do not know who is responsible. All we know is that we lag, once again, far behind, not the government of Canada, but the other provincial jurisdictions, and I think that is a significant thing.

There is another area, while I am talking about this. The Premier opposite—and certainly the Treasurer, if he has done his homework in his new portfolio—is aware that the government of Canada announced to the provinces almost two years ago that it was prepared to withdraw from 15 per cent of its take of the corporation income tax available from the mining industry. It was put to the provinces to make their own individual decisions as to how this money would be used. The provinces could simply fill that room themselves and thus increase their own net income from that source or they could undertake other programmes to foster expansion of the mining industry.

Once again, the Province of Quebec—and I believe this was under the Union Nationale jurisdiction—immediately saw fit to use this room to expand the prospects of the mining industry there and it reflects in the level of employment in the mining community in that province.

The Province of Ontario has taken no action. I put it specifically both to the Premier and to the former Treasurer, in a debate similar to this that was undertaken this fall, and said it was our position that the province should not take up this additional income but should make it available to the mining community itself, not in any way to improve their incomes except in the long run, because it should be made available under an inspected programme so that these additional funds would be channelled into the expansion of exploration and development.

If that had been undertaken at the time the federal government made this tax room available—now almost two years ago—then the problems that we face in the Tri-Town area because of the closing down of those mining communities might very well have been obviated.

The Treasurer is speaking to the Premier now and perhaps they can come up with a decision in short order, because it seems to me that the advisers to the Treasurer and the former Treasurer have been lax in not putting forward a positive programme that could have made available the usefulness of this initiative; not because it comes from the federal government, but because other provinces have reacted differently to this province and that is where the comparison must come.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Just one point of order so that the record is clear. I am advised that the federal government made that statement not two years ago but less than a year ago. I would, of course, further point out—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member would want to be quite fair. This would have been no help in the Tri-Town area because those particular firms were not paying tax in any case.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor and will continue with his remarks.

Mr. Nixon: If I simply might reiterate the point that other provinces accepted this opportunity and built on it with more imagination than this province.

Mr. Singer: That would not be hard either.

Mr. Nixon: We have been reduced, on the part of the government, simply to saying that unemployment is the responsibility of another jurisdiction. It is difficult to decide that. The Premier and his chief adviser, the Treasurer, are quite convinced that the responsibility lies in only one place. We, on this side, feel it is much broader than that.

My second point actually is a bit of history—and fairly recent history—and I know that the Treasurer will check my dates in these matters because it has to do with those periods of time during which the government of Canada was attempting to take some of the heat off the economy. Even Conservatives opposite were concerned about the pressures of inflation and what it was doing not only to those people who are earning wages and living on fixed incomes, in the case of our pensioners, but how it was affecting the business community. I think, as a matter of fact, the present Minister of University Affairs, the former Minister of Revenues (Mr. White), said on December 23, 1969: "It is not appropriate for Ontario to be blamed for the inflationary spiral which is in effect an international problem."

Mr. Singer: Who said that?

Mr. Nixon: The former Minister of Revenue. I think that he is right. I think that he was right on that occasion. Certainly the pressures of inflation, if not worldwide, were certainly experienced by most of the jurisdictions in the free world and I would ask that reasonable gentleman to draw his own conclusions with regard to the matter that we are discussing today. Let us, Mr. Speaker, look at the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): If the hon. gentleman is inviting a comment—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, not at all.

Mr. Speaker: There is no point for comment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Might I suggest that unless it is a matter of personal privilege or a point of order, the members on all sides of the House refrain from interrupting the speaker who has the floor. The hon. Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Then during the period of the federal programme to contain the economy and take some of the heat out from under it—I am looking at the date here—I believe one of the most important announcements was made on December 23, 1969, which prompted the then Minister of Revenue to wash his hands of Ontario's responsibility in that situation. That, members know—

Hon. Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

The hon. Leader of the Opposition is making certain assertions and asserting that he is quoting a position held by me. I think in fairness I should have the opportunity to contrast the inflationary conditions which existed in the western world and which did indeed affect Canada with the fact that since that time international conditions have not increased unemployment but, in fact, international conditions have greatly decreased unemployment in Canada from what it would otherwise have been.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister, of course, has no point of order and he has every opportunity to engage in the debate later and make his point. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, as a result of that federal programme, there was a lot of political flak, not only today but over the many months since the original announcements. After all, federal civil servants were dismissed and laid off. The federal programmes were reduced. Even though the hon. Treasurer deemed fit to quote the former Premier, we all know that the response of the government of Ontario was substantially, by its words, in support of a programme under federal initiative to contain and control the expansion of the economy at that time. I remember seeing a copy of a letter signed by John Parmenter Robarts, or whatever his name is—

Mr. Singer: Himself?

Mr. Nixon: —by himself, which was sent to the heads of all of the municipalities—I regret that I do not have a copy of the letter here—telling them to undertake every possible means under their control and at their disposal to cut expenditures, particularly capital expenditures, at the municipal level.

It was the proper thing to do, and a good many of the municipalities took it very seriously and I think there was a reduction of at least the potential expenditures at the municipal level, and there certainly was at the federal level, but in the meantime the provincial budget continued to soar and spiral, reaching almost $4 billion last year. At the very same time when this was going on, we would have expected this administration to take some steps at least to order their affairs to bolster substantially what was, according to the public expectation, a Canada-wide programme.

I ask you, sir, to recall that during that specific period of time this government entered into a building programme, the like of which we have not seen for many years. The new office complex directly to the east of this building, a project which had been postponed for a few months, was entered into at a cost of $64 million at the very time when other jurisdictions, both municipal and federal, were attempting to reduce the pressure on the building trades.

Mr. Trotter: They did it with borrowed money.

Mr. Nixon: On August 6, 1969, the federal government announced that the Prices and Incomes Commission and the federal government were engaging in a series of discussions aimed at reducing inflationary provincial capital expenditures. In fact, it became public knowledge that throughout the months of July and August, 1969, several meetings took place between the Prices and Incomes Commission and senior provincial civil servants. Yet in the very same month, on August 27, 1969, in fact, the government of Ontario, through the then Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) let the initial contract for Ontario Place, an expenditure, a special expenditure, of $13 million.

Mr. Singer: Now $25 million.

Mr. Nixon: If there ever was a capital expenditure that was non-essential in the context of a tough struggle against inflation, Ontario Place was it. It is a beautiful frill which could have been constructed at a low point in the business cycle, and to let the tender at the peak of the inflationary period was certainly wrong.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Then, Mr. Speaker, on October 24, 1969—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Then, Mr. Speaker, on October 24 of that same year, just two months after the negotiations, the government of Ontario let tenders for the Mowat and Hearst blocks of the Queen's Park complex for an additional expenditure of $24 million.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) has been interjecting in the last few moments, and his new ministry, which is located at the corner of Bay and Bloor, with the minister's suite on the 8th—or 9th floor is it?—where he can look down on the green fields of downtown Toronto, was built in that very same period of time.

Mr. Singer: Been redecorated three times? Or just twice? How many times did he have it redone?

Mr. Nixon: The new ministry of Financial and Commercial Affairs was built at the same time at the corner of Wellesley and Yonge Streets. This is the way, Mr. Speaker, that this particular government tried to control the pressures of inflation. It may be, Mr. Speaker, that they are prepared to say that their former leader was clairvoyant enough to know that these buildings should have been built at a time of very high employment when those in the building trades were already under serious competition, and which resulted in some of the largest wage boosts of any particular area in the whole economy.

What should have happened is that the Minister of Public Works, or the Premier if it was considered important enough, should have come before this House and said, "Here are the plans for a new office building for our public servants because we believe that these civil servants should be brought home to Queen's Park." Remember that lovely phrase? That was the justification. He might have gone further and said, "Here are the plans for a new Department of Agriculture that we are building in the heart of downtown Toronto, a new institute—"

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Of course it was a leaseback. It would not have been built if the government had not given the order. It was a leaseback. We understand leasebacks. Another leaseback was the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, something that the former minister himself did not know what it would cost, Mr. Speaker. When we asked him—we pressed him and pressed him—he finally said it would cost only $2 million a year for 30 years. Of course, he said, the janitorial services will be thrown in at no extra charge.

This is the approach that that government opposite has taken during these years of heavy inflationary pressure. They mouth the kind of support for the government of Canada; the Minister of Revenue got up and said, "Of course, this is world-wide and there is nothing that we can do about it." They went their merry way, spending the taxpayers' funds with the profligacy that I have described to you.

What they should have done and what would have been done under a Liberal administration was the acceptance of the fact that we do need something at the Exhibition; maybe built on steps or on stilts out in the lake there. I think that is going to be a great building. Certainly it has been promoted sufficiently to us, but to build it at a time of inflationary pressures is ridiculous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Members are not very happy over there. Why do they not keep quiet and listen for a while?

Noisemakers; empty noisemakers!

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, these plans should have been presented to us and approved after debate. The money should have been debated and voted and put in the Ontario Savings Office if we could not find perhaps even a better or safer place to invest it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Absolutely; there is nothing wrong with it. Then, as soon as the economic indicators began to turn down last year, even if the Legislature had not been in session, it would have been the responsibility of the government to pull the plans off the shelf—completed, discussed and approved—take the money out of the bank and get the programmes going which could have had some reasonable effect on priming our economy; instead of announcing a few more liquor stores in Tory ridings which was the extent of the government's approach.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: If this was not so absurd it would be funny.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Right, all right, there is nothing the matter, at least, with using the funds at our disposal—which in the building of highways and public buildings amount to $750 million to $800 million a year—as a fiscal instrument for once, rather than as an instrument of Conservative patronage. This is surely what must be done. It should have been done in the past and it must be done in the future, Mr. Speaker.

The government has lost opportunities for increasing job opportunities in Ontario by lack of an overall industrial strategy. For example, Ontario Hydro in April, 1970, signed a contract with the Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company to export up to 37 kilowatts of power per day over the next 10 years to the Boise Cascade paper plant in International Falls, Minnesota. According to the statements made by O-M's vice-president Crump at the National Energy Board's hearings in February of this year, a substantial amount of that total is required for the construction of two new facilities, a veneer mill and a stud mill, in International Falls—that is on the American side of the river.

The government of Ontario has an obligation to get a complete and accurate breakdown from the National Energy Board of these figures. The minister has announced the withdrawal of, or at least a reconsideration of their support, but we should know how much of the energy is to be used for normal growth as opposed to how much is to be used for new facilities on the American side. It is not clear why Ontario could not have negotiated a better bargain, if it is supplying the relatively inexpensive power to Boise Cascade. At least, those additional facilities could have been built in Fort Frances where the employment situation is as desperate as it is anywhere else.

We are lacking this sort of an approach, so that the facilities and the strength, the responsibilities and the powers of the government of Ontario can be brought to bear. The most recent example is that which was put before us in the Speech from the Throne and, after that, rather weakly defended by the new Minister of Trade and Development in charge of housing.

In addition to the government dragging its feet on the federal loan, which I have already referred to, the Throne Speech promised—what was it?—"a potential of 132,000 jobs in the next year" which has been shown to be a near fraudulent overstatement. If we accept the Ontario Housing Corporation's own figure in this matter, the programme will produce 4,000 more units this year than last, and if we apply the Ontario Housing Corporation's own ratio of 44 jobs per unit, we reach a total of 17,600 jobs, just one-eighth of the total announced in the Throne Speech. And even that figure, Mr. Speaker, is conditional upon acquiring sites for the units.

Also I think we should recall that no time limit was put on this programme. They may do it over the next 10 years, or, like so many of the government's housing programmes, they may not do it at all.

Certainly to be fair, we could add another 1,500 jobs as a consequence of the direct provincial participation in the guaranteed mortgage loan programme, but if we assume that the banks would have earmarked their $100 million for housing in any event—after all they are not—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Minister of Trade and Development mean to say that they are doing it out of the goodness of their hearts and just for Allan Grossman? Come again! The minister is just being flappable.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): They are doing it because our government is making arrangements.

Mr. Nixon: The figure of 19,000 jobs is an absolute maximum when we examine the statement made by the minister over the last few days. Now this total must be compared with the most recent Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures we have on employment in Ontario, which shows that 201,000 people are presently looking for work.

The 1970 Ontario budget papers reveal that the total federal government expenditure in Ontario during the 1968-1969 fiscal year was estimated at $3.86 billion, while total Ontario government expenditures amounted to $3.6 billion—they are roughly equal, until, of course, we remember that as part of our income there is a $980 million block transfer as our share of the income tax, plus half the cost of education, plus more than half the cost of welfare—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Half the cost of what?

Mr. Nixon: Post-secondary education.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Then say so.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): And not capital cost either.

Mr. Nixon: All right, all right, which means, of course, that there is a substantial federal involvement in all of our programmes. As a matter of fact when the former Minister of Education used to go about opening these "Hon. William G. Davis Schools" around the province—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just five.

Mr. Nixon: There were just five? That is fine. But I used to get a little edgy because poor old Ben Benson up there was getting the blows from everybody for collecting all the tax, the money then comes back here and is handed out for school construction and you know who goes and cuts the ribbon and smiles broadly at his supporters in the area.

An hon. member: If you have seen some of the films—they are pretty expensive.

Mr. Bullbrook: Senior citizens' housing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will deduct half of that money again from—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Leader of the Opposition forgets he takes the money from here first and hands it back.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would simply suggest to you, sir, that the municipal expenditures, running last year at about $1.58 billion, when added to our provincial expenditures mean that we have a much larger fiscal area of responsibility here even than the federal government.

So for the Treasurer to say there is such a small bit we can do, such a small percentage of the total public expenditures over which we have control, that we must turn to the government of Canada for initiatives, I would say—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: To get some of our own money back.

Mr. Nixon: —certainly we will, we should, and we must look to the government of Canada for initiative and leadership, but the government of Ontario must take initiatives and leadership as well.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: The Premier made reference to the fact that this year there were going to be 1,400 jobs for young people provided as a direct response to the government programme. Since he is so careful in his precision and accuracy today, he should have said that this is less than 4,000 jobs more than were provided last year. My point is this, that although—it is a fact. I see that the Minister of Trade and Development is sneering and scowling, it happens to be a fact; it is a fact. Obviously he is incompetent.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The minister is very sensitive today.

Mr. Nixon: He does not know how to assess the value of these programmes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The hon. member is trying to distort it.

Mr. Nixon: There is no distortion. When the Treasurer says they are providing 14,000 jobs, I am saying fine, they provided 11,000 last year, so that if we are going to assess its value we have got to know what the change is.

Mr. Lewis: The minister dares use that word "distortion" to us?

Mr. Nixon: It is the change that means everything, and it is change which you fellows resist.

I think that it was the public relations experts that got at the minister when they devised the name for the programme which eludes me, but the acronym for which spells out the word SWEEP. I think the minister is trying to get back to those great old days of Home Ownership Made Easy and wild rivers—some members may remember that particular Speech from the Throne which was an election document. I am afraid those fellows opposite have fallen a bit short of the mark in their efforts as read to us, particularly in the area of dealing with employment that they put before us a few days ago.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): It will be a great sweep.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have never heard any of these and I do not suppose we ever will.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would assure you sir, that we on this side are deeply concerned with the unemployment levels of the province. Unlike the government opposite, we are prepared to say that the province has the funds and the responsibility to do more than has been done in recent weeks and months. One of the first things that must be made public is factual criticism of the, let us say, rather weak approach during recent months that this government has put forward.

Mr. Trotter: Very weak approach.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly the Premier's excuse for his delay in picking up the federal funds to foster public works is a poor one indeed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Would the member mind saying "loans."

Mr. Nixon: As a matter of fact, I have a feeling that most of those funds were spent on printing signs saying: "These elm trees are cut down in a programme by the Province of Ontario, Prime Minister William G. Davis." I have the impression that those signs were up, I think it was early Saturday morning following his elevation. Somebody in The Department of Highways is worried about his job and he does not want to get into trouble with the new Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Two weeks, it took two weeks.

Mr. Lewis: To put up some signs?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, we agree with the contention of the resolution. I have tried in as mild a way as I can, and in as factual a way as can be understood by members opposite and yourself, sir, to say that we agree with the resolution—

Hon. Mr. White: The hon. member did not discuss the issue at all.

Mr. Nixon:—but we feel that there is a substantial weakness in it. Particularly a weakness in the points put forward by the Treasurer who is the main spokesman for the government side. That is, he is trying to wash his hands like Pontius Pilate and say that the responsibility lies elsewhere. Just like the Minister of Revenue did so many months ago, when he said, "We have nothing to do with inflation, it is world-wide."

So, sir, in order to point up these matters I would say that we agree with the resolution but it does not go far enough, and therefore I move, seconded by Mr. Singer, that the following words be added: "And regrets that the government of Ontario has failed to take any meaningful steps to help alleviate this serious situation."

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member does not have one idea of what he has said today.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: That is right, fellows. That is right. The member knows that is right.

Mr. Singer: That is right. The Treasurer was so late that shouting is not going to protect him. Pity him—that is the worst speech he has given.

An hon. member: I did not think he could be worse than before, but he was.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He ought to be quiet, like I am.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there are, as always, certain comparisons between the federal Liberals and their dependents in the Ontario Legislature. It is a matter of fact that no government in Canada has, as one can recall, wreaked more havoc in terms of unemployment in this country than the federal Liberals. It is indeed remarkable that the Liberal Party in Ontario can participate in this debate and not make a single concrete suggestion to alter the situation in Ontario through the entire course of its remarks.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: We just heard the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition has a point of order.

Mr. Nixon: I call to your attention, sir, the use of the 15 per cent rebate on the mining payments which has not been used by this province as one specific area which is probably too sophisticated for the leader of the NDP to understand.

Mr. Lewis: It certainly is too sophisticated.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Speaking to the point of order, as the hon. Leader of the Opposition should know, what Quebec has done has not taken effect. It is a proposal which was advanced by Mr. Benson in the federal white paper, which he has since backed off from and the situation has not changed at all. It has not changed at all.

Mr. Nixon: Quebec has it in this area.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Quebec has not moved; it does not have the liberty to move.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

An hon. member: That is right. We say we will do it; is that all right?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Wrong again.

Mr. Nixon: Or you say you will not do it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Wrong again!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I know with what exultation the 207,000 unemployed in Ontario will greet the rebating of the 15 per cent tax on mining companies as a panacea to solve unemployment in the province and they will look on it—

Mr. Nixon: He is worried about the silver miners.

Mr. Lewis: It is the most nonsensical solution I have heard of in some time.

An hon. member: Better than the Tories' solution, and that is saying a lot.

Mr. Lewis: It was fairly obvious why the debate was called, if the Premier will allow me. It was called to engage in the not so gentle clouting of the federal Liberals, and for the provincial Conservatives to crow with self-congratulatory ardour at their own achievements. The first can still be done, of course—it is possible to take on the federal Liberals from time to time—but the second is now impossible; the crowing is now impossible in the light of the way in which you so expertly lanced yourselves over the last few days on the economic cornerstone of your Throne Speech policy.

More will come of that in a moment: I make no apologia for the federal Liberals; nothing can be said of them which is sufficiently of feeling and toughness. Doubtless the Prime Minister—I mean Pierre Elliott Trudeau—has a love affair with the Canadian people which will wear off at some point in time and with it there will be revealed as cynical and as arrogant an abuse of power as we have—

Mr. T. Reid: The hon. member better hope so. Is his son running for mayor?

Mr. Lewis: My son is not yet of age; when he is I will commend it to him.

Mr. Sargent: We are just lucky we have you people here.

Mr. Lewis: It is interesting to note the use of the reference to $17 million which the federal Liberals offered. Another federal Liberal, one sought feverishly by the provincial counterparts, termed it an economic and moral disaster. Now obviously even for Paul Hellyer the federal policy is indefensible. It is interesting to see it defended here this afternoon.

The upshot of that detestable policy federally, as everyone knows, is 675,000 unemployed across the country, and in Ontario, workers expendable in the so-called fight against inflation to the level of 207,000 unemployed. This province has not yet seen fit to retrieve the situation.

Mr. Speaker, these are Ontario workers. While it is true that the federal policy has contributed enormously to the levels of unemployment, and while it is true that the so-called world-wide inflation has been fought in Canadian terms by dismissing people from the work force in arbitrary, bloodless ways—in a way which shows as little milk of human kindness flowing through a politician's veins as it would be possible to imagine—there has nonetheless in this province, been no evidence of any appreciable policy to handle matters of unemployment.

I may say, if the provincial Treasurer will allow me, that what was disappointing about his remarks at the beginning of today's debate was that they managed to convey a résumé of everything the government has so far done—most of which, Mr. Speaker, is entirely inconsequential in terms of the problems with which we are faced.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, our record ranks with the worst in the nation. One cannot imagine a more disgraceful litany of inactivity than has characterized the Conservative government in Ontario in the last several months. One might look at the pattern, Mr. Speaker. In December, there were 146,000 unemployed; in January, 201,000; in February, 207,000.

The figures for March are not yet published, but in any given month over last year we are between 48 per cent and 67 per cent beyond the previous unemployment levels, and all of it countenanced with equanimity by the Conservative government opposite.

As a matter of fact, gentlemen, during the Tory leadership race, 6,000 additional Ontario workers were unemployed. Everything we did throughout those months to attempt to force a special sitting of the Legislature, to plead with the then Premier to introduce certain regulatory changes in the laws, to ask for specific job enactment policy—everything we did during that period of time, Mr. Speaker, was scorned and mocked and went unheeded. As a result the government reaps the whirlwind which is felt today, and uneasy lies the head that wears the crown of virtue about job-creating policies, as we will see in just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a look at the effects generally, beyond those of statistical enumeration. The loss of goods and services which Canada has suffered as a result of people not working is roughly tabulated this way; it is generally conceded, as the Premier and the Treasurer know, that for every one per cent of unemployed we lose approximately $1.5 billion of gross national product. If it were possible to reduce our unemployment levels even now to what the Treasurer called a tolerable level of three per cent—but which we reject as intolerable—we would be able to generate for the economy between $4.5 billion and $5 billion worth of goods and services—almost 25 per cent of which would return by way of taxes. It would allow us to generate the kind of pump priming which most members in this House believe is necessary in order to get the economy moving again.

Let me put it another way, Mr. Speaker; to catch the full flavour of it. Between August of 1969 and August of 1970 in the Province of Ontario, the employable heads of families on welfare rose by 79 per cent. The employable single people on welfare rose by 129 per cent. The total number of employable people of all categories on welfare in Ontario in that period of time rose by 98 per cent.

Close to half the people receiving general welfare assistance today, Mr. Speaker, are employable, and in 1970 this government saw fit to disburse in excess of $30 million by way of general welfare assistance to those desperately seeking employment. One can then imagine what the projected figures for 1971 are likely to be like.

Those on fixed incomes in this extraordinary period of continuing inflation (because inflation has not been contained) and reckless unemployment (because unemployment continues to accelerate) have felt the brunt most grievously. There is yet to be the slightest suggestion on the part of the provincial government that it would increase allowances to people on pensions or other welfare allowances so as to bring them into line with the cost of living.

In other words, every single opportunity for the gentlemen opposite to reverse the balance and to correct it has been avoided. What have we done; what have we done in the Province of Ontario? Let me briefly recollect.

Our programme has been, Mr. Speaker, in two parts:

1. A provincial-municipal grants programme providing $7.5 million to create 7,500 jobs lasting approximately three months each—which is less than 2,000 man-years of work, to put it in the context which the Minister of Trade and Development now uses.

2. In Ontario at the moment we have a seasonal employment programme involved primarily with elm tree removal. Can you imagine the full weight of intellectual creativity given to the government's civil servants to have fastened on the elm tree removal programme? Can you think of how all of them came together, all the weighty intellects of government, Treasury Board and departments alike, sitting down to devise a scheme which would erode the extraordinary unemployment levels and fashion 2,500 jobs for 3½ months, each costing $4.6 million, to remove dead elm trees? That works out to about 800 man-years.

Parks improvement: 1,550 jobs at $3 million or 700 man-years. Accelerated highway construction: 370 jobs for $1.75 million, or 400 man-years.

The total they have managed to provide in the second programme is something like 4,400 jobs or, if you add it all together, 11,920 jobs provided by the Province of Ontario to combat unemployment; 11,920 jobs.

The unemployment figures went up five times that level during the Tory leadership race alone, and the government pretends to come into this Legislature and deplore the unemployment levels in Ontario.

It really smacks of bad grace that the Premier thinks that a programme of that kind is sufficient on which to base a pugnacious declaration this afternoon—11,920 jobs, 207,000 people unemployed, and that is supposed to masquerade as a programme responding to the crisis of unemployment.

The government's programme is, in fact, a travesty. It is doing incalculable damage to the long-term economic interests of the province—not to mention, if you will allow me to say it, the long-term political interests of the Tory party. They should surely be able to manage something rather more effective and rather more dramatic and impactful than that particular programme.

I want to make some comparisons this afternoon, Mr. Speaker. I shall not belabour them at length, and I am not going to berate the government unduly. But I want to make some comparisons, which are really rather interesting, with another province which has a different kind of government, and which had an almost identical unemployment level—five per cent in Manitoba as compared to 4.7 per cent in Ontario.

By using public works programmes and the sudden infusion of public housing stepped up for the winter months and a municipal winter works programme, which was to be completed by June 15, and by paying the labour costs for various municipal undertakings right across the province, the Province of Manitoba managed to create 10,000 jobs and 4,500 man-years of work, compared to Ontario's 11,920 jobs and 4,000 man-years of work.

In other words—think of it, Mr. Speaker, just for a moment—the Province of Manitoba created one additional job for every 69 persons in the labour force. The Province of Ontario created one additional job for every 782 persons in the labour force. That is really a phenomenal comparison. Let me make it even more direct.

The Manitoba population is 13 per cent of that of Ontario. Its labour force is 12 per cent of that of Ontario. Its gross provincial product is 11 per cent of that of Ontario. Its revenue returns based on the fiscal year 1970 are around 11 per cent of those of Ontario. But it created decisively greater job opportunities than the Province of Ontario even contemplated, starting from almost exactly the same level of unemployment. As a matter of fact, it was a little higher in the Province of Manitoba.

If we were able to extrapolate the Manitoba experience and apply it to Ontario, we would have had 100,000 new jobs in this province or 45,000 man-years of work. Now 100,000 new jobs, Mr. Speaker, is not a phrase which is in any great repute these days. The Minister of Trade and Development and the Premier have tried to embroider it by suggesting it can be 132,000 new jobs. That, of course, is in ill repute—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not say "new jobs."

Mr. Lewis: We will get to that in a moment.

Mr. Sargent: The minister implied that. Pretty sneaky!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I make the comparison because it is necessary to gain some perspective. There are some who would argue from the Conservative benches, as the minister of the Treasury indicated, that somehow our capacity to invest in Ontario, somehow our own provincial revenue, is sufficiently marginal that a major impact could not be made. But, as I stand here, Mr. Speaker, it is incomprehensible that a government, over a five-month period, is restricted to the creation of 12,000 jobs with 207,000 unemployed, and then brings a resolution into the Legislature which says, "We deplore the economic policies of Ottawa."

If they deplore the absence of policies to fight unemployment, then they must look to themselves, not to Ottawa.

The government then hoped, as the crescendo of public concern mounted, to take the heat off by one of those extravagant pronouncements to which the government is addicted in the Throne Speech.

In the last decade of Conservative administrations, it is doubtful that any economic cornerstone, that any Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, collapsed so quickly and so catastrophically. Reputations cannot be salvaged in that particular fiasco. The government knows; it has the experts; that is what surprises us on this side of the House. It has a Treasury Board with skilled civil servants. It has an Ontario Housing Corporation with skilled civil servants. It has all kinds of people on whom to draw in order to give the financial data and the numerical data on which to base an announcement in the Throne Speech.

The government chose to draw on none of them. It came into the House with an inflated, preposterous assertion. It was unable to defend it in advance; it was unable to defend it in retrospect. It is absolutely indefensible. And yet, all of the material was at hand.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This was prepared by the experts.

Mr. Lewis: All of the material was at hand.

Mr. Nixon: Maybe that is the problem.

Mr. Lewis: I will tell you what the government was doing—it was up to its old tricks again, and thought, that in order to give us the full flavour of continuity with the regime that was, it would introduce it in the Throne Speech. And now the Throne Speech rests in tatters 72 hours after it was introduced. The new Minister of Trade and Development, I hope to refer to this in my own Throne Speech, even has the same speech writer as the old. I was amazed to receive—I am not sure whether it was from the hon. "Stanley Grossman" or the hon. "Allan Randall," one of them—one of his speeches came to my notice; it was the first speech he made. Lo and behold, it was the same speech writer with the same corny jokes, with the same extravagant expletives and with the same nonsensical formulations.

Mr. Nixon: Surely the jokes have got better than that!

Mr. Lewis: How do you expect to run a government in that fashion, when the transition is so obvious?

Mr. Peacock: D-day is fast approaching.

Mr. Lewis: However, the minister, with acute embarrassment, will doubtless correct it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I just told him not to call me Allan J. Grossman.

Mr. Lewis: Right, right. The Throne Speech pronouncement, which was to rescue the unemployment problem, destroyed the credibility of the government. More important than that, Mr. Speaker, it dashed the hopes all over Ontario that something new was in the offing and the government cannot—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what the member is trying to do.

Mr. Lewis: The government cannot play that way with public exploitations.

I want to tell the minister something.

Actually, Mr. Speaker, unadorned, without all the preamble and the reckless use of figures, it is not a bad programme. It is fairly modest. It is well below what even the federal government has projected by way of housing starts.

It is not adequate, but it might have been inserted in the Throne Speech as an indication on the government's part that it was serious about trying to combat unemployment in the Province of Ontario. But it was not that. The minister refused even to give it the substance which it had by overdoing it. Let me just remind him—I want to raise these things and then set them to rest for once.

The Throne Speech promised 30,000 new homes at least. In fact, Mr. Speaker, we will get a total, perhaps, of 8,000 new homes, only 4,000 of which will be built in the public sector by the Ontario Housing Corporation. The credibility gap is too large.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Only 4,000?

Mr. Lewis: Only 4,000 over and above what was before.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Over and above? Well, so what? That is a pretty good record. That is quite an accomplishment.

Mr. Lewis: Right!

Mr. MacDonald: It was a new home construction programme not a continuation of the old one.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just read the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: I have it. I will read it. We will read it together.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Slowly!

Mr. Lewis: It is prefaced by a paragraph talking about unconscionable levels of unemployment: "To combat unemployment and to provide for the needs of our people, the government will commence a new home construction programme." That is pretty clear. Not much room for ambivalence or ambiguity there.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: A new programme?

Mr. Lewis: Right. "Using funds generated from the private sector and the governments of Canada and Ontario, $1.5 billion will be injected into the economy of the province."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Right so far. Everything is right.

Mr. Lewis: Fair enough. "This will establish a potential for 132,000 jobs during the next year, the construction of 30,000 units of housing and shelter for 90,000 people."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Potentially.

Mr. Lewis: Now, entirely implicit in that—everything that is in the Throne Speech suggests that all of that was to be new housing and most, if not all of it, was to be new jobs.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, not at all.

Mr. Lewis: That is what it is.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): All these people up here were wrong.

Mr. Pilkey: The press was wrong then?

Mr. Pitman: The Minister did not explain it very well then.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will deal with that.

Mr. Peacock: What was that? Say that again?

Mr. Lewis: Is the Prime Minister now retreating from his interjections?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. I am not sure to which one I have made it.

Mr. Lewis: Make both of them again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: However, I intend to contribute to the debate.

Mr. Lewis: Fine! I am sorry I was not listening more acutely.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, looking at the programme now as it stands, even if it is fulfilled. The projection of the federal government, of Robert Andas, was a 15 per cent increase across the country—15.5 per cent increase—and even on the basis of the new programme, the increase in Ontario would only be 10.9 per cent.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It would be 25 per cent if we only get 20,000. The member's figures are wrong.

Mr. Lewis: All right. In fact, the new jobs which will be created lie somewhere between 7,000 and 30,000. The figures are very vague. Indeed, it may be the bottom of that limit because no one is certain whether or not those homes will actually be built.

Mr. Pitman: Hear, hear! That is the point.

Mr. Lewis: No one knows that. It is just part of the plethora of promises.

Fourthly, Mr. Speaker—just another observation—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): A hypothesis.

Mr. Lewis: No immediate impact is to be felt from this programme at all. That was perhaps the cruelest stroke. No immediate impact. The government has not even yet received the tenders of which it spoke from the private sector. It has not been able to isolate where the public sector will invest in the immediate short term. It does not know whether those jobs will be created in the summer or in the fall or next year, but the government pretends to tie them to current unemployment levels. That, sir, is dishonest. That is dishonest.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No housing programme will. Can I ask the member a question? Does the hon. member know of any housing programme he could conceive which would put people to work tomorrow?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. Renwick: The minister used it.

Mr. MacDonald: Why did he not bring it up last fall then?

Mr. J. Renwick: That is the fraud.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member thinks we should not have a housing construction programme at all because people cannot be put to work tomorrow?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, with great respect if that is now the case, I do not know what lead time the minister gives his government.

Three months? Six months? He is the minister in charge; I will ask him the question. How long before they begin?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Our programmes now—

Mr. Lewis: No, no, the new programme, the new home construction programme.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is accusing us or me of playing with words and I accuse him now of playing with words. The hon. member implied that because there was a construction programme going on now and the government makes plans not only for the continuation of the record programme we have already put into effect but to add to it, unless we can prove that another man will go to work tomorrow because of the additional programme we have added to it, it does not mean anything. That is utterly absurd.

Mr. Lewis: The minister talked about 132,000 jobs being created in the context of present levels of unemployment. I am just trying to indicate to him that that was calculated in its misleading intent—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member mean we should not have done it at all? We should not have put in a programme?

Mr. Lewis: I will come back to housing. I want to end with some observations about what we would do by way of a housing programme.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, another government in this country, that of Manitoba, moved 1,200 public housing units forward directly into the winter period and began them in a matter of two weeks after the announcement had been made in order to provide interim employment at a time when unemployment levels were so high. But this government was unable to demonstrate where a single new dollar would go into the public sector. It has not received the tenders from the private sector. As I pointed out that the government cannot tell us whether it will be OHC land, CMHC land or private land. It does not know when the effects of this programme will be felt. It cannot masquerade, therefore, behind some grandiose announcement.

Well, it has rebounded on the government in the way it should, because it was not the kind of thing which should ever have been announced. In fact, Mr. Speaker, let me go on: The implication of half a billion dollars, while it may be real, involves something in the area of $71.9 million from the province, which is new money, of which $41.6 million is budgeted for capital investment in 1970-1971.

Now let us see what has happened to provincial capital investment money budgeted by this province for housing purposes. In 1968-1969, the government budgeted $62 million for this purpose. It spent $15.4 million. In 1969-1970, it—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Wrong.

Mr. Lewis: Look at the public accounts. The government budgeted $56 million; it spent $40.2 million. In the immediate years for which information is available, there was a very serious shortfall between the amount of money budgeted for housing investment and the amount of money which the province actually spent. To pretend that there will be any change in the next year without giving us the details is to pretend that somehow the government's housing policies of the past have had substance. I say to the minister they have had no substance at all.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member's figures are entirely wrong. His figures are wrong.

Mr. Lewis: Can I remind the minister that his 1971 housing programme to combat unemployment is an exact duplicate of the 1969 programme announced in the budget, the mortgage programme which flopped. Does he recall the headlines? It was a story by Geoff Stevens on June 25, 1969. Let me read Geoff Stevens' lead paragraph:

FIVE PER CENT DOWN ON HOUSE, LOW
SECOND MORTGAGES UNDER ONTARIO PLAN

The Ontario government will offer $50 million in second mortgages this year to assist an estimated 15,000 middle-income families to purchase condominium units or to buy new homes under the Home Ownership Made Easy programme, Trade and Development Minister Stanley Randall said yesterday.

Do you know that the $50 million was never used; that the government was not able to build a single house or to provide a single mortgage with it; that the then Minister of Trade and Development stood in the House and worried about it, because it could not be picked up in 1969.

As a matter of fact, that minister's announcement to the Legislature: "Which followed negotiations with the leading lending institutions in the province," revealed the government's efforts to attract additional commercial capital into the housing field at a time of rapidly rising interest rates and tightening money supply—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Except that we succeeded at this time.

Mr. Lewis: This was a $50 million—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With, I might say, the initiative of my predecessor we have now succeeded, where he was not able to; that is all.

Mr. Lewis: The 1969 programme was a $50 million success, so it was announced. Then, when it collapsed, the 1970 budget—now note this—announced another $50 million programme, except it turned out to be the same $50 million for condominium and related development.

Mr. MacDonald: They are taking in their own washing.

Mr. Lewis: Back on April 4, 1970, again in The Globe and Mail—this time by Dennis Anderson—the following paragraph occurs:

Anyone who has studied Stanley Randall's record of unfulfilled promises as Ontario's minister in charge of housing probably could not entirely fight off an impulse to skepticism at the announcement this week of a $50 million mortgage fund to help middle-income home buyers. After all, it was only last year that Mr. Randall said the province would establish a $50 million mortgage fund to help middle-income home buyers. The fund was indeed established but it did not help anyone.

In 1969, $50 million; in 1970, $50 million. The only difference is that in 1971 it looks as if the government is only going to spend $20 million.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How much did the Ontario government use in 1970? Does the hon. member know that?

Mr. Lewis: The minister is going to give us those figures.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Use the right figures. Would the member like a correction?

Mr. Lewis: We have asked them from the minister all week. He will speak and he will tell us. Fine.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope they are more accurate than the last time the minister spoke on this topic. I hope we can understand what he says.

Mr. Lewis: I recall to the minister's mind the Malvern project in 1953 when the government acquired the land; 18 years later there is not a single house on that land. I remind the minister of the Chapel Glen housing announcement in 1967, which was going to provide low-cost housing. In 1971, there is not a low-cost house to be had on that land. I remind the minister of the announcement in January, 1967, of the HOME programme—20,000 units to be available to the citizens of Ontario. So far something slightly under 5,000 units have been disbursed to the citizens of Ontario.

How can we invest any of these promises with substance? What possible evidence is there to suggest that anything the government has indicated in the area of housing will emerge as a reality for Ontario? Not only is the plan bizarre in its miscalculation, but it is ill-conceived in the way in which it is designed and it will result in very little indeed. It may result purely in meeting the levels of last year but in no sense providing for what is required this year.

I shall not deal further with it. The minister will enter the debate about housing in an attempt to retrieve the fiasco created by the government itself, whose own ability to govern in situations like this comes seriously under question.

Mr. Speaker, let me say that there are solutions. Some have been hinted at. Let me expand them. They are all subject to one premise and the premise very simply is that of full employment for the Province of Ontario. It is a premise which must provide employment for everyone, short of perhaps one to two per cent of the population, along the following five proposals:

1. A house-building programme in Ontario to a level in excess of 100,000 units this year with the provincial portion immediately accelerated.

Our commitment to that is total and, Mr. Speaker, may I say on behalf of this party that if we have to borrow in order to build those homes, then we are better to borrow than to maintain 207,000 people unemployed. But let me add, Mr. Speaker, that it may not be necessary to borrow, because the former provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) himself indicated that we should be using the pension funds of this province as a way of tapping reserves for the construction of homes and other desirable social projects. That to us seems to be a perfectly appropriate source.

2. There must be tax relief for low-income earners in the Province of Ontario, as part of overall tax reform, but as a first particular of that reform. It may be that the provincial Treasurer can beat the federal government about the head for its previous inactivity in tax reform areas, but if he really wants to alter economic conditions in Ontario, then on April 26 he will provide tax relief for low-income earners in the province and get the economy moving again, by way of credits or rebates or higher exemptions, or whatever it is, however the government chooses to do it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On our own personal income tax form.

Mr. Lewis: Yes. Well in negotiation, I assume there are certain things the government can do as a provincial government, as it has done for homeowners, as it has done for farmers, as it has done for others, and as a matter of fact, as the government has done for those on the guaranteed income supplement. It is entirely in its hands if it would wish to do it. As a matter of fact, the government has even talked in Ontario about a provincial income tax.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is what I say.

Mr. Lewis: Obviously the minister feels the horizons are unlimited.

3. That the Province of Ontario must immediately provide supplementary allowances to those who are on fixed incomes whether they are receiving family benefits or whether they are in receipt of old age pensions. There must be supplementary assistance to whatever level the government deems reasonable in terms of cost of living, or perhaps more appropriately based on what the Economic Council of Canada regards as minimum for life and health.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Tax credits.

Mr. Lewis: The tax credit system is an obsession. It is just a fixation of the government.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is a Social Credit device.

Mr. Lewis: I would prefer overall tax reform rather than dismembering the system in this fashion.

Mr. MacDonald: Pre-election political gimmickry. This government did it in the last election; it is doing it again now.

Mr. J. Renwick: The people of Ontario are fed up with the tricks.

Mr. Lewis: The fourth point, Mr. Speaker, is the rapid acceleration of provincial and municipal public works projects and the payment by government of labour costs for those municipal projects in a given period of time, let us say by July 15. If we really want to move the economy quickly in terms of the unemployed, then this is one of the most creative ways to do it. It is old-fashioned; it is reliable. But it works. And it would work extremely well for this government if it were willing to undertake it.

One of the things that bewildered me about the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition, was that certain of the public works to which he pointed have in fact created jobs—even if accidentally—at the time of greatest need in Ontario. That seems to me to be a useful thing. You do not always prime the pump when the cycle is at the lowest ebb because it takes too long for the investment effects to be felt. It is really rather sad that we are doing it at this moment in time rather than having done it a number of months ago.

Let me say that we in this party would carry things rather further in terms of provincial subsidy to municipal and related works. I think the government might consider paying the labour cost to individual agencies of government, that this money could be available to the Ontario Hospital Services Commission or to conservation authorities, or to similar semi-autonomous groups, for labour costs by way of accelerating their projects.

I would go even further, Mr. Speaker. If you really wanted to have an imaginative proposal that extended this formula further, then certain segments of the private sector which act as public agencies could have their labour costs defrayed. Let me give the example of children's aid societies, of Elizabeth Fry, of certain of the treatment centres, of many of the areas which now have capital projects waiting which, were they to be given the labour costs, would probably accelerate those programmes. They are socially desirable. They could be scrutinized by government and they would provide an extraordinary impetus to job creation in the Province of Ontario so that we do not tie ourselves to the traditional modes.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, regarding the programme of which we have talked often, the use of young people between the ages of 16 and 24, where there are 18 per cent unemployed or greater—I refuse to fight over the statistics—the reality is evident. In services to people—mental health, daycare centres, public health, indoor and outdoor recreation, aid to the aged—all of these related career lines, which in fact are not expensive, generate their own income and can introduce extraordinary efficiencies as well as introducing real cutbacks which are, all in all, to be desired.

Were we to do this, we would then join the expansionary policies of Manitoba and Quebec, and on that note I will end. You see, an interesting thing has occurred in Canada. Despite the depressive policies of the federal government and the truly unhappy effects which have resulted, Manitoba and Quebec—independently, on their own initiative—have taken Trudeau head on.

Let me point out to the Premier that if Ontario were to introduce the kind of budgetary changes I have suggested and the kind of programmatic provisions inherent in this proposition, then we too would begin to prime the economic pump in a dramatic way.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, in the face of concerted action from Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec, the federal policy no longer becomes viable. They will have to retreat; they will have to change. It cannot be maintained if the major provinces in the country, particularly the two central provinces, pursue economic policies that are entirely contrary to those of the neurotic, deflationary activities of Pierre Elliott Trudeau, for whom workers in this province are expendable commodities. That is a really fascinating proposition which faces the Province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: The weak link is Ontario.

Mr. Lewis: My colleague is perfectly right: Ontario is the weak link in this equation. If we take the initiative, then we change policies for all of Canada, and unemployment will begin to reduce in significant ways.

So far, we have capitulated to federal government policies. We have not responded at all.

Mr. MacDonald: This government should not have agreed with them, that is all.

Mr. Lewis: As a result, Pierre Elliott Trudeau has in our Prime Minister a very close and admirable ally, rather than a politician who wishes to reverse the process. As it is, Ottawa has abdicated, Ontario has abdicated, and therefore political days around here for some governments are numbered.

I end, Mr. Speaker, with a sub-amendment, seconded by my colleague from Peterborough, that the motion of the Treasurer be further amended by adding the following:

And, further, that this House expresses equally grave concern over the abject failure of the government of Ontario to offset the job-destroying policies of the government of Canada in not having implemented:

1. A major house-building programme over and above the 85,000 units now planned for 1971;

2. An immediate tax cut for low-income earners;

3. Additional allowances to those on fixed incomes;

4. A municipal-works acceleration programme, with labour costs assumed by the province up to July 15;

5. A commitment generally to long-term full employment defined as no more than a seasonally adjusted rate of two per cent.

And this House calls upon the government to adopt such measures forthwith.

Mr. MacDonald: Now the government has a programme; all it need do is to act.

Mr. Sargent: I missed out, how many jobs did the member—

Mr. Speaker: Before I put the sub-amendment, I think perhaps to regularize matters I should also put the amendment, because the debate is now proceeding of course on the motion as amended and now as sub-amended.

The amendment was moved by Mr. Nixon, seconded by Mr. Singer:

That the following words be added to the resolution:

And regrets that the government of Ontario has failed to take any meaningful steps to help alleviate this serious situation.

Then by way of sub-amendment it has been moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Pitman, as follows: That the motion of the Treasurer be further amended by adding the following:

And, further, that this House expresses equally grave concern over the abject failure of the government of Ontario to offset the job-destroying policies of the government of Canada in not having implemented:

1. A major house-building programme over and above the 85,000 units now planned for 1971.

2. An immediate tax cut for low-income earners.

3. Additional allowances to those on fixed incomes.

4. A municipal-works acceleration programme with labour costs assumed by the province up to July 15.

5. A commitment generally to long-term full employment, defined at no more than a seasonably adjusted rate of two per cent;

And this House calls upon the government to adopt such measures forthwith.

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Labour):

Mr. Speaker:

Of all the problems I have had to face as a member of Parliament for over 20 years, this is the worst. Technically and financially, the government's policy has been a near total disaster. Morally, it has been a total disaster.

So spoke a member—a courageous member—of the Liberal government during a forceful address in the House of Commons on March 25 last, just one week ago.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Thus Paul Hellyer broke a long silence since his resignation from the cabinet. Paul Hellyer is not the kind of member, sir, to take his party loyalty lightly, but as he said: "I have no alternative but to speak on their behalf." One would have thought that Mr. Hellyer's remarks would at least have caused Prime Minister Trudeau to reflect even momentarily—to perhaps even re-examine the government policies—but no, this weekend in Brantford and in Niagara Falls it was the same old record playing.

He continually holds over the nation's head the club of price and wage controls—and just on that point, sir, and I am sure my friends in the third party would agree. I do not know why they always talk wage controls. Why not income controls?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Carton: His only answer, and his repeated answer, even on Saturday, is "Unemployment is going to have a tendency to rise."

Mr. Pilkey: Is this government advocating wage controls?

Hon. Mr. Carton: As to the alarming figure of small business failures, Mr. Trudeau's answer at Brantford was: "Some small businessmen could not grow in the way the consumer wanted. This is the way the economy develops." What a heartless answer. Then the next day in Niagara Falls on the same question as to small business he answered: "Being forced out of business happens every day in the week in a free economy."

What else would one expect by way of answer from the leader of a government whose white paper proposals, if implemented, will drive the last nails into the coffin of the small businessman throughout the nation?

Mr. Speaker, the tragedy of the unemployment crisis is that it is a cruel, deliberate policy proposed to fight inflation. It is a policy, as mentioned by the member for Scarborough West, that is just not solving the situation.

For almost two years we have heard the federal government say, "We have to fight inflation." Then Prime Minister Trudeau said last Christmas Eve, on December 24: "Inflation no longer exists in Canada." Three months later one of his colleagues in Montreal, when he was talking to the Board of Trade, said: "Inflation is about to be brought down." The governor of the Bank of Canada said just two weeks ago: "Inflation will be worse in a few months than it was last year."

Surely it is obvious by now that the proposed cure for inflation is simply not working. Surely it is time that the federal government began to re-examine its policy which affects adversely those that government should be trying to protect—the little man and the little business.

Even big business is standing pat, Mr. Speaker. Projects are being shelved, awaiting the outcome of the white paper proposals. The three per cent surtax was to remain in force only for one year. It has now been in three years.

And what about the farmer? I have mentioned the little man, the little business, big business. What about the Ontario farmer?

Mr. T. Reid: And their property taxes?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Hogs today are $2 per hundredweight lower than 10 years ago; eggs are three dozen for $1; broiler chickens are away down; lamb is down; and so on goes the list—and yes, sir, tobacco is at its lowest price in 10 years. Yet the farmer must pay higher prices than ever before for machinery, for fertilizer.

To compound the situation, sir, with the free trade in respect of agricultural implements between Canada and the United States, it appears that with the laying off of thousands of workers by Massey Ferguson that this industry could well move to the United States.

And so, Mr. Speaker, the nation is floundering and I venture to say, sir, that one of the major causes of unemployment is simply that the people of Canada have lost confidence in Mr. Trudeau's administration. There is a psychological depression hovering over the whole country.

Mr. Sargent: There is not too much here at Queen's Park either.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Businesses are failing that otherwise would have hung on. Businesses are cutting back that otherwise would have held their own. Businesses are holding their own that otherwise would have expanded, and many business ventures have just been shelved because of uncertainty.

We have the lowest per capita growth of any industrialized society in the world and we have the highest level of unemployment in the western world. And that is quite an achievement, sir, for a country as plentifully endowed by nature as is our Canada. We have an educated people, some of the world's richest resources, some of the world's finest agricultural lands and we have the lowest growth and the highest unemployment.

Yes, sir, the Trudeau administration is a forward one—forward with unemployment; forward with the demise of small businesses; forward with the white paper implementation and, just for contrast, backward with a just society.

I read the debates, sir, that took place in the House of Commons a week or so ago on a non-confidence motion which was moved by the Progressive Conservative finance critic on the alleged failure of government economic policies and I thought that all three opposition parties put forward some positive alternatives to the government.

Certainly, appeals for voluntary restraint have not worked. I doubt the merit of a suggestion made by the leader of the New Democratic Party, Mr. Douglas, of the establishment of a prices review board.

On the positive side—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister is becoming a real Tory since he got that position.

Hon. Mr. Carton:—uncertainties in the taxation field should be cleared up by Mr. Benson.

Mr. MacDonald: Mental ossification setting in.

Hon. Mr. Carton: Selective tax cuts should be made to those most needing relief.

Mr. MacDonald: What happens to the progressives?

Hon. Mr. Carton: The tax should be removed from building materials. The three per cent surtax should be abolished and a winter works programme should be reintroduced.

There are a few constructive suggestions already advanced, Mr. Speaker, by the opposition parties in Ottawa. Apparently they have had no effect on Prime Minister Trudeau in view of his weekend statements and I somehow doubt that any remarks made by me in this Legislature would cause him to pause and reflect. But I close this part of my remarks by saying, with the utmost sincerity, that the present Trudeau administration policies on inflation are morally wrong—they are callous and they are instilling in our people a sense of despair and helplessness and what is more pertinent, they are not curing inflation.

Now, sir, I would like to be parochial for a very few moments in connection with my own department.

Accelerating technological changes and developments are taking place in Ontario with great rapidity and as automation progresses, the need for trained hands and skills becomes increasingly apparent. Some of the routine jobs will be taken over by mechanical equipment. The trained employee will have to be more flexible and adapt his skills to keep pace with the changing environment. Due to the demands of modern industry traditional trades may begin to fragment as technology develops and elements of these trades may be re-grouped to form new occupations.

In response to these technological changes, the industrial training branch has been experimenting for the past three years with a new approach to training, based on a modular or block system. The basis of modular training is that the workers attain blocks of training and knowledge which can be assembled to provide a skill for an occupational area.

Pilot projects in this system are currently being undertaken in the tool industry in Windsor—

Mr. Sargent: When do they graduate?

Hon. Mr. Carton: I am coming to that—and a very successful project is being conducted at Polymer in Sarnia to develop petrochemical plant maintenance skills.

The programme requires that:

1. The work functions be identified.
2. The training is broken down into manageable units.
3. The worker is pretested.

This type of training will permit workers to have two or more skills and thus allow greater occupational mobility.

In this period of soft employment, it is of particular importance to maintain employment standards, in order to guard against potential downward pressures on wages as a result of surplus labour. As of April 1, the minimum wage in Ontario was increased to $1.65 per hour in general industry. The increase places Ontario's minimum wage on the same level as the present minimum federal wage. The construction minimum rate is now $1.90 an hour.

Through amendments to The Employment Standards Act which came into effect on January 1, the government has sought to minimize the impact of economic developments which result in the shutdown or part-closure of a plant and to assist workers in adjusting to the change. In the case of mass layoffs or plant shutdowns, the regulations stipulate that an employer shall not terminate the employment of 50 or more workers in any four-week period without providing written notice to the employees and to the minister.

I might mention, sir, that the leader of the New Democratic Party mentioned earlier in the question period about some of the benefits in the federal legislation. I would point out to him that in the federal legislation there is no need to give the employee notice and I think that is one of the things that perhaps they should look at. I think that is quite pertinent.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): They are going to give them money—severance pay, that is what counts.

Hon. Mr. Carton: In the case of individual terminations without cause, the amount of notice is based on the length of the employee's service. Thus one week's notice is required for workers with three months to less than two years' service; two weeks for those with two years but less than five years' service; and four weeks for those with five but less than 10 years' service; and eight weeks for those with more than 10 years' service.

The advance notice required by the Act gives discharged employees more time to find other employment and to take advantage of various programmes provided by the federal and provincial governments to assist. In the first three months since the legislation came into force some 30 companies have given the department notice of their intention of laying off some 3,200 employees. A few are going out of business, others are closing down part of their operation or are moving to another area of the province.

Mr. Peacock: How many are exempted by the regulation?

Hon. Mr. Carton: The government has been involved with all of these companies in order to ensure that all possible assistance is given to the employees who are affected by mass layoffs. To ensure that the maximum information and assistance is provided to workers, an interdepartmental committee has been established and represents the provincial departments of Labour, Education, Social and Family Services, Trade and Development, Treasury and Economics, as well as the Canada Department of Manpower and Immigration.

The main purpose of this committee, sir, is in ensuring compliance with the notice provisions of the Act and in notifying other agencies which may also be able to assist displaced workers. The committee also tries to assist employers on an informal basis by giving guidance and advice to ease the impact of a shutdown or a layoff.

In closing, sir, there was a question addressed to the Prime Minister by the member for Scarborough East and it had to do, I believe, with young people who are not students, and I would like to point out to him a programme that is implemented through my department.

Programme 1—we have what we call "Apprenticeship," and this involves the training of youths desirous of entering construction, industrial, motive power and service trades. It requires the signatures on a contract between the apprentice and the employer. Implementation of this is by direct branch administration with the assistance of field staff.

Of the apprentices currently under contract, 88 per cent fall within the 16-to-24 age group. The apprentice must have reached the age of 16 years. A few trades require only a grade 8 or 9 education, with grade 10 being the normal requirement. Certain construction trades demand a grade 12 standing.

As of December 31, 1970, the total number of apprentices reached 18,728. During the period under review 4,540 were registered, 3,036 completed the contract and 2,035 were cancelled for various reasons.

Another programme we have is "Training in Industry." This is a short-term training which involves those skills required in industry which can be absorbed by the trainees within periods of from one to 12 months. The training can apply to any group of persons who are unskilled or unemployed, or who through technological change require upgrading or retraining. The direct administration is by the branch, and we have reimbursed the sum of $441,260 to firms that have helped assist us in the training costs.

The age groups could vary from students leaving school at 16 years to adults of 45 to 50. The age statistics are not available, but in the period under review 5,376 persons have entered training while 3,638 have graduated. And as an estimate, only 10 per cent to 15 per cent of these would be in the 16 to 24 year age bracket.

There is a third programme called the "Progressive Achievement Testing" and this programme was developed to aid those persons, particularly youths, who left school at an early age and without the minimum educational requirements for apprenticeship. The tests are applied only to persons 19 years of age or over who after three years in the workforce are presumed to have increased their general knowledge. The test will confirm the level which in the majority of cases indicates the equivalent of grade 10 or higher.

The costs of this programme, sir, are minimal, and tests are conducted in Toronto, Ottawa, Pembroke, Peterborough, Sault Ste. Marie, St. Catharines, Sudbury, Thunder Bay, Timmins and Windsor. Administration of the tests are normally carried out by the local community college in the area, with the results being analyzed by the college representative and a member of The Department of Labour counselling staff. As mentioned above, the test normally is applied only to persons 19 years or older, and the majority fall within the 19 to 24 age group. As of December 31, 1970, a total of 1,906 have attempted the test and of these 1,082 have passed.

Lastly, sir, there is a "Youth Employment Service"—pre-employment training designed to more adequately prepare disadvantaged hard-core youths for employment. This is a project of the Rotary Club and the YMCA of Toronto, in co-operation with the industrial training branch of The Department of Labour.

Costs of the initial project were minimal; Staff costs were minimal; and a training programme is developed by this branch. The age group varies from 16 to 24 with an average age of 18 to 20.

Mr. Speaker, these are some of the positive steps that have been taken by my department.

In closing, I must say that I am somewhat disappointed by the leaders of the two opposition parties in their approach to this particular resolution. Firstly, as was pointed out by the member for Scarborough West, the leader of the official opposition mentioned only one concrete suggestion—that was the mining tax. On the other hand the leader of the New Democrats mentioned—

Mr. Sargent: What has the government offered? Nothing.

Hon. Mr. Carton: —really only increased borrowing. They were talking about the—

Mr. Deans (Wentworth): Re-establishment of priorities.

Mr. Carton: They were talking about the hardcore provinces speaking to the federal government. I was hoping that on this resolution today all three parties would join in a unanimous resolution that could be presented to the Prime Minister at Ottawa to show him that this Legislature does mean business.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in rising to talk on this debate I hope to be fairly reasonable and rational about it—

Mr. Pilkey: And short.

Mr. T. Reid: —and fairly pointed.

In the last few days we on this side of the House, and the people of Ontario, have been treated with two rather astounding documents. The first is the one made by the Minister of Housing, and Trade and Development, on April 1, and the press has spotted that as being basically a misleading and fraudulent document. The second document is this incredible statement by the Treasurer made in this place today.

It is not a statement of economic policy at all; it is a hastily prepared diatribe, if you like, against the federal government. And that it is hastily prepared can be seen by the hon. members on page 10 for example, where the Treasurer states this:

There is an immediate need for increases in consumer spending and investment to bring the provincial economy back to a full employment level of three per cent.

Mr. Speaker, if this government intends to have a full employment policy whereby three per cent of the labour force is employed then I feel sorry for us all. It is hastily prepared. He obviously did not even understand it when he was reading it, otherwise he would have corrected that three per cent to 97 per cent.

Another example of the silliness of this statement made by the provincial Treasurer today is this, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. member: He did not write his speech; someone else wrote it for him.

Mr. T. Reid: On page 10 he makes a great ado about the fact that there were almost twice as many people in the 14-24 year age group unemployed in the first two months of this year than there were in January and February, 1970. He makes that statement, "twice as many." Then he goes on to say that he is going to have a policy that will create only 14,000 jobs compared to 11,000 last year for young people. Mr. Speaker, he acknowledges there is a critical problem in the youth unemployment group. The problem has doubled in scope and yet he has a programme that, at the most, increases in scope by less than 30 per cent.

It is this type of inconsistency in this type of so-called statement of policy, that can only leave many people in this province laughing in disgust.

Again, on page 13, the Treasurer makes a great to-do about having provided jobs for approximately 12,000 persons through a variety of programmes during the present winter-time crisis. There are two points. I thought the leader of the New Democratic Party made one point very well. Those are not 12,000 new jobs. At least 4,000—possibly 6,000—of those jobs would have been created anyhow by the natural expansion of the provincial government's expenditure programme. So we are not even talking about new jobs.

Even if we assume this government did create 12,000 new jobs, what effect has that had on the unemployment levels in this province? Instead of having an unemployment level today of 219,000 people we have an unemployment problem of 207,000. I say that type of piecemeal, nibbling approach to the elimination of serious unemployment in this province by this government deserves to be castigated by all people.

Seriously, getting away from the nitpicking analysis of this rather silly statement that has been read in this place, I would like to take off, if you prefer, from a point made very capably by the leader of the New Democratic Party. It is simply this. This government has tried to associate its housing programme, which was supposed to create 130,000 new jobs, with the current unemployment levels in this province of 207,000. That is fraudulent. That should not be accepted by the people of this province.

Going on from there one finds in this statement by the Treasurer a number of references to the fact that this government really cannot pursue a fiscal policy because this government does not have the powers to do so or the ability to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from page 13 of the Treasurer's remarks. He said this,

I must remind you that the amount of discretionary fiscal policy that the provincial government can normally undertake is very limited, representing no more than a few per cent of the total budget.

This, to me, lies at the crux of the argument that my leader has made concerning the inability of this government to understand and to implement fiscal policy on its own in conjunction with the federal government.

I make this very basic point, Mr. Speaker, because this government's policies during the last couple of years when we have had a crisis of inflation combined with increases in prices and unemployment, this government's response to that has been based on its statement and apparent belief that it can do nothing in the way of having a fiscal and debt management policy to follow on its own.

I would just like to expose forever in this place the fact that this government has been hiding behind its own inability to have policies that could counteract, first of all, inflation and secondly, unemployment.

I would like to refer to a study prepared for the Ontario committee on taxation. It is titled "Theory of Fiscal Policy as Applied to a Province" by Clarence L. Barber. I would like to put into the record of this House Mr. Barber's utter repudiation of the position that the Treasurer has taken in this place today concerning the ability or the inability of a provincial government the size of the government of Ontario to effectively have policies to stimulate employment and to stabilize prices.

I will just read directly, Mr. Speaker. This is from chapter 2, starting on page 24 of the report I referred to. These are just the key sentences of Professor Barber's arguments concerning the ability of a province to effectively implement fiscal policy on a counter-cyclical basis. Mr. Barber says this:

In their discussions of fiscal policy economists have usually had the central government of the country in mind. Yet it is not entirely clear why provincial governments should not pursue a conscious fiscal policy.

Professor Barber goes on to say:

It is clear, to begin with, that the size of the income or population that comes under provincial control does not rule out the possibility of a fiscal policy. For although Canada as a whole is much larger than any individual province, the large provinces compare favourably in size with many independent countries.

That is the first point—that the size of this economy, the number of people in this province, Mr. Speaker, is greater than many national economies that exercise effective fiscal policies on a counter-cyclical basis.

Professor Barber continues briefly on page 29, stating this:

In evaluating the ability of the Canadian provinces to pursue an independent counter-cyclical policy much depends on the severity of the cyclical fluctuations which are anticipated.

He continues:

On the basis of the post-war years to date, there is reason to believe that the typical cycle will consist mainly of a reduction or cessation in the normal rate of growth and perhaps occasionally a small and short-lived decline in gross national product. In cycles of such moderate amplitude almost of all the Canadian provinces have ample power to pursue counter-cyclical fiscal policies. The only provinces that might have difficulty would be the four Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Speaker, I make this point again to underline it. Professor Barber says he is referring to moderate fluctuations in the business cycle. But even for large fluctuations in the business cycle or the economic cycle, a province the size of the Province of Ontario, with the resources it has, with the command over debt management policy it has, this province can and could and should in the past have played an effective role in fiscal policy in this province.

Professor Barber continues, getting somewhat more specific, Mr. Speaker, by way of example, and I quote:

Thus in periods of economic slack provincial governments could increase the share of their current capital expenditures financed out of borrowed funds. In more expansionary periods they could finance a larger share of capital expenditures out of current revenue or, if it proved desirable, run an overall surplus. To achieve this result, each provincial government could vary tax rates or the size of its capital expenditure programme or both. The decision whether tax rates or expenditures should be varied would have to be made in the light of the kind and location of unemployed resources and the probable effectiveness of either change in reducing the level of unemployment.

It is all here, Mr. Speaker, in a report prepared for this government on how to use its own fiscal powers and debt management powers to do something, first of all over the past few years, about the rate of inflation in this province; and, secondly, right now to get more than simply 12,000 of the more than 219,000 who are out of work back on the job.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Nothing about wage or price control there, though.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, there is one more paragraph that is very interesting to nail this government's ineptitude in understanding basic economic policy—

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Is it by a professor? If it is, forget it.

Mr. T. Reid: —to put them right against the wall. Professor Barber has said this—and he was hired by this government to write this report, which they have obviously never read.

It has been a conclusion of this analysis that provincial governments in Canada should develop an active fiscal policy directed toward the objectives of low levels of unemployment, reasonable stability of prices and an adequate rate of economic growth. The traditional view that fiscal policy is appropriate only at the central government level cannot be supported.

Most of the differences between the position of the central government and that of a province are differences of degree rather than kind and should not prevent an active fiscal policy on the part of provincial governments.

He concludes, Mr. Speaker, by saying, "This is particularly true of the larger provinces such as Ontario." For the provincial Treasurer to stand up in this place, Mr. Speaker, and to state twice in his prepared text, "I must remind you that the amount of discretionary fiscal policy that the provincial government can normally undertake is very limited," shows a total ignorance of the basic power of government to use fiscal policy to do something effective at the provincial level in the way of unemployment and inflationary price increases.

The second comment I would like to make, Mr. Speaker—the second part of my comment—has to do with what this government could have done over the past three years, in the way of price control, to alleviate the rate of inflation, if you like, in this province. I would like to discuss the concept of "economic stability" which has to do with the relationship between unemployment and prices, and I would like to put my remarks in the context, if you like, of the government's own definition of economic stability objectives.

The working definition of economic stability which became accepted in cabinet decisions in this province, and in cabinet discussions, and among the senior civil servants and in their documents, by the time of the last provincial election, Mr. Speaker, was summarized in April, 1966, by the economic and fiscal sub-committee of the Ontario advisory committee on confederation. That definition is found on page 304 in the background papers and reports of the committee on confederation published in 1967. It is a very brief, succinct definition of economic stability. It says,

Economic stability is most easily translated as the maintenance of reasonable full use of existing capacity to produce, without creating inflationary price increases. In terms of unemployment, it implies the attainment of an Ontario rate of perhaps two per cent and national average rate of three per cent to four per cent. In terms of prices, it implies a rise of 1.5 per cent to two per cent per annum.

That is the definition of economic stability that is being used by this government, which has been used in its economic decision-making over the past three and a half years in which I have been in this place, sir.

Let us examine those policy objectives. This government says that an unemployment rate of two per cent is the objective compared to the national average of three to four per cent. There is an assumption in the policy objective of this government, Mr. Speaker, that in this province, primarily because of the power of the fiscal tools of the provincial government, the unemployment rate here can be kept to between 50 and 60 per cent of the national average.

With regard to prices, the price stability objective is 1.5 per cent to two per cent per annum. Mr. Speaker, what is the reality in this province? The reality in this province is this: The annual unemployment rate for 1970 in Ontario was 4.3 per cent, compared to a six per cent rate across Canada. That proportion of unemployment in Ontario was nowhere near the stated policy reality that could have been achieved by this government, that reality being, sir, that when Canada has an unemployment rate of six per cent, in Ontario it can be three per cent to 3.5 per cent. I suggest, sir that the unemployment gap between potential reality in this province is a function of provincial fiscal policy. That gap between 4.3 per cent which actually happened and the attainable goal of three or 3.5 per cent is the direct responsibility of this government. In their failure to achieve their own policy objective they must be condemned in terms of their own definition. In terms of prices, we have had a consumer price increase in this province, Mr. Speaker, of between four and 4.5 per cent per annum instead of 1.5 to two per cent per annum, which is the stated objective of the economic policy stabilization policies in this province.

So the point is that the policy objective of economic stability as defined by the Robarts government has simply not been achieved. We have today an unemployment rate of 6.5 per cent, that is to say, sir, of 207,000 out of a work force of 3,120,000, and we have an inflation rate of over four per cent. Not only that, there has been a failure to keep the Ontario unemployment rate down to less than two-thirds of the national average.

Where and how did the Robarts government and its current successor fail in its policy to contribute significantly to economic stability in Ontario over the past three years? I shall make, if you like, sir, one basic argument having to do with the failure of this provincial government to use its powers to attempt to achieve its own price stability objective. This is a policy strategy that could have been used in addition to an overall fiscal policy.

I remind the hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that in the Treasurer's remarks to the Legislature today he quoted the then former Premier in March, 1970, and in those quotations the then Premier made it very clear that this government—this Conservative government—did not agree that "the methods of current federal fiscal monetary policy are irrefutable."

Time and time again through the statement of this government today, quoting their past Premier, and making up their new arguments, they have condemned the monetary and fiscal policies as exercised in Ottawa, over the past two years particularly. But not once in here did they come up with alternative strategy for controlling inflation, not once did they say there are other ways of getting at inflation in the Province of Ontario. I say this, sir, that there are other ways in which this government could have acted quite forcibly to curb inflation, thereby making policies designed to increase employment much less obnoxious in terms of the inflation trade-off.

The Ontario government could have significantly reduced the rate of price inflation in Ontario over the last three years if it had chosen to do so. Let me be exact. The implementation of a range of fairly mild provincial price regulation policies by this government could have reduced the annual rate of consumer price increases from its actual upward climb of four per cent per annum during the last two years to less than two per cent. That is to say, price policies by this government could have achieved the two per cent inflation rate only, which is near to its minimum policy objective and much closer to the maximum policy objective of a 1.5 percentage rate as established in 1966.

Such a significant levelling off during the last two to three years of price increases in the goods and services purchased by Ontario families would have enabled this government, in particular, to have pursued another set of policies, fiscal and otherwise, designed to increase the supply of consumer goods and services most subject to demand-pull inflation, such as housing, which would also have created jobs as a byproduct.

My argument is quite straightforward, Mr. Speaker. Over the past three years, the Tory government has had the constitutional powers to reduce selectively the rate of short-run inflation in the cost of housing, or shelter if one prefers, and to reduce the rate of short-run price increases in health care services to Ontario consumers. It chose not to act, sir.

Over the past 10 years, this Tory government has had the constitutional powers to increase the long-run supply of housing and the long-run supply of health care personnel, services and facilities, thereby cutting out what is called the inflationary gap of excess demand in the longer run for those particular goods and services. Such policies, Mr. Speaker, would have meant that today, we would have had a much lower rate of unemployment. But, again, sir, the government chose not to act.

Let me detail my argument of policy negligence by this provincial Tory government. I have here, sir, the national DBS consumer price index, and this is what it says: Prices in this index increased eight per cent over the two-year period 1969 and 1970. That is an annual rate of four per cent.

Of particular importance in the consumer price index was the housing component. It is important for two reasons:

1. In this index housing has a very high weight of 32 per cent, with two subcomponents of shelter at 18 per cent of the total and household operation at 14 per cent of the total.

2. The rate of inflation of the shelter component was almost 11.5 per cent, compared to the average of eight per cent over the two-year period for the total index.

Furthermore, the weight of 18 per cent for shelter in the consumer price index is based on the 1957 expenditure allocation of an average Canadian family, not on a 1970 expenditure allocation.

Now, sir, the importance of this is this. The Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto calculates that the average Toronto family today uses up about 23 per cent of its family disposable income on shelter, a proportion which rises steadily as family income drops. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, inflation to many, many people in Ontario has virtually been one thing alone—large rent increases on top of a large rent to start with, which was consuming one out of every five dollars earned, and increasing property tax bills for education on top of large property tax bills to start with.

"Shelter price inflation" is what it should be called and it has been the most significant reason for many urban Ontario families experiencing a decline in the real purchasing power of their family income. It was, and is, the strategic area of price restraint over which this provincial government had the public responsibility to act to achieve its own economic stability goal of reducing inflation in this province to consumers to two per cent or 1.5 per cent a year down from the four per cent actual.

Quite simply, Mr. Speaker, if, during 1968 and 1969 in particular, this provincial government had taken the initiative in examining and exposing the excess profits made by landlords who were charging tenants what the market would bear. And if it had then legislated a strategy of rental review boards, which we in this party advocated, with the power to limit rent increases—that is, to limit rent inflation—on the criteria of no excess profits, inflation in the shelter component of the consumer price index in Ontario would have been cut in half, sir, that is to under two per cent a year for 1969-1970. This one strategy alone by this Tory government across there, sir, could have meant a sizeable cut in the inflation rates of the total consumer price index, due to the heavy weight of shelter in the consumer purchasing pattern.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Singer: Is that a point of order?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would he permit a question?

Since inflation, I think it is generally agreed, is nation-wide, both prices and all other areas—

Mr. Bullbrook: World-wide.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Would not action by the national government be the effective way to have tackled it, rather than to say one province?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will just reply to that by saying that as long as this government believes it is castrated in the field of this type of policy, the inflation in this province will continue and unemployment will rise at the same time. That is the basic point I am trying to make.

This government, this cabinet—Robarts, before it—believes it is castrated in terms of fiscal and selective price review policies as I have explained today.

I just reiterate this to the minister who asked the question that, if you look at where people's money is going in terms of their purchases, you will find, particularly in urban

Ontario, that 25 per cent of their disposable income is going into shelter; another 14 per cent is going into goods and services such as hydro, to support living in shelter. That is where inflation has been most rampant in this province and that is the area in which this government, if it had had the guts and nerve and proper research, would have moved in and limited price inflation.

Mr. Makarchuk (Brantford): And what was the Bank of Canada doing all this time?

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I will turn to another area of the consumer price index called "health and personal care." It had an inflation rate over that 24-month period of 11 per cent compared to the average rate of growth of eight per cent over that two year period, and it has the weight of seven per cent. This government could have effected a cut in health care costs in this province to the consumer if it had had the guts to realize that it would not only be good for people but would cut down the rate of inflation.

We have the highest premiums in Canada in this province, Mr. Speaker; we could have cut down there. We should be reviewing the health fee schedules; we could have cut down the rate increases in health care services there. We could increase the number of doctors over a longer term period, decreasing if you like, their ability to push up prices, and particularly in the field of drug costs which are a large component in the consumer price index for many families. If this government had the guts to act against the drug lobby we could cut drug costs there.

It is this type of thing, Mr. Speaker, that this government should have been doing over the past 10 years, and especially over the past three years, if it was really concerned with inflation to the consumer, and it is in this area where this government has failed to act. We can go through a whole variety of programmes that my leader has suggested. Take the hydro rates. You talk to the consumer in his house, you find out where there has been inflation and what he has paid for, it is his hydro rates. Why has this government not controlled hydro rates? Why has this government not insisted that the surplus funds available to Hydro go into keeping prices low instead of simply stashing away excess surplus funds in some account? It is the same as the excess profits of the landlords across Metropolitan Toronto and other urban areas in this province.

In short, Mr. Speaker, this government could have implemented specific regulatory measures to reduce price inflation significantly in the short run in Ontario. I believe that the consumer price index could have been held down to a two per cent annual increase in 1968, 1969 and 1970, instead of a four per cent annual increase on the average for those three years, through the direct action of this provincial government.

The consequences for unemployment of having actually done so are all too clear—provincial price regulations being a direct substitute for blunt federal restrictive monetary policy and blunt federal-provincial restrictive fiscal policies.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Talk to your friends in Ottawa.

Mr. T. Reid: We must try to find out where the price increases have really taken place to the average consumer in this province. It is in the area of housing, shelter and services to shelter. In the long run—to get back to the hon. Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs' earlier remarks—in the long run the way to curb inflation of shelter costs and the costs associated with shelter is to build more houses and to build them now, and to have been building them over the past three years. In the long run the way you stop price inflation in shelter and housing is to create more housing, a greater supply of housing.

If this government had had any inkling of its ability to manipulate in terms of fiscal policy it would have put in its half-billion-dollar programme not a couple of days ago, but planned it eight months ago, and it would have been a real half a billion dollar programme, Mr. Speaker, and not a fatuous façade of one.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I think we must look forward and not back, but I think as long as this government comes in here on the pretext of a serious debate on unemployment in this province and sits down with a silly asinine statement as read into the record of this House by the Treasurer, we are not going to have a serious debate. This thing by the Treasurer is a chopped-up political document. It is not worthy of Ian MacDonald and some of the other economists in the public service of this province, and I would say they probably did not even see it. This was thought up in cabinet and the Treasurer and Premier had some political advisers there to write it for them.

This does not make any sense economically. Politically it looks backwards. It tries to say the federal government is responsible; and we all know the federal government shares a degree of responsibility in it. But to not look forward, to not come up with programmes, to not look seriously into, if you like, a $15 million programme for youth and youth-student employment in this province—not just in the summer, but over the entire 12-month period of the year—without getting into that type of programme you are a façade, you are a fake, you are fraudulent.

If you are really interested in doing something about employment in this province—to create employment up to 97 per cent of those wishing to work in this province—you would have a real half billion dollar housing project which would, in fact, create 130,000 new jobs instead of simply what they have come up with, Mr. Speaker.

If they are really serious, and if I understood the new Minister of Labour, I believe, if he really wants to know what this government can do to do something about unemployment through a private system, through a free enterprise system, the government would be using the Ontario Development Corporation as a basic tool of fiscal policy, not just something trumped up to allocate a few more funds here and there. You would have as one of its main criteria, not simply the location of industry, but you would give the money in terms of the labour component, as my friend from Windsor-Walkerville has pointed out.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I think that if we look ahead instead of looking backwards, the message is very clear. We have to have more expenditures to create the jobs. Those greater expenditures have to come from the public sector and the private sector. At the same time, if we are really serious about the problems and the inequities of inflation, we should at least have a committee looking into the ways in which this government can check monopolistic pricing in this province and the ways in which this government can check the abuses of excess profits, particularly by landlords.

Until the government stand up in here and say they are considering ways of restraining inflation, particularly in those areas which eat up a large part of the consumer pie, such as shelter, medical attention and so forth; until they stand up and say they are examining ways of controlling inflation in those areas, the people of this province and people like myself cannot take them seriously.

Ross Munro wrote about this government's fraud in the Globe and Mail on Saturday, and I would hope that he or some other able reporter in this press gallery will take the

Treasurer's statement and consult with some of the best economists who could be judged to be non-partisan—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We read about your fraud. If we can only understand it.

Mr. Singer: The hon. minister is awfully sensitive about that.

Mr. T. Reid: —to go through this thing and just pick it apart for the shilly-shally document it is. Mr. Speaker, this government deserves to go out of office.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We do not agree with the hon. member.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): We are against that.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, it is with some nostalgia that I rise to partake in a debate on unemployment, because it was about 10 years ago almost to the day, that I made my first political speech—and I was speaking about unemployment at that time. The staggering thing about it is that the arguments have not moved one foot forward in the last 10 years. Only the participants have changed. I noted in the Speech from the Throne that wonderful line that we have reached “unconscionable levels of unemployment.” This is not usually the kind of language His Honour is provided with to speak in this particular chamber. I just thought I would look up the Speeches from the Throne in 1959, 1960 and 1961.

Mr. Diefenbaker led the government in Ottawa, and a Conservative government at that time held the reins of power in the Province of Ontario. It was rather interesting to discover that in the Hansard of that day, 1959, there was talk about there being a recession throughout America and that, “Unemployment has caused us great concern.” In 1960, there were only expectations of continued expansion, that unemployment would be reduced. In January, 1961, we discovered the ratio of unemployment was below the national average.

I bring this to your attention, sir, simply for this reason: That this debate is a very cruel, rather disgraceful game to realize that, while we are speaking in this House, there are over 200,000 people in this province who have been told that their skills are unnecessary, that they are a drag on the economy and in many cases they are being berated for having to accept welfare and unemployment insurance and all the other means by which we keep them alive. Well, at least, we keep them apart from the buying public so that the rest of our economy can survive.

So I say to you, sir, that it is not with any great joy that I partake in this debate. But I must say that in this debate, the New Democratic Party and its leader have put forward positive, sensible, rational, acceptable ways by which unemployment can be reduced immediately.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pitman: We have given this government a programme. If it has not got the brains to do something with the programme, then let somebody else put a programme into effect.

An hon. member: Dreamer.

Mr. Pitman: The programme which this government has brought down to this chamber a few days ago has turned out to be a hoax. It is known to be a hoax from one end of this province to the other. I am not going to go over what my leader has already said about the glorious housing project that has been brought forward. As for the elm tree removal plan, I think all one can say about that is that it indicates the obsession of this government with deadwood. One could have hoped for something just a bit more imaginative.

Mr. Lewis: Believe me, there is plenty of it to be expert about. We could have our own project in the back benches over there.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Better repeat it.

Mr. Pitman: All I can say is that the only point this debate seems to have is simply to try to take some of the sting out of the chaos that has existed in Ontario over the last number of months. Because it has been a double tragedy—a tragedy perpetrated by the Ottawa government obviously but perpetrated as well by this government. In spite of the fact that the leader of the Conservative Party decided to step down in the last days of November and in spite of the fact that the party in power was obsessed with the problem of picking a new leader, buying all the balloons, buying all the pamphlets and looking after all the arrangements in Maple Leaf Gardens, this government was in power; it had a responsibility to govern. The people who were unemployed were badly served indeed by those who held the reins of power in this government during those months.

Indeed, what can be more ludicrous than that a programme was announced on March 4 to encourage municipalities to initiate work at $1 per head. This was supposedly a programme to deal with seasonal unemployment. It was announced on March 4, and one noticed how quickly municipalities were expected to bring forward programmes. I notice it is now April and there are many municipalities that have yet to bring forward a programme—not because they do not want to, but because they have to go through all the forms which this government expects and then the programme is withdrawn by June 30. How ludicrous, how ridiculous, how disgraceful.

I would suggest to this government that this is the richest province in Canada. It is the industrial centre. It deserves some imagination, some wit, some intelligence in the carrying out of its affairs.

Mr. Lawlor: When is this government going to start?

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Dead elms.

Mr. Pitman: In many ways, it is in the area of provincial jurisdiction that changes really have to be made in the long term. In my few remarks this afternoon, I am going to concentrate on the long term, because the short term has been quite effectively dealt with by the leader of this party. I need to say nothing more on that area.

I do want to say a great deal about what we must do for the 1970s and the 1980s.

Mr. Ruston: He did not say anything, you know.

Mr. Pitman: He said a great deal. Either the member was not listening or he cannot understand—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman:—and I am afraid that we cannot be responsible for the latter, the complete lack of understanding on the part of those to our right.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to the long-range programme. This province, of course, like every other province in Canada, is obsessed with growth as the answer to unemployment. And because of the fact that this is the only thing that this government can really create, we have to play this game on the short-run. But I can assure you that if the power of government is given to this party, we intend to provide long-run solutions. We intend to give some hope. We do not think the kind of actions of government which mean that people must go out of their jobs every few years, because of the so-called myths of free-enterprise or the myths of the free economy—the invisible hand, and all the other nonsense that is paraded about as justification for unemployment. We do not think that it is necessary or indeed, to use the words of this government, that it is “conscionable.”

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There goes the NDP leader's Tory image. Back to the radicals.

Mr. Pitman: We know that neither this country nor this province really can depend on non-qualitative growth in the future.

Mr. Lawlor: Have you ever tried to shake an invisible hand?

Mr. Pitman: There is every reason to question that a growth-production-consumption-waste-pollution syndrome can even allow our ecology to survive. Yet in the Speech from the Throne, after a passing reference to ecology, a few changes in the government responsibility and passing portfolios around, the only answer this government had was more growth. Even with continued growth this province cannot keep its people working. The inexorable march of cybernation is destroying jobs day by day. Even without the constant closures by multinational corporations, the jobs in existing plants are becoming fewer. One noted with some degree of abhorrence that the only answer of this government to that problem is to hold a conference.

Even certain aspects of the service industry are being automated. The pattern of the nineteen sixties has been that there are fewer and fewer jobs in terms of the proportion of those who wish to work, and that is the simple answer and it is the most obvious one.

How have we been dealing with it? Well, we had a certain amount of growth, quite non-qualitative growth—as the Minister of Energy and Resources Management well knows now—in relation to Dow Chemical and any other plants which will undoubtedly be brought into the courts in a few months.

The other way we have done it, as the minister who has now become the Premier of this province knows, we have hidden our unemployment in schools. We have kept the kids on ice. We have kept them out of the labour market. As I have said before—I do not want to repeat this statistic, but if we return to the holding rate of our schools from 1962—our schools and our colleges and our universities—we would have double the unemployment in Ontario right now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is a very specious argument and no one should know better than the hon. member.

Mr. Pitman: It is not a specious argument, Mr. Speaker. I would be very glad to go into those statistics any time the Prime Minister wants to carry out a debate on this particular aspect.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will. The hon. member has just given me the germ of an idea.

Mr. MacDonald: I am glad the Premier has something to fill that vacuum.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have never heard the hon. member make a more specious argument than that.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, not only do we have to provide the policy, we even have to supply the germs of the ideas of the people on the other side of this House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That one is just as interesting.

Mr. Pitman: May I go on? The Prime Minister knows this to be true. If he only asks those who are being kept in school, those—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Heavens above! The members opposite advocating universality, free accessibility—

Mr. Pitman: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, those do not replace any policy in education. But, we will come to that at some other time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The trouble is, hon. member educated him.

Mr. Pitman: We have ridden our unemployment, Mr. Speaker, but it is an expensive and self-defeating method, and the future costs will make it prohibitive. It is this long-term project which the province has not even begun to comprehend, even to understand so far as to try and cope with.

And what is the effect of this? Well, the effect on people who are not working, of course, is devastating. I do not want to be maudlin and sentimental about what it is like to be unemployed. I am sure every member in this House surely has people phoning them every day who are unemployed.

Mr. MacDonald: Ask Benson's son.

Mr. Pitman: They are people who want very much to work and to contribute and to be a part of this society.

As well as that, it has another effect—another spin-off. One only has to go into the schools and colleges and universities of this province to know what that spin-off is. It, too, is devastating. It destroys the morale of students who are working their way through universities and colleges. It destroys even those who want to see some job at the end of their high school career and who know there will be no jobs when they graduate.

I suggest it is undermining the performance of many young people in this province, because Canada will graduate this spring 142,000 students from our colleges and our universities, an increase of 23 per cent—and I would suggest that it would be well over 23 per cent in this province. But there will be fewer jobs, more unemployment—more unemployed scientists, more unemployed engineers, more unemployed teachers, to mention only a few representative professions.

This trend will continue—with variations, of course, over the next number of years, relating to the short-term economic drives which we have talked about here this afternoon.

Now we are injecting another level of certified graduates from our colleges of applied arts and technology. As the Prime Minister now realizes, I spent some of my time travelling about the province going to colleges of applied arts and technology and talking, in a very constructive way, to the people who were in those colleges. I discovered myself in one college—and I was there the same day as they were coming from the various employment agencies. There were about three times as many students in that college and there were 60 per cent fewer employers coming to talk to those students. Not a very happy prospect for the young people who were sitting in the classrooms and in the lecture halls of our province. And in that particular sector—the colleges of applied arts and technology—they will dramatically increase over the next number of years, and indeed so is their pessimism increasing.

Mr. P. J. Yakubski (Renfrew South): Has the hon. member written Trudeau?

Mr. Pitman: Well, Mr. Speaker, have I written Trudeau. You see, that is really the most meaningless way we can spend our time in this Legislature. We can berate the federal government and we can berate our poor friends here to the right who have to defend the federal government, but really that does not get us much farther forward, does it? What we in this part of the Legislature are trying to do is to give the government something to do for the next few months which will put people back to work.

There will be massive under-employment. That is the hidden tragedy of the kind of economic policies of both the Conservatives under Mr. Diefenbaker and under this government and our friends here to the right under Mr. Trudeau—the under-employment.

Mr. Yakabuski: What about Labour in Britain?

Mr. Pitman: There happens to be a Conservative government in power in Britain, too, and they are making a mess of that.

Mr. Yakabuski: We do not want any of that here.

Mr. Lawlor: Back to the boondocks.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: I might say having a Ph.D.—

An hon. member: As soon as the Tories took over we had chaos.

Mr. Yakabuski: They will bring stability to that nation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: The stability of death. Rigor mortis.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, our friends across the way seem to want to discuss the economy of Great Britain. Maybe they feel they can do more with that than they can with this province, but nonetheless—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why is the member discussing the economy of Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have heard a lot about Manitoba today.

Mr. Pitman: I suggest that there will be massive under-employment. Now, having a Ph.D. and driving a taxicab may give that person some kind of means of making ends meet, but it is a massive cost of providing largely untransferable skills in many cases. It is totally unacceptable and very, very expensive.

As I say, in regard to this long term prospect, and as I say I do not want to refer again to what my leader has already said in terms of the short term, we have already solved that problem for the government. Now we will try to get the government moving in what you might say is a more long-term direction.

We have got to move in some way from what could be called a production-work society to some kind of a leisure-learning society; a society which provides full employment although obviously everybody will not be employed in what we now call work all the time. In this kind of a direction the people of Ontario have some right to expect some vision, some imagination. The question is how can we distribute meaningful, contributive activity? How do you distribute opportunities for leisure? How do you distribute opportunities for learning?

What we are really talking about, Mr. Speaker, is a humane decent society, because I have seen the other kind of society which our friends on the other side seem to feel is worth continuing. What is a work welfare society like? It is a nasty, brutish society and even today I have witnessed a change in the atmosphere in the communities of our province as unemployed become welfare recipients and are accused of laziness and sloth by those who must work to support them supposedly.

Mr. Lewis: Like the Attorney General's comment.

Mr. Pitman: It erodes the good will, the sense of decent compassion, the very atmosphere which makes any kind of community life possible. It is this disgraceful aspect of this entire mass which has seen the humiliation of welfare recipients who have been denied dental care, even medical attention, because municipalities have had their budgets destroyed by the rising cost of welfare services.

It may be possible for the Minister of Social and Family Services to bring an additional budget down to this Legislature and get another $50 million, but what does the municipality do? How do they deal with their welfare services when the unemployment rises and the people run out of their unemployment insurance and they find themselves on the rolls of the local municipality? That is what I mean by an inhuman, indecent kind of society. Who can measure the psychological effect of being unwanted and part of the unemployed?

I might mention also the point made by the member for Riverdale, a comment he made this afternoon; what psychological effect this morass of the last few days must have produced across this province. People who believed they were going to work, they were going to be part of the 132,000 who were going back into the working world, find that there are 9,000 jobs. Nine thousand?

Mr. Lewis: Who knows?

Mr. Pitman: Who knows? Perhaps the minister will tell us in a few moments.

Mr. Lawlor: He told us 100,000.

Mr. Pitman: As I say, this is not maudlin sentimentalism.

Mr. Lawlor: Did the hon. Minister of Trade and Development write it?

Mr. Lewis: Grossman number three?

Mr. Pitman: I suggest to you, sir, it cuts to the heart of any oratory about the quality of life, a so-called pervasive theme of the Speech from the Throne we listened to a few days ago.

I am going to make just a few suggestions for you to build upon, on a long-range basis, on what my leader has already said this afternoon.

It is time this government began discussions with business and labour leaders, as well as those in the service sector working toward the reorganization of our industrial society. The idea that shorter work weeks, longer holidays, six months sabbatical periods can bring about some redistribution of work and leisure is obvious. It is time to start now toward defining the directions of our new leisure-learning society and this government alone can initiate that kind of response. I say government has more of a responsibility than simply to supervise misery or reacting in panic to short-term chaos.

Secondly, it is time the Ontario government gave leadership in entering into discussions with professions. The present direction will lead to a few highly-skilled, overworked—in terms of time—and with skills underemployed in time-consuming activities in place of what one might call a pyramided profession. A more realistic and definite role can be found for medical paraprofessionals and aides, teacher assistants and teacher aides, legal aides, and social worker assistants and social worker aides.

In short, we must find a role in a service-oriented society for the contribution of many people who have neither skill nor educational attainment to be full professionals in the interpretation of the present. The province must take the lead. This is the responsibility of our provincial government. One cannot handle this kind of thing through the federal government and blame them for not taking the initiative.

I suggest it is lunatic to encourage a society in which there are a few overworked professionals and no opportunity for others to serve. Only government can provide a common group for national discussions and eventual action.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What is the hon. member saying? Be a little more specific.

Mr. Pitman: The Prime Minister asks me to go into specifics?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am serious.

Mr. Pitman: I am very serious, too. I think it is time that we sat down, the Minister of Health, with the medical profession, the Minister of Education with the teaching profession, and began to work out the roles of teacher aides and teacher assistants, ensuring that there will be a place in a pyramided kind of society, in all of these pyramided professions. We have not done it. There have been attempts. The commission on the healing arts alluded to certain areas, even to the area on social work, but we have not done anything on a provincial level to do that thing.

Hon. Mr. Davis: How does that utilize more people?

Mr. Lewis: It provides new career lines.

Mr. Pitman: Obviously it utilizes more people. We can use thousands of young people. For example, helping—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We have a surplus of elementary school teachers.

Mr. Pitman: But there is no surplus of nursery school teachers for the nurseries that do not exist, because they are not brought into effect by this government.

We need thousands of young people and teachers who will teach retarded children and emotionally disturbed children. We have a million of them in Canada by this CELDIC report. There are all kinds of services to people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In that way the member is going to add substantially to the total number of students, by education.

Mr. Pitman: Indeed it will. The great problem in the elementary school is with the present budget cuts. What is happening is the present pupil-teacher ratio is being raised. In other words, fewer teachers are going to be employed in the province's schools next September than were last September, simply because the budget cuts have created that effect. That is true. One would hope that the government might be able to use—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: Obviously the Minister of Education would agree that what we need at the elementary level is more adults per student—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The government is the trouble.

Mr. Pitman: —a higher number of adults per student. If one wants to teach a young person how to read, write, or do obvious skills, then one needs a higher ratio of adults to students. If the government is not going to be able to provide ten students per classroom per teacher, then it had better be able to do it with teacher aides and teacher assistants—in other words, a pyramiding of people who have lesser skills who can participate in our society.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Just add to the pyramid of millions and millions of dollars to implement the programme.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: My answer, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister is that he adds millions and millions of dollars to the welfare rolls for those people who are not working in those jobs. It is as simple as that. But as long as you decide—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: It seems to be the most simple statement I ever made in this House, Mr. Speaker, that once you decide in a society that you are not going to let people starve and die because they cannot eat, then you are going to have to support them some way. You can either support them through some sensible way of keeping them at work, or you can put them on welfare rolls and let them vegetate and create the kind of brutish and inhumane society—

Hon. Mr. Davis: This pyramiding of personnel is not really relevant.

Mr. Pitman: It certainly is. If the Prime Minister cannot see how relevant that is, he has not comprehended the whole direction of our society for the next 20 years. I do not think I can explain it to him all here tonight.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The Prime Minister is gathering the germ of an idea. He should think about it overnight.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am and I am looking forward to tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: He should just let it infect him tomorrow.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker, if I might continue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, some create diseases, others antibiotics. I am suspicious that this could be a disease.

Mr. Pitman: Third, end the use of schools as custodial institutions for youth and adolescents and as a method of keeping them out of the employment picture and make educational services available to adults. Schools should be reaching out to those who are unemployed, rekindling the desire to learn and grow. And in the present system we have, if a person is on welfare and he tries to get into a college of applied arts and technology, he is taken off welfare. That is the reaction. Because of this ridiculous, almost horrendous division of responsibility between the federal and the provincial levels and said enforced idleness and erosion of skill and optimistic attitudes are positively encouraged. I think continuing in adult education can become the major emphasis, and I see little in The Department of Education to see this fact at the present time. Only when all our resources are not expended on the holding operation of our schools and young people are given an opportunity to contribute to the needs of the community can we really turn our attention to the creation of an educative society instead of a school-obsessed society. It is not a matter of teenagers taking jobs from the older workers. A rational dispensation will see young people working at their own level in the economy, with full opportunity to return to school or college at a later time.

It seems fantastic that we in the opposition had to press the Minister of Social and Family Services to see the guaranteed annual income as some solution, some level of solution at least, in this kind of a parliament we are dealing with today. Only that kind of a pattern can make sense either financially or educationally in an affluent society. Allowing enforced schooling of the young to gobble up all the resources of human development is wasteful in the long term and pointless educationally. It is counter-productive, as it discourages learning in school and encourages boredom and inactivity.

One might give another suggestion in the long term in the kind of society we must be moving toward. The pattern of time-tabling education creates a glut of young people on the labour market every summer. Yet The Department of Education has made only the feeblest efforts to make educational facilities usable all year round so that young people are given the opportunity to continue learning when they want to.

The pathetic response of this government to the tourist industry—that was the thing which really floored me. The former Minister of Trade and Development—at least he had flair and colour—but for the present minister to rise in this House and say we are going to give $1,000,000 to the tourist industry, not one penny more than I think was given last year, all we are going to do now is make it possible for a few of them to take advantage of it, because what has happened in the past year of course is that the whole programme lay in shambles.

I think there were two loans made across the whole of Ontario to the tourist industry, and now we are going to make $1,000,000 available—almost the same $1,000,000 last year—at a time when this is one industry that could provide some employment for the young people who are leaving our high schools and our colleges and who desperately need summer employment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The hon. member said it was peanuts.

Mr. Pitman: I think it is peanuts but I did not actually say it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member did the other day; he said $1,000,000 was peanuts.

Mr. Pitman: Well if you go out and talk to a few tourist operators, they will tell you it is a good deal less than peanuts; but I will not use that kind of language in this Legislature.

However, one might even take a look at the role of the minimum wage and the effect it is having on our tourist industry and see some thrust on the part of the government to perhaps subsidize in that area in terms of student employment across this province.

Well, my conclusion, Mr. Speaker. I do not intend to provide, you might say, a government programme for the next 10 years, but I think we have tried this afternoon to provide you with a programme in the short and the long run. The greatest principle of a democratic government is that it fails to move quickly enough to cope with the crisis, and it is this ineffectiveness which turns men and women to other methods of organizing their affairs. I call on this government to show just a little initiative and imagination in trying to cope with the obvious challenge of a post-industrial age.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Trade and Development is not in the House, and on his behalf I adjourn the debate.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving adjournment of the—

Mr. MacDonald (York South): No other Tory has anything to say.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This will go on again tomorrow.

Mr. MacDonald: I know.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Before moving adjournment of the House, we will go ahead with this debate tomorrow afternoon, hopefully to conclude, and then Wednesday we will move into the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5:53 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 6, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon, our guests in the east gallery are students from MacKillop Public School, Richmond Hill, and Main Street School, Toronto; and in the west gallery, Glendale School, Simcoe, and Hillside Public School in Clarkson. Later this afternoon, we will be having visitors from Durham College in Oshawa.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement related to Ontario summer youth programmes. There has been considerable concern expressed about the problems which students will face this summer in finding employment. With the increase in general unemployment during the fall and winter, it is expected that there may be a significant decrease in job opportunities for students.

The Ontario government is naturally concerned about this problem and is therefore taking steps to assist greater numbers of students to find employment or become involved in developing their skills and interests during the coming summer. At the same time, we hope that our efforts will provide encouragement to the private sector, which accepts continuing responsibility in this area as well.

Each summer the Ontario government employs a large number of students in all of its departments, boards and commissions, to assist in regular programmes and to provide special services during the summer period. This summer, over 14,000 young people will be working in the government, a substantial increase over previous years. This is an increase of 3,000 over the number hired in the summer of 1970.

Included in these 14,000 jobs will be 2,000 places for young people working on a new programme in the environmental and ecological field. We are calling this programme SWEEP, Students Working in an Environmental Enhancement Programme. This programme has been developed in response to the request of young people to be involved in the improvement of our environment and will cost $2.4 million. One thousand of these places in the SWEEP programme, many in the northern part of the province, have been allocated to The Department of Lands and Forests in an expansion of that department's activities, which will include improvement and clean-up in our provincial parks, tree planting in parks and on Crown lands, as well as a number of activities related to the preservation of fish and wildlife.

The other 1,000 places have been allocated through The Department of Energy and Resources Management for the employment of students in the 37 conservation authorities throughout the province. These young people will be involved in improvement to conservation lands and streams as well as in an intensified cleanup of roadsides, streams and lakeshores in the province.

Employment in this programme will be open to students 18 years of age and over and application forms are available by writing to SWEEP, in care of either The Department of Lands and Forests or The Department of Energy and Resources Management, Queen's Park, Toronto.

Filling the other 12,000 summer jobs in the provincial government will be students from every type of background and in every part of the province. Many of them will be employed to replace regular staff during the summer holiday period in offices and institutions. The Department of Lands and Forests will hire 2,050 17-year-olds in its Junior Forest Ranger Programme. Many students in technical and scientific courses will be employed in jobs requiring special skills in the fields of resources, highways and transportation.

Students will be working in special projects, including water, highway and geological surveys and various research programmes carried on by the government. Others will be employed in the Niagara Parks Commission, in tourist information centres, in activities such as the Fort Henry Guard. Students from the social and health sciences will be involved in summer internship programmes, while other university undergraduates will be helping in the property assessment programme. Students will also be working as hosts, hostesses and supervisors at Ontario Place, and others will find employment in privately operated restaurants.

The government has also approved over $900,000 for other new programmes, both provincially and locally, to provide summer activities for young people. This expenditure is for the development of programmes to challenge and involve young people in physical, social, artistic and creative activities. To co-ordinate and supervise these programmes, which could involve approximately 63,000 of our young people, it is expected that nearly 1,100 students will be employed, primarily outside the Ontario public service. The programmes involved are outlined as follows:

One of these activities is Project SOLE. This project, Summer of Learning Experiences, is an outgrowth of the SEED programme which has been operated successfully in the Toronto area for the past three years. Project SOLE will be established in 24 communities this summer.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Project what?

Hon. Mr. Davis: SOLE—Summer of Learning Experience.

An hon. member: Sounds fishy.

Mr. Lewis: Sole and seed. How about that! But it does not compensate for the absence of the programme.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Young people will be hired as co-ordinators, and they in turn will be calling upon many other citizens in these communities to provide their time and talents in establishing summer educational programmes in a wide variety of subject areas of interest to young people. The project is being administered under the direction of a provincial committee which includes representatives from the SEED programme, The Department of the Provincial Secretary and Citizenship and The Department of Education.

In another of the new programmes, 200 high school students will be selected to participate in a summer of service while they gain experience in the health and social service fields.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): SOS.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Summer of services. SOS.

Mr. Lewis: SEED and SOLE and SWEET and SOS.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There is no name attached to this.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): One will come.

Mr. MacDonald: That will be tomorrow's announcement, the name for that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Each will receive a $400 award for the summer and these young people will be providing services to homes for the aged, senior citizens' recreation centres, day nurseries, sheltered workshops and the Ontario Hospital schools. This programme will give young people interested in the health and social services field an opportunity to make a contribution to the social needs of our province. This programme is being administered by The Department of Health and The Department of Social and Family Services.

Another important activity will be the expansion of the Ontario Youth in Action programme. In this programme the province cost-shares with municipalities and agencies the salaries of community youth workers at the request of the municipalities or agencies. Provision has been made for the employment of up to 300 youths in this programme who may be involved in activities such as the development of local youth enterprise programmes, expanded recreation programmes, formation of local youth councils or the development of community activities which may range from pollution programmes to the development of additional services to senior citizens.

In the activities outlined, we are providing opportunities for young people to become involved in the problems of the environment, social needs and in new educational experiences. There are many young people in the province, however, who have special talents and interests in the arts and we have developed three new programmes to encourage and assist such young people.

In the theatre arts, support and expansion of theatre programmes are being provided for in conjunction with the Ontario Youth-eatre. Regional theatre programmes will be established and support will be given to the development of a provincial company. This will enable many interested and talented young people to gain experience in all phases of the theatre arts. Many of the smaller communities in Ontario will have an opportunity to see the plays produced by the students involved in this programme.

Funds have also been provided for a summer music programme to establish a corps of young Ontario musicians. These musicians will develop their musical skills and will travel the province providing concerts and shows upon the request of local municipalities and youth groups. The productions will be developed entirely by the young musicians with the guidance of several experienced co-ordinators. I cannot give any undertaking as to the type of music that will be provided.

In two or three other areas of the province we shall establish handcraft production centres where young people who have ability in the crafts can be provided with adequate and competent leadership. These crafts would be mainly geared to the tourist industry and sales outlets will be established in conjunction with the centres. We are also providing funds for a travelling team of artists who will provide concentrated courses for skill training in various art media in Ontario communities during the summer.

In the encouragement of athletics, we shall continue our assistance to the competitive swimming programme. This year, in addition, we shall assist communities with the expansion of local track and field programmes. In many communities, recreation committees, local branches of the Royal Canadian Legion or other service clubs will employ skilled young people as community track and field coaches and the province will assist in this programme through the provision of regional and provincial co-ordinators; the development of leadership courses for community coaches, and of community, district and regional meets for the young people involved in this programme. From these programmes, young people with an interest and talent in swimming or track and field will be given an opportunity to develop their skills, and it is from this group that we shall expect to discover many of our competitors for the 1976 Olympic teams.

The youth-in-action, arts and crafts, drama, music and athletic programmes will all be administered by the youth and recreation branch of The Department of Education, and young people and municipalities interested in these programmes should direct their inquiries to that department.

Another summer activity involving a younger age group will be an urban-to-rural exchange of young people 12 to 15 years of age. Youngsters from our cities will have an opportunity of experiencing today's rural way of life by living with farm families for short periods during the summer. The province will be hiring students to work with community organizations in the development and co-ordination of this programme. We hope that 5,000 to 6,000 young people will be involved in this exchange. This programme is being administered by The Department of Agriculture and Food.

The student self-help project undertaken by The Department of Labour is already meeting with an enthusiastic response. Under this programme, guidance and assistance will be provided to secondary school students to establish their own service businesses over the summer. Co-operation is being received from the Ontario Chamber of Commerce and Junior Achievers. All high schools in Ontario have been contacted about this programme.

We have been pleased to learn that corn companies in southwestern Ontario will be hiring at least 4,500 students for approximately one month in a special corn-detassling programme. Government officials are working with the companies involved to ensure that student manpower will be available when required and that appropriate accommodation can be found for those who may come from outside the area. This is an example of the way in which co-operation between industry and government can assist in providing summer employment opportunities.

I would also like to add that the government is willing to offer consultative services and guidance to other private businesses and industry that may be interested in sponsoring or undertaking special projects to employ students this summer.

The total cost of our public service employment programme for students and the other activities I have outlined will be at least $18 million. This is made up as follows:

	Number employed (000)	Cost (millions)
Ont. govt. regular summer programmes	12	$14.7
SWEEP programme	2	2.4
Other programmes primarily outside the Ont. public service	1.1	.9
		$18

We believe, Mr. Speaker, that these efforts will provide a positive contribution not only to the students involved but to the many communities and citizens who may benefit from the results of these activities.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table two documents relating to national tax reform. The first is "Ontario Proposals for Tax Reform in Canada, Part 3—Taxation of Corporations and Shareholders," and the other is "Ontario Studies in Tax Reform, No. 5—Technical Study on Integration."

These documents deal with the central issue of what method of taxing corporations and shareholders will be best for Canada in the years to come in terms of workability, economic growth and federal-provincial tax uniformity and flexibility.

Two other papers containing Ontario government proposals for reform of the Canadian tax system were presented last year, as were three other tax reform studies. A further tax reform study, "Tax Reform and Revenue Growth to 1980," should be available for tabling within approximately one week. These papers and studies were preceded by Ontario's own 1969 white paper entitled, "The Reform of Taxation and Government Structure in Ontario," which dealt with reform of the provincial and municipal tax structure.

This represents a constructive contribution by the Ontario government to the national tax reform process. It would not have been possible except for the foresight of my predecessor, the present Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton), and his courage in making certain that the Canadian public had the benefit of a broad set of well-developed alternatives to the main features of the federal white paper. The people of Ontario and of Canada will long be indebted to the former Treasurer of this province for his major contribution to the common goal of a broadly acceptable national tax reform which will serve Canadians well in the years to come.

Now, sir, what these papers and studies make clear once and for all is that, while there are three levels of government, there is only one taxpayer. This means total tax burdens at all levels of government—not just one tax at one level of government—must be taken into account, if increased fairness that means anything to people is to be achieved.

It means that public-sector expenditures must be restrained so that relief in one set of taxes is not offset by increases in other taxes. It means that tax reform should make a positive contribution to economic growth, if both the unemployed and employed are to reap any benefits that matter.

Finally, it means that the joint use of tax fields requires a partnership approach, based on frank exchanges of views and on a realistic sharing of revenues which reflect soundly developed spending priorities at all three levels of government.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): A secret closet there. It would not let any word out.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is useful to note at this point that the federal government has already responded to many of our concerns by agreeing that there shall be no tax increases as part of tax reform; by acknowledging the small business problem and by making some modifications in the original harsh proposals directed against mining investment. Further, the Commons committee report, as far as it went, increased the chances that necessary changes in the original proposals will be made.

But more is still required if national tax reform is to be broadly acceptable, durable, and the basis for essential uniformity of the federal and provincial income tax system.

Firstly, the personal income tax should incorporate low-income allowances and credits, including refundable credits for property taxes, and sales taxes in order to concentrate available tax relief revenues to those who need it most and minimize compensating tax increases for other taxpayers.

The federal integration proposals discussed in the paper and study presented today must be dropped.

Tax reform changes must now be scheduled on a priority basis of what the people and the economy need most and not on what is dictated by the requirements of a massive once-and-for-all tax package, whose primary effect is to produce unworkable tax complexity.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Has the minister spoken to the people?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Above all, there must be a willingness on the part of the federal government to open up tax reform to real provincial involvement and participation, so that the final legislation that is adopted will ensure a sensible and unified fiscal system for all Canada.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Where does the separate provincial tax come in?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am delighted that the Leader of the Opposition is here. According to this afternoon's paper, he made no contribution yesterday and he is well on his way to making no contribution today.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I bet there was a phone call, Mr. Speaker, from Ottawa from Ben, saying, "Where was Bobbie yesterday in that debate? There is no mention of him in this afternoon's papers at all."

Hon. Mr. Davis: Wait until we get around to the 17 million.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Really rather sad! Mr. Speaker, all this means that the 1971 approach to tax reform should be to introduce now, effective not later than July 1, reform to bring in low-income taxpayer relief via a system of selective credits without other tax increases or changes, to promote needed private investment on which the battle against unemployment necessarily depends.

If this were done, the immediate social and economic urgencies of tax reform could be met without further delay and without inflationary price increases. Further delay on these two tax reform priorities would not only be unconscionable but also completely unnecessary. Immediate reductions in taxes on low-income Canadians without other tax increases are possible and fully justified in terms of both social and economic requirements.

The most important single contribution the federal government can now make to tax reform is to drop any form of direct integration of personal and corporate tax. Once this is done, tax reform becomes manageable, and a sensible ordering and timing of the several reforms becomes possible. It will not be practicable either for provincial governments to act responsibly in the exercise of their fiscal jurisdiction or for taxpayers to respond sensibly and constructively to a tax reform comprising 500 to 1,000 pages of detailed amendments to practically every section of The Income Tax Act. There is no possible way such an approach can add up or be acceptable to anyone.

If low-income relief and positive investment-promoting measures are taken this year, the following sort of approach would make sense for the remaining reform measures:

Presentation, for federal-provincial discussion, of a separate capital-gains-revised estate and gift tax system. Given the long delays, we doubt if an agreed tax system could be in force before July 1, 1972.

Presentation of a draft bill of technical amendments with at least four to six months for comment from taxpayers and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, let me conclude on an optimistic note. I am hopeful that the federal government recognizes the sincerity and the concern behind the views presented by the Ontario and other provincial governments. I am sure they must recognize that the hopes for solid federal-provincial co-operation in many fields, from the constitutional talks to the most routine relationships, depend heavily on the decisions they are now making. I feel sure they must now realize that the original white paper, in addition to being inappropriate in many respects, was also too ambitious in terms of quantity. This means the attention of the federal government must now be on tax reform priorities and timing as well as on substance.

I would only add that, like my predecessor, I will go anywhere at any time to advance the cause of positive tax reform in this country.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister of Correctional Services anything? The hon. Minister of Citizenship.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the indulgence of the House to be able to introduce at this time to the House 31 civil servants from many parts of the world who are at present seated in your gallery at the north of the chamber.

They are attending a three-day seminar arranged by the department in co-operation with the Canadian International Development Agency of the government of Canada and our Ontario Departments of Agriculture and Food, Education, Health, Municipal Affairs and the Treasury Board, from which speakers are describing to the students the procedures which govern the operations of their departments.

I should explain that these young people are in the midst of a course in public administration at Carleton University in Ottawa and today are accompanied by Professor David M. Watters of that faculty and Mr. John Beggs of the federal government.

All our visitors, Mr. Speaker, have been chosen by their respective governments to learn as much as they can about Canadian methods of administration. We are happy that Ontario has been chosen for the eighth consecutive year to conduct this seminar. Together they represent 15 countries—from Afghanistan, Hong Kong, Indonesia and Malaysia in Asia, from Botswana, Lesotho, Nigeria, Swaziland and Tanzania in Africa, from the Caribbean islands of Barbados, Jamaica, St. Vincent, and Trinidad and Tobago, and from Guyana and British Honduras.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that I speak for all our members when I wish them every success in their studies and even greater success when they are able to apply what they have learned to the greater advancement of the countries from which they come.

To each of them we extend the hand of friendship and goodwill.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement with regard to the issue being discussed in the press in relation to the Ontario Hospital School for the Retarded in Orillia.

I think the first point I would like to make, Mr. Speaker, is that one has to accept the statement by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) insofar as it relates to the fact of overcrowding at Orillia. I think one also has to realize and remember that Orillia and Smiths Falls were developed when concepts were very different in relation to the care of retarded children.

I think, also, Mr. Speaker, I should assure the members of the House that newer concepts known to many of them in relation to decentralization and community orientation of our facilities are in the mill and are in progress with the assistance and help of the Association for the Mentally Retarded.

We have 10 such institutions in the province, Mr. Speaker. Three of them are large; the others are under 300 beds and, as I am advised, the question of overcrowding and staff is not apparent in these institutions. We are proceeding, I am happy to say, with the Prince Edward Heights complex which will relieve Smiths Falls to a degree. As I think the hon. members may know, our programmes generally are widely accepted internationally for their quality. I think, in particular, the Children's Psychiatric Research Institute in London is an outstanding example.

This morning, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lewis: That is an assessment. That is for diagnostic, not treatment purposes.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence:—I asked the department and staff at the Orillia Hospital to ensure that the facilities at Orillia were open to all the media—press, radio and television. I do hope that the members of this Legislature will take an early opportunity to increase the number of visits that they make to our institutions and, of course, this applies to the media and to the press.

I will, as Minister of Health, go as far as I possibly can to open the doors of these institutions, and I will do this, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members, to the extent that I am able to protect the patients themselves and protect the staff itself.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a welcome change.

Mr. Lawlor: A far more intelligent attitude than that of his predecessor.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I may say, Mr. speaker, I make the plea that both the members and the press use this as an occasion for constructively informing the public, as I am sure they will, because it would be very sad if the people of this province were to lose confidence in a programme which, I think, admittedly is good, and in many ways is excellent, but as the Minister of Health I place as a top priority for improvement.

An hon. member: Very well done!

Mr. MacDonald: I hope some of the minister's colleagues take note.

Mr. Lewis: Now that is a change that this House welcomes.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

SEPARATE INCOME TAX

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, further to the statement made by the Treasurer, can he inform the House whether or not the papers presented to us today contain a recommendation for a separate income tax or the possibility of such a tax?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Nixon: I wonder, as a supplementary question, if that means that the minister has retreated from his statement made some weeks ago that he feels that this is a possibility for the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, had the Leader of the Opposition been listening he would have found out that—

Mr. Trotter: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —these papers related to the integration proposals of the federal government. They did not necessarily relate to what our view on a separate income tax would be or would not be. They deal specifically with a subject.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, a further supplementary: Would the Treasurer then instruct me as to whether or not the integration of the personal and corporate income tax might not have a reflection on whether or not the province proceeded with the plans put forward in the white paper by the Treasurer's predecessor and reiterated by the incumbent in this office, that the government was looking forward to a separate income tax?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If the federal government decided to proceed with what we believe is to be unworkable and unwise legislation, then certainly that would have a very large bearing on the decisions which we must make in this government.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary question in this matter, Mr. Speaker: Can the Treasurer inform the House how his plans as the new Treasurer to reform our provincial tax system can be related to his urging the government of Canada to proceed forthwith with their plan.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: By suggesting that the government of Canada could proceed now to bring relief without tax reform, as we have been discussing for the last two years. Tax reform in a legislative sense can be done today by the government of Canada tomorrow moving through a system of tax credits to bring relief to the people of this country who need relief now and not a year from now or not two years from now.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: Can the Treasurer inform the House what is impeding him in bringing about tax reform at the municipal level, which has been deliberated by this House for so long and for example, has led the city of St. Catharines yesterday to vote to petition for a private bill to secede from the regional government because of provincial inactivity.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I suppose the largest single impediment to what we would like to do in terms of general provincial municipal tax reform is our lack of elbow room in certain tax fields—

An hon. member: Stay out of the Niagara region.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —most notably, income tax. We in this government also have many monetary problems, as I indicated to the House yesterday.

Mr. Nixon: Almost a fiscal nightmare.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Our corporation taxes are off some $47 million from our forecast figures, for example—$47 million out of a tax of $450 million brought about by the destructive policies of the member's Liberal friends in Ottawa.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, is a supplementary question directed to the Premier permissible? A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: There is a supplementary down there. Does the member for Lakeshore have a supplementary?

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, Mr. Speaker, of the Treasurer: Would the attempt to maintain the provincial government's own corporation taxes in effect in the face of an integration by the federal government?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Exactly; that is the only way to prevent it.

Mr. Lawlor: Let the Treasurer answer it.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Let us hear his answer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: See the unity we have over here. The former Treasurer replied exactly as I would have; I would put it exactly in those same words.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary of the Treasurer: I take it from his exhortation to the federal government about personal income tax incorporating low income allowances and credits, including refundable credits for various areas, that he regards it as totally within his purview on April 26 to do the same thing independent of the federal government.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, not through the income tax system because we do not have control over it; in the simplest possible terms, we do not have control over the income tax form. We do not have control over the rates of weekly deductions. For example, the federal minister tomorrow could say that he proposes to remove the surtax, which would mean that he would order the Queen's Printer at Ottawa to reprint all those tax tables which employers struggle with, which would have the effect of putting money into the economy—not tomorrow; I suppose a month from now or two months from now. Our problem is that to make moves such as that, we would require to give notice, I think, by next fall, or July, not to take effect until January 1, 1972.

Mr. Lewis: A year-end credit.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, and a year-end credit would not put money into the economy right now. I am not defending at this point the necessity for a personal income tax of our own but that is the sort of freedom which it would give us. In the absence of responsible action by the government at Ottawa, we could move on our own which we are not free to do now.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, by way of a supplementary, is it fair to conclude from what the Treasurer said that in the absence of action from Ottawa, it is impossible that the government of Ontario can take any remedial tax steps?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I would not say it is impossible. What I have said is that it is very difficult for us to take those kind of tax steps which would stimulate the economy immediately.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further supplementary: Would it be fair then to say that the headlines in today's newspapers which hint about a tax reduction are, in fact, over-optimistic?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I must confess, Mr. Speaker, I really did not look at the headlines. I looked through—

Mr. Singer: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I was looking through all the small print, as I said earlier, trying to find out whether the leader of the Liberal Party had been here yesterday and there was no mention of his name.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

CAPITAL GAINS TAX

Mr. Nixon: I have a question on this same matter I would like to direct toward the Premier. Did he disagree when Premier Bourassa said he felt that Ontario supported Quebec in its contention that there should be no capital gains tax?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not recall Mr. Bourassa saying to me in our private conversation there should or should not be. Quite frankly, at the press conference there were a number of issues mentioned, and I did not indicate my support or otherwise for two or three things that the Premier forgot to suggest.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: It is referred to in the small print that his colleague to his left reads so avidly, where the statement is attributed to the Prime Minister of Quebec in this regard; and the Premier is not aware that this statement was made?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not only that, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister of this province did not support any specific mention of any tax alterations.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it would be a surprise if he did.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, has the Premier of this province had contact with Premier Bourassa to discuss the downgrading of his proposal—Premier Davis' proposal—to have a conference on foreign investment which Quebec sees as worthy only of observer status?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Premier of the Province of Quebec or somebody designated by him will certainly be invited. As to how he or his government responds is entirely within his purview.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR YOUTH

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Premier, further to his statement on student employment:

Is it possible that some of the $18 million that he predicts will be spent to further student employment this summer could be directed toward employing young people to assist in the manning of the facilities of the Ontario Hospital schools where the short-comings were pointed out yesterday by the member for High Park?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there is a section under the summer employment programme related to The Department of Health where young people can involve themselves in this aspect of it. Just how many could be employed, how many could be beneficial, is something I am sure the department will undertake.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Will the Premier undertake either to inquire himself or have the Minister of Health look into the possibility of a specific direction toward the Ontario Hospital schools of some funds from this programme?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is already mentioned in the statement.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): A supplementary question to the Premier on this subject, Mr. Speaker: Regarding the 60,000 young people in the age group 14 to 24, referred to by the provincial Treasurer yesterday as being out of school, looking for work and unable to find it right now, will those young people who are non-students be eligible for the programme the Premier has outlined today?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are some aspects of it as it relates to the community-oriented programmes where the qualification as a student is not necessarily a prerequisite.

Mr. T. Reid: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Could the Premier tell us how many young people there are in the Province of Ontario between the ages of 14 and 24?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member how many there are between 14 and 24 but I would be delighted to get this very important information for him.

Mr. T. Reid: If the Premier does not know how many there are, how can he say that his programme will anywhere meet the need of approximately half a million young people?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in my statement I did not say that this would meet the needs of all the young people in the Province of Ontario. I very specifically stated there is also a responsibility upon the private sector, and I invited the private sector to consult with the government as to how we might involve ourselves with them in the development of more opportunities for student and young-people employment over the summer months. I want to make it abundantly clear that no programme of this government has said that it will involve all the students or provide student employment for all the young people between 14 and 24.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Yorkview has a supplementary?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, how soon after the close of the academic year will these jobs begin and how many weeks is it envisaged that each student will work?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as far as the job programme relates to the post-secondary, the majority of those opportunities will be available from roughly—I am guessing at this, I could be a week out—the third week in May until September; and of course as far as it relates to the high school programme, those students will be very actively and constructively involved until about mid-June so those programmes will not commence until they have completed their academic year.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary. Without pushing the Premier too far, how many more—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I apologize for my—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Lewis: I can understand that the member for Frontenac-Addington (Mr. Simonett) feels he should support the Premier in this.

How many more students and young people does the Premier estimate are seeking employment this year over last?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the hon. member how many more students will in fact be seeking employment this year over last year. It relates to the ambitions of certain students themselves. There are a number of students who will be involved in travel programmes; I cannot give any accurate estimate at this point as to the number.

I can tell the hon. member that as far as the government is concerned, we are providing for an increase of some 3,000 students over last year, which, on a percentage basis—which is perhaps the best way to tackle these things—represents 27.2 or 27.3 per cent increase over our involvement last year.

RELIGION IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education: Has he maintained the moratorium against the initiative of any new programmes for the teaching of religion in the public schools that was established, I believe, last fall by his predecessor; or is it now possible for school boards to implement on their own initiative new programmes in these fields?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): There is no change in the policy.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: To make that clear then, it is not possible for a school board to implement a new programme in this area?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Well, whatever the policy was, it is being maintained.

Mr. Nixon: I see.

Mr. MacDonald: That is keeping your skirts clean.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On a point of order, in that the Leader of the Opposition always wants to be factually correct, it was not a moratorium that was declared. It was indicated that the boards would be having guidelines and can move into this programme in September of 1971.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary to the Minister of Education, which I am sure he will now be able to answer. Are these guidelines going to be ready to allow the school boards to move forward with the initiatives in these areas?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Certainly.

Mr. MacDonald: You fellows bail each other out with the greatest aplomb.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

NIAGARA REGION TAXATION

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Premier: Can he explain the exchange of correspondence which took place between himself and the city of St. Catharines around the amounts of taxation they are paying to Niagara regional government and their wish for a meeting?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot explain my own correspondence to the extent that one can or cannot read it. I have indicated—and we have been discussing it within the last not too long period of time—that we shall be meeting with the people from St. Catharines as it relates to their problems.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: did the Prime Minister refuse to meet with them?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I have not yet.

Mr. Lewis: No, he has not yet!

Hon. Mr. Davis: And I may even meet with them.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, how condescending.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I am sure the people in Niagara will be exuberant at this prospect.

Mr. Singer: They will be holding their breath.

Mr. Lewis: It may be that we will have them visited in person.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We may have it solved without.

Mr. Singer: How lucky can they get!

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): We will take care of things in St. Catharines. They are all totalled up.

ONTARIO HOSPITALS FACILITIES

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker? What, in fact, is the timetable or physical alteration of the facilities in Smiths Falls and Orillia?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I cannot answer that, Mr. Speaker. I will take it as notice and perhaps prepare for the hon. member a list of projects and timings generally.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Lewis: I have a question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also provide for the House a breakdown of the proposed hiring of additional staff in the Ontario Hospital school system over the next period of time; also, the per diem rates which are paid in the Ontario Hospital school system at the moment?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Certainly this kind of information will be dealt with when the estimates are before the House. I had better take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough East a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Would the need for additional facilities for the uneducable retarded children of the Province of Ontario decrease if this government had a programme whereby such children could live at home and attend day-care centres up to the age of 18, instead of being cut off at the age of 12, which is, at present, the case?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): How many would the hon. member take?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: As I tried to underline when I was speaking earlier, Mr. Speaker, the whole thrust of our programme is to decentralize and the ultimate limit of that, of course, is home care and home training.

I may say, right at this moment, I have held up a couple of building projects this week because I want to reassess whether or not we can break some of these institutions down into even smaller units. By this, I hope, we will not have any ultimate delays, but the thrust to break down the institutions and units is very real to me.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a further supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Why does this government cut off grants to schools like the Eppleworth School for children when they get over the age of 12, thereby forcing the parents to either—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked his question. He is now adding editorial comment.

Mr. T. Reid: Why does the minister not do something effective about it?

Mr. Yakabuski: That could be a future Minister of Education if miracles are possible.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Does the minister plan any immediate steps to hire more staff for Orillia?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: More staff? I do not know whether I can answer that. I suppose I could be cute if we were adding one person. Let me assess that, Mr. Speaker, to see if it is significant in our planning.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: I have a new question.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any further supplementaries?

Mr. Deans: A supplementary; yes, sir.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Yes, this is a supplementary question.

What has happened to the construction of a facility for children promised for the Nickel Basin in 1959 by the former Premier on the eve of the 1959 election?

Mr. MacDonald: The former Premier twice removed.

Mr. Speaker: That is hardly supplementary but the minister may answer it if he so wishes.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): That is a good question.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: It is a commitment which will be met. I recall studying it the day before yesterday. I will try to get the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Yes, sir, a supplementary question. Can the minister indicate whether any of the existing facilities at the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital might be made available for those retarded children over the age of 18 who presently have no facilities in the area?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I will ask my official to assess that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor for further questions.

OMA FEE SCHEDULE

Mr. Lewis: I am inclined to give the minister the benefit of the doubt in this area after suffering it for so many years.

Would the Minister of Health reveal to this Legislature the various propositions which he put to the Ontario Medical Association about the fee schedule?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there would be any advantage to be gained from that. I do not like the word "proposition."

Mr. Lewis: Proposals?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: "Proposals" is not exactly the word either.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): What kind of a love-in has the hon. minister there?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well, it is certainly not my ambition to destroy the medical profession of this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Not even disturb it, let alone destroy it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Inasmuch as a vast sum of public money goes to pay for Ontario health insurance plans, why is it that the members of this Legislature and the public cannot share with the minister the alternatives—not the fiats, but the alternatives—which he has presented to the medical association? What special prerogatives have they and the minister to do it secretly? It is public legislation.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: This is not the negotiation, Mr. Speaker, of a collective agreement.

Mr. Peacock: That is right.

Mr. MacDonald: That is it exactly. That is why the minister should make it available. He is arguing against himself.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The association itself, the executive, is not in itself in a position at this moment to bind the government. I am simply sitting down around the table and discussing alternative proposals and solutions that might come to some effective result.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): And negotiating.

Mr. Lewis: With public money. The minister is negotiating with public funds.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I am not negotiating with public money. There is no negotiation because neither of us can bind the other and the situation is not one where, by statute, I have any authority to.

Mr. Lewis: Certainly the minister is negotiating. What else is he doing?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Does he mean they tell him what to do?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary: Is the minister engaged in some frivolous exercise with the medical association, or is he going to be presenting to cabinet some particular position?

An hon. member: The hon. member is the one who is being frivolous.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be presenting the cabinet with alternatives.

Mr. Lewis: Then the minister should share it with the members.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The hon. member will have his chance to share it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: The minister has negotiated with the doctors behind the scenes every time and have they not dictated to him?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order! The member for Humber has a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: With the insurance companies; with the doctors!

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Will the Minister of Health inform the House, if he can, the depth of the conversations between himself and the representatives of the Ontario Medical Association touching on the possibility of the medical profession accepting 87 per cent of the agreed-upon prescribed fees for their services in lieu of 90 per cent?

Mr. Shulman: That has been voted down.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I thought I answered that question yesterday, in the House.

Mr. Ben: The hon. minister mentioned it.

Mr. Yakabuski: Read Hansard.

Mr. Peacock: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ben: Can the minister tell us the depth of his discussions with them? Could he, please?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I do not know how one would define the depth of a discussion.

Mr. Ben: Is there a prospect of the medical association accepting 87 or 87.5 per cent of the minimum fees?

Mr. Lewis: No, they voted it down.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister states that he has answered the question. He is quite able to do that.

The member for Windsor West.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, in the light of the minister's first answer, does he intend to ask the Legislature to amend The Health Services Insurance Act to give him the authority he says he now lacks to negotiate?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: That will be a matter of government policy. It certainly will not be something that I will tackle on my own.

Mr. MacDonald: Fat chance of this government giving him that power. Why does the government not get public support to strengthen its hand? Does the minister want to lose these negotiations like your predecessor did?

Mr. Lewis: The government bows to them every time. The OMA is the strongest trade union in the province.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West further questions? The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

SENIOR CITIZENS' RENTS

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Will senior citizens receiving the guaranteed income supplement and living in Ontario housing be permitted to keep all of their increased supplement or will some portion of it be taken away by way of rent increases?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not as familiar with this subject as I would like to be. I will take that as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough.

CERTIFICATES FOR TEACHERS

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister of Education.

I wonder if the minister can assure the many hundreds of teachers who have graduated from teachers' colleges and who will be graduating this spring from teachers' colleges and who will not have jobs that the qualifying period for permanent certificates will begin after they receive employment rather than the stipulated five years, I think it is, that now exists?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give such an assurance this afternoon, but I will be very glad to take the problems, to which the hon. member makes reference, under advisement.

Mr. Pitman: Would he be prepared to discuss this with the teachers' organizations and make some decision in view of the fact that the teachers' colleges will soon be dispersing their occupants to all parts of the province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will be very happy to discuss this matter with the teachers' federation.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways and Transport has the answer to a question.

DEAD ELM REMOVAL PROGRAMME

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: In answer, Mr. Speaker, to a question asked by the hon. member for Huron-Bruce.

The department purchased a total of 783 chain saws; 170 were of German manufacture. Quotations were obtained on a local basis from firms which could provide maintenance service for the equipment and specifications were established for this purpose. Two German firms were noted as suppliers or manufacturers. One is a firm called Style—130 of this manufacture were purchased—and 40 by a German manufacturer named Solo. As I say, they were purchased locally on a tender basis, and having met the specifications it seemed satisfactory to purchase them.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): What was the difference in price quotation between the two German makes and the next highest Canadian make of saw?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not have the information, Mr. Speaker. That question was not asked of me yesterday so I did not proceed to get the information. If this is a supplementary question, I will take it as notice and get it for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary?

Mr. Gaunt: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. minister concur with this policy or will he issue a directive to his department officials to stop this type of practice, this type of buying practice?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will issue any such direction. I do not see the need for it. I do not want to get into a long-ranging debate with the hon. member. I would suggest that the federal Minister of Trade and Commerce would suggest to him that possibly if we are going to sell merchandise to Germany, we should buy something from them. I think this balances out very well.

Mr. Lewis: Because the government negotiated that loan.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary?

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): A supplementary?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We used some of the money.

Mr. Lewis: And you sold your soul when you sold Ontario.

Mr. Jackson: Of the same minister, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If it is a supplementary, of course it is of the same minister.

Mr. Jackson: I just wanted to remind him.

Mr. Martel: My, the Speaker is testy today!

Mr. Jackson: I was trying to get his attention, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry if I offended you.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The member's leader was occupying my attention.

Mr. Jackson: Were any of the saws that were purchased by the Ontario government made in Canada?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Pardon me, I did not hear the member? Mr. Speaker, if his colleagues would keep quiet I might be able to hear him.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, were any of the saws that were purchased by the government made in Canada?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I thought I answered that. I indicated that out of a total of 783 chain saws, 170 were of German manufacture; the rest were Canadian made.

Mr. Martel: Thirteen.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, 613!

Mr. R. M. Johnston: What school did the member go to?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: You did not go to any.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

PROVINCIAL SUCCESSION DUTIES

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer.

Mr. Speaker: The last question before this was asked by the member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. Singer: While the Treasurer mentioned in his statement that he hoped there would be revised estate and gift tax systems which are both federal, he neglected to mention anything about provincial succession duties. Does the Treasurer intend, at long last, to make the succession duty system similar in form to the estate tax system and to do away with two unnecessary civil service empires that are required to do the same purpose?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The concern of the member for Downsview is understandable, Mr. Speaker. I can only tell him that all these matters are under consideration from time to time.

Mr. Singer: Yes. Under review.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

TRANSFER OF COMMUNITY PLANNING BRANCH

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the provincial Treasurer: Is it the government's intention to transfer the community planning branch from The Department of Municipal Affairs to Treasury and Economics in order to co-ordinate it with regional development?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not to my specific knowledge, and I suppose I might have some knowledge of it if it were about to happen. But I suppose like all things, that matter is under review as well and it might well be—

Mr. Deans: Germ of an idea.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It might well be that the government commission on productivity might have some recommendations in that area, but there are no such plans at present.

Mr. Lewis: They are going to take the rap for everything, that little productivity committee.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are a very good committee.

Mr. Lewis: Right, we sat in on their meetings.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East.

TESTING VACCINE ON CHILDREN

Mr. T. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Health, if I can gain his attention, Mr. Speaker. Is the hospital school at Orillia still using the children there, the mentally retarded children there, as guinea pigs for the testing of various types of vaccine? To be specific, Mr. Speaker, is that hospital still giving parents only 10 days to reply to requests to have their children used for testing of vaccine which is not on the market because it has not been adequately tested?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: I will take that question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

SENIOR CITIZENS' APARTMENTS

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Has the minister's department made final arrangements to take over the senior citizens' apartments in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there is correspondence either on the way or presently in my office for consideration. It will be considered.

Mr. Trotter: By way of supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is there any guarantee, or will there be any guarantee, that if and when the province does take over the homes for senior citizens the rent scale will not be raised?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact we have not come to any decision as to whether we will take it over, that supplementary question is strictly hypothetical. I could not give the hon. member an answer to that.

Mr. Trotter: Have you any idea when you will take it over, if you—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have not decided to take it over. If, as and when we do, I will be in a position to give the hon. member that information.

Mr. Speaker: Is this a supplementary? The hon. member for Brantford.

ODC LOANS TO FISHERMEN

Mr. Makarchuk: I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development. Can the minister indicate why ODC loans to fishermen are made only on the basis of economic viability when, in fact, legislation passed in this House was to provide loans to fishermen on basis of injury to the fishing operation?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not hear that last part.

Mr. Makarchuk: "When in fact legislation in this House was to provide financial assistance or compensation to fishermen on basis of loss of business."

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I will take that under advisement. I am really not as familiar with that as I would like to be. I will get the information to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

MUNICIPAL TRANSPORTATION GRANTS

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Highways and Transport: When will details be given of the new grant system to assist municipal public transportation?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, as soon as they have been developed.

Mr. Deacon: A supplementary to that: Is it the plan of the minister to announce this new system prior to any decision being made on the Spadina Expressway, as the grants system could have a material effect on the design of such expressway?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Substantial work is being done on the development of these grant proposals, Mr. Speaker. I very much doubt if they can be brought to any final conclusion in time to have an effect on the decision in respect of the Spadina Expressway. I cannot relate the two very well.

Mr. Deacon: A further supplementary. Since the decision to provide a new system of grants was announced nearly a year ago, has there not been sufficient time now to prepare the details and provide them to the municipalities?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Speaker. I would say not. If that was the case, I would have been able to discuss them in detail with the hon. member today. My predecessor in office was given, I understand, until December 30 to produce a report. We have been addressing ourselves to that report since its completion and, as I say, there is fruitful work being done but we have not yet developed the total grant programme.

Mr. Deacon: Has the minister not made up his mind yet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, not yet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

SPEED GOVERNORS FOR AUTOMOBILES

Mr. Young: A question of the Minister of Highways and Transport: In view of the damage that occurs in high-speed accidents, particularly such as the one that occurred over the weekend in Toronto, has the minister given any consideration to limiting the upper speed capability of motor cars manufactured and sold in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, I must apologize to you, sir, and to the hon. members for saying that my course in mechanics was not pursued to the point where I can answer that question. I will take it as notice and have somebody who is more knowledgeable than I provide him with the information.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, if I might ask the minister: Is it not possible that cars can be manufactured that will not go more than 90 miles an hour, with speedometers registering no more than 85?

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh, come on. The hon. member wants to go faster than that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I rather think that is possible, but let me find out the details of the questions the hon. member asked me. I will respond later on.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex South.

POSSIBLE AID FOR GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

In relation to his announcements concerning capital grants for plumbing equipment and electrical wiring, does this capital grants programme extend to the greenhouse industry and, more particularly, to the segment of that industry that is growing flowers? If so, does the five per cent retail sales tax figure in the computation of the total grant?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I will take the question as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cochrane South.

VENEREAL DISEASE CONTROL

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): I have a question of the Minister of Health. What action is The Department of Health taking to cope with the ever-increasing epidemic of venereal disease in the province?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: There has been a programme announced. The guts of the programme, I suppose, is firstly, in an educational way, to impress upon doctors and the medical profession generally to report with greater regularity, despite the fact that they are required to report as a matter of law. An educational programme is being developed for young people in particular. We are opening up more clinics.

Those are three particular parts and the hon. member will notice the publicity and educational impact of this as soon as we are ready to start the programme from that point of view.

Mr. Ferrier: A supplementary question: Is the programme still under preparation or is it actually in effect in the province now—the recommendations of the task force that were tabled a year ago?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The establishment of the clinics is proceeding from a practical point of view. The steps to try to improve the reporting system is in tow or under way. As far as I know, the only significant part of the programme that has yet to be developed is, of course, the public relations and educational side.

Mr. Ferrier: A further supplementary: Does the minister think, as this problem seems to be getting worse, that maybe some more drastic measures may be necessary?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: We shall have to try to measure the effects of this particular programme. All I can say is that my recollection is that each of the recommendations made by the task force has either been set in motion from a practical point of view or has been accepted for further action. At this moment I do not think we can do more than that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

GRANTS FOR RETARDED STUDENTS

Mr. T. Reid: I have a question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by the York County Board of Education that students in schools for the trainable retarded cost twice as much to educate as students in secondary schools, will the minister explain why school boards receive the same grants per student for these two very different categories of students?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think in ascertaining the operational costs, which are the subject matter of the ceiling, various factors are taken into account with respect to the averaging and I would be very glad to get those calculations for the hon. member. I have not got them here.

Certainly, in the discussions that we are now having about the ceiling and in the general dialogue going on, there have been many boards which have drawn attention to the need for the recognition of this as one of the weighting factors. Certainly, as far as subsequent years are concerned, I am prepared to listen to any representation that boards or teachers or anyone interested in education might want to make with respect to those factors that would influence the overall cost. But at the moment these costs, and the whole field of special education, are reflected in the averaging of the per pupil determination.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the York County Board of Education on March 25, 1971, implied that it is going to have to cut back on its programmes for the educable retarded children because of the ceilings imposed by the minister's predecessor?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I have not read the account to which reference is made, and it would be unfortunate if that type of programme was in fact cut back.

I think, though, while I am on my feet, I must say that the decisions with respect to what will constitute the educational programme in any jurisdiction will remain the decisions of the local school boards within their budgets. This is the sort of decision which local school boards, accountable as they are to the elected in their area, will have to make. I might share my concern with respect to the elimination or the curtailment of this programme or that programme, but the decision ultimately will have to be made by the local school board.

Mr. T. Reid: A final supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of what the minister has said, could he explain why there is a special ceiling for elementary school education and another ceiling for the secondary school education? How can he explain local autonomy if he imposes that type of restraint?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Really, Mr. Speaker. In arriving at these particular guidelines or ceilings, one has to take into account the facts and information as to what the cost of educating pupils in the two levels was.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS SUPERVISION

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. Can the minister indicate what positive steps are being taken to improve the supervision available in elementary schools in order to cut down on drug abuse and the sale of drugs to small children by older children?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am unable to give any particular information insofar as any one school board is concerned. This is a matter of supervision which is under the jurisdiction of principals and those who are appointed by school boards in the area. Unless there is some specific area on which the member wants this information—if he does have a specific area and he would like to have some information—I would be only too glad to get it for the hon. member. I cannot, in any general answer, respond to that question.

Mr. Deans: I have a supplementary question. Might I ask the minister whether he believes that the recent announcements of cutbacks in educational spending will result in better supervision of the children and thereby a reduction in the number of children suffering from drug abuse?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am not in the business of answering hypothetical questions. It is difficult enough to answer the factual ones.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale.

REGULATIONS ON HEARING AIDS

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health, if I may interrupt that conversation over there. Does the minister intend to bring out regulations to license the distribution of hearing aids?

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: The question of licensing the distribution of hearing aids is one which is being dealt with by the ministry of Financial and Commercial Affairs and by the federal Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs; the federal government looking at it from the health point of view and the adequacy of the instrument, and the province, of course, looking at it from the point of view of sales techniques and honest dealing.

It has not, as I recall, been required to be a problem of this Department of Health.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary question, is the minister aware that he is now the fourth minister in the last six years on that side of the House who has kicked this question around between two departments? Check with the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Dymond) to see if I am not right.

Mr. Speaker: Is that a supplementary question?

Mr. Trotter: He insisted it went in The Department of Health and not in The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs.

Mr. Speaker: Question?

Mr. Trotter: Well they are just playing volleyball with that question.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: May I reply to that, Mr. Speaker? There is no volleyball at all.

Mr. Trotter: There sure is. I keep asking the same question.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence: Well you can have the same answer—he could have had it six months or a year ago—and the answer is that this is a live matter of policy between The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs and Mr. Basford's department, and they are the people who are working on it.

Mr. Speaker: This ends the question-period time.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mrs. Pritchard (Hamilton West), from the select committee appointed to prepare the lists of members to compose the standing committees of the House, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee recommends that the lists of standing committees ordered by the House be composed as follows:

1. PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS: Messrs. Bernier, Bukator, Demers, Dunlop, Edighoffer, Evans, Farquhar, Gilbertson, Gisborn, Gomme, Hodgson (York North), Jessiman, Johnston (St. Catharines), Kennedy, Meen, Peacock, Ruston, Simonett, Stokes—19.

2. LEGAL ADMINISTRATION: Messrs. Belanger, Boyer, Deans, De Monte, Good, Haskett, Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton), Lawlor, Morningstar, Pilkey, Price, Mrs. Pritchard, Randall, Reilly, Rowntree, Singer, Smith (Simcoe East), Sopha, Winkler—19.

3. HUMAN RESOURCES: Messrs. Ben, Braithwaite, Connell, Downer, Dymond, Ferrier, Johnston (Parry Sound), Morin, Morrow, Pitman, Potter, Reid (Scarborough East), Mrs. Renwick (Scarborough Centre), Reuter, Rowe, Smith (Hamilton Mountain), Trotter, Ville-neuve, Yaremko—19.

4. NATURAL AND PHYSICAL RESOURCES: Messrs. Allan, Bolton, Burr, Carruthers, Gaunt, Hamilton, Henderson, Innes, Johnston (Carleton), Martel, McNeil, Newman (Ontario South), Reid (Rainy River), Rollins, Root, Smith (Nipissing), Snow, Whitney, Yakabuski—19.

5. ESTIMATES: Messrs. Brown, Davison, Evans, Gilbertson, Haggerty, Hamilton, Henderson, Hodgson (York North), Jackson, Jessiman, Johnston (Carleton), Newman (Windsor-Walkerville), Newman (Ontario South), Sargent, Smith (Simcoe East), Smith (Hamilton Mountain), Spence, Villeneuve, Yakabuski—19.

6. PUBLIC ACCOUNTS: Messrs. Allan, Breithaupt, Bullbrook, Deacon, Demers, Haskett, Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton), Johnston (Parry Sound), MacDonald, Makarchuk, Deans, Moringstar, Reilly, Simonett—14.

7. REGULATIONS: Messrs. Belanger, Boyer, Downer, Dymond, Kennedy, MacKenzie, Morin, Paterson, Price, Mrs. Pritchard, Randall, Renwick (Riverdale), Worton, Young—14.

The quorum of the said committees 1 to 5, and of the private bills committee, to be seven in each case. The quorum of committees 6 and 7 to be five in each case. Substitutions to be permitted in committees 1 to 5 only when considering estimates. Such substitutions to be announced to the chairman by substitute members at the opening of the meeting.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, I think, before adopting the motion, one or two remarks should be made respecting the composition of the committees. Two days ago we discussed the restructuring and the reassignment of tasks to the committee. I think that we should note, before adopting the report, that for the first time perhaps in the memory of most members of the House, we will find cabinet ministers, Minister without Portfolio in each case, taking attendance and taking participation in the standing committees of this House.

I think that is worth pointing out, Mr. Speaker, because it means, obviously—quite clearly, that the government has extended itself considerably in order to maintain its predominance of membership of the committees—in the case of the general committees at 12, and in the case of the smaller specialist committees at nine members for the government party. In order to provide members for each of the 12 places on the major committees, the government has had to draw on the membership of the cabinet, because it does not have sufficient strength outside the cabinet—

Mr. Nixon: It is getting so big.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Of course, they have to.

Mr. Peacock: —to fill all those places.

Mr. MacDonald: They do not have 48 places outside the cabinet.

Mr. Lewis: What about the vice-chairman of the ONR?

Mr. Peacock: There are four major committees and there are 12 places on each for the government members, a total of 48. There are how many members in the cabinet—24 now; 26? In any event, there are insufficient private members on the government side to fill all the committee places, so we find ourselves with executive members in this House taking part in the business of the standing committees.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The members need their experience and expertise.

Mr. Peacock: There is nothing, Mr. Speaker, we are advised by the Clerk of the House, in the precedents of this House to preclude such membership on the part of the cabinet, but I say it is against the traditions of the House. It is against modern parliamentary practice that the executive take part in the work of the committees of the House. The committees of the House are to relieve the House of duties that it can otherwise not perform effectively—

Mr. Singer: The member is making up his own rules.

Mr. Peacock —but beyond that, Mr. Speaker, the committees of the House are to achieve an independence of the executive which cannot be achieved in the House. That is one of the purposes of the standing committees, as I see it, and I believe it is found, and expressed by the authorities, in modern parliamentary practice.

Mr. Singer: Name one; name one authority!

Mr. Peacock: The Prime Minister spoke in reference to the Speech from the Throne of the importance of new countervailing forces to the growing executive authority. Now here we have anything but the enlargement of independence of the House by the presence of members of the executive council of the Province of Ontario on those same standing committees.

Mr. Speaker, it points up even more forcefully, the necessity for bringing to the support of the standing committees of the House every resource which can reasonably be brought to their support, in terms of full Hansard reporting of the proceedings of the committees, in terms of expert staffing of the committees, both from the office of the Clerk of the House and from other branches of government, depending on the work that is referred to the various standing committees by the House.

I hope that—I guess by this point hope is not something that should be expressed, because we do not see the Prime Minister fulfilling the promise of the Throne Speech in this regard at least—the House will be given somewhat greater means to cope with the growing executive authority of the government. But it would have been expected that where ministers of the Crown are to take part in the proceedings of the standing committees then those same standing committees receive increasing support to carry out their own investigative functions, to carry out a more adequate examination of legislation and estimates that are referred to them by the House. This can be done only if the Prime Minister, to begin with, accepts the recommendations of last session's standing committee on public accounts for the provision of full staff and Hansard proceedings.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not want to prolong this discussion but I do take exception to the suggestions from the member opposite as they relate to the decision to have members of the cabinet on the standing committees. I have not been a member that long in this Legislature, but my memory does go back a period of time, and there have been cabinet ministers on standing committees of this House. There is no question about this whatsoever. I would challenge the hon. member to establish a precedent or a rule that precluded this.

What disappoints me, Mr. Speaker, is that I am making a very real effort, as is this government, to give some meaning to the standing-committee work. The fact that we have Ministers without Portfolio to participate in and serve on these committees, Mr. Speaker, I think is a very clear indication that we intend to do so. The negative attitude expressed by the hon. member really does not give me much encouragement as to his party's desire to make these committees meaningful too.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I had one point to raise, briefly, in this debate. Now I have two.

The hon. member for Windsor West is correct when he states that traditionally in British parliamentary experience, cabinets have not been involved, except on the rarest of occasions, in committee work. The fact that on that side of the House there was such a reaction when he made the statement is just indicative of the fact that we in the province of Ontario, in keeping with our rather basic violation of some of the traditions of British parliamentary experience—which we have been cleaning up, I would concede, in the last few months—did not have cabinet ministers on our committees. The Prime Minister presents his case in terms that this is evidence of his seriousness in making the committees work. Time alone will indicate whether or not the government is really more meaningfully serious in terms of making the committees work.

But the Prime Minister himself will have to recognize that in making that assertion he is coming in conflict with another very important principle in the operation of the committees, namely that the committees should help to provide a balance to the Legislature and the back-benchers as opposed to the growing power of the executive. You simply cannot in a clean-cut way, do something in that direction if you are going to have cabinet ministers on the committees. I am not going to argue that point any further. This is experimental and we shall find out.

The reason I want to tie it in with my second point is that I am increasingly mystified as to why the government, when they chose to implement last year's recommendations of the standing committee in the public accounts for changes in the committee procedure, did so almost completely except in one instance. The one instance is that they decided they were not going to accept the proposition of the right of substitution in committees 1, 2, 3 and 4, the four omnibus committees. We have all agreed that there will be a right of substitution in the estimates committee; that was the practice we developed in our experimentations over the last two or three years.

I repeat—the standing committee last year suggested that this should be true of the four major committees. The government obviously somewhere at some point dug its heels in and said no, there will be no rights of substitution. In other words, the 48 members on the government side, including some members of the cabinet, are divided into groups of 12, no one of which can exchange with each other by way of substitution in those four main committees.

Obviously we made no headway with the steamroller majority of the government on the striking committee, because the best that they could come up with from the hon. member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) is, "This is experimental; let us see how it works." Well, that is the put-on we always have to deal with. It is the smart Irish way of trying to avoid something being considered and accepted now, because they know if we do not get it accepted now the likelihood is that it might not get accepted for five or 10 years. So, it is like a six-month hoist. It is hoisted into perpetuity.

However, the point I want to make with the Prime Minister is this: "Why is the government intent on denying the right of substitution? The counter argument we got—and I can see the partial validity of this—is that it is difficult for the government to have enough members at each committee. When the committees were big and there were 17 of them, the members would have to be in many committees and you might, in some committee where some hot and controversial and potentially embarrassing issue was coming up, find yourself short-handed. Therefore, you want to try to avoid that.

One argument was put by a government member on the striking committee that, "We want to make certain that our members are at each committee," presumably to cope with that problem they have had in the past—but their logic is in reverse. If you have the right to substitution then it means that every member has an obligation to be there or, if he cannot be there, to get somebody else in his stead; or alternatively, if somebody is particularly anxious to go to any given committee because of the topic that may be there at any given meeting of that committee, he can go to a member on the committee and say, "Look, I would like to be there today. Have you any particular urgent desire why you want to be there today, and if not can I take your place?" If that flexibility is granted, the likelihood is that you are going to have greater attendance, rather than lesser attendance. So it seems to me that the logic of your argument is in reverse.

My fear, I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister, is that we came up with a proposal which had flexibility and in denying the right to substitution in these four main committees we are creating something of a straitjacket. I predict that the government is the party that is going to suffer by this, because—to the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Winkler) who has had to cope with the problems of whip in other jurisdictions as well as here, I entreat him to heed me—if you have got at any given committee meeting a topic that is not particularly attractive or interesting to a number of members, on the government side or elsewhere, they are going to stay away. They will sleep in at the Royal York; they will do business elsewhere; they will not be here. If you have the right to substitution, if they do not want to be there because they do not like that topic, then get somebody else to be there, conceivably because he does like that topic and he does want to be there.

So you are imposing unnecessary inflexibility which you are ultimately going to be the victim of more than anybody else.

I do not know whether at this stage it is possible for us to make a plea from this side of the House that the Prime Minister should think about this and perhaps even indulge in that authoritarian procedure of overruling his own majority on the striking committee. Maybe if he talked with them they would recognize the wisdom of his remarks, if not now then at some relatively early date.

Mr. Martel: No, now! Now!

Mr. MacDonald: I know the Prime Minister is very cautious. He likes to contemplate these things. He likes to sit on the top of the fence for a long time before he drops off.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I never drop off.

Mr. MacDonald: So I am not going to break his normal pattern of approach, preferably today but if not today—and I am very serious about this, because he is going to be the victim of the straitjacket he is creating more than anybody else, and in the process he is going to inhibit the development of the most effective kind of committee procedure; which, let me assure the Prime Minister, we in this party want.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Forty-four votes nearly dropping off there!

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): I am very much concerned with what has been discussed here today. I would like to point out that British committees usually are select committees, and in fact, are not the same as our standing committees in concept, because British committees are usually established for a purpose, an individual purpose. However, that is only one point.

There was one matter which was not in this committee report that was referred to it, as I understand, by this House; therefore, I feel perhaps this committee should be re-established for another sitting to consider it, and that is the all-day Wednesday meetings to be held for committee work. It was not in the report. I think it is a good suggestion.

The other thing is that I do not see any problem of exchange of membership for the purpose of consideration of a matter in which a member in a particular riding is interested. I think it is a distinct advantage to the members of this House to be able to sit on a committee on an interest that has an effect on his individual riding, rather than sitting in another committee on a matter that does not pertain to his riding.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member is in favour of flexibility then.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: So I do argue with the member on that—I do argue for flexibility in this instance. I think it is perfectly valid and should be considered.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not to prolong it further—I think I indicated at the time the motion was introduced for the establishment of the four committees that it was my intention—and I have to phrase this very carefully so the Leader of the Opposition does not think I am imposing my own thoughts upon him or the committee—that I would make a motion to refer to the procedural affairs committee a question from this House as to the feasibility or practicability of sitting all day Wednesdays for committee hearings. It is my intention to do this tomorrow so that the committee on procedural affairs can report back to the House very shortly and we can then determine whether this will be the procedure for the balance of the session.

As to the observations from the member for York South, I am one of those who believes in flexibility. I have no personal problem with this type of approach. However, I am also very concerned about the matters of principle related herein, and that is, there should be some continuity as it relates to personnel if the committees are to have a meaningful role in the activities of this House.

I find it just a bit contradictory in my mind, listening to the observations he has made here today and over the past three or four years, as to the need for committees—and it must be more than the committees, it has to relate to the membership of the committees, to become involved in some of these situations if matters of substitution are sort of automatic.

I am quite prepared, Mr. Speaker, to re-assess this after a period of time if it is not working, because I want it to work. But I think there is very great merit in establishing these committees without the right of substitution so the members will have a continuing interest in those subjects that are relevant.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Prime Minister think he will get greater continuity by having the people absent rather than having somebody there?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, of course, our members will attend.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh? Those words we want recorded.

Mr. Nixon: As this confrontation moves to the point where we are going to have little men with black pencils in all committees, let me point out to you, sir, that the virtues of continuity lie not within the large boundaries of these new committees but in the subjects that they would discuss, and it seems to me—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Nixon: All right! —in the subjects that would be discussed. I believe that the Prime Minister is making an error when he does not say that his natural flexibility would lead him to permit this sort of substitution. We have had this argument many times before and I feel that they have moved into this inflexible position more by mistake than anything else.

Surely it would be the intention of the same people to attend the committee when the broad field of education, for example, is being discussed. We have certainly said on this side that, over a period of years—over the period of Parliament—people with a special interest in education would become substantially expert in this if they availed themselves of proper committee opportunities, which have never been available up until now. They have not been for the last eight or 10 years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where are the experts?

Mr. Nixon: Well, all right, Mr. Speaker. For the Premier simply to say he is going to solve it by insisting that his members attend and in fact do not sleep in, as the member for York South has implied that they might—and that they have—surely is not the best answer.

There is an opportunity now for the Premier, with his well-known flexibility and well-known good humour, perhaps to try the flexible approach before trying the rigid approach. I think surely this would be the approach that he normally would take if he had not got into some difficulties that were made for him by others.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, a point of clarification: As I understand it, in the estimates committee substitution will be permitted in accordance with the procedures which were established before. I then take it, following the same logic, that, for example if the estimates of The Department of Health are before the human resources committee, there would be substitution within that committee. But if, instead of the estimates of The Department of Health being before the human resources committee, there is a bill relating to a health matter—a bill introduced by the Minister of Health, or a commission, responsible or reported to this House by the Minister of Health—substitution would not be permitted.

If that understanding is correct, surely it makes it quite ridiculous to suggest that in the area of the estimates only, substitution be allowed in a human resources committee, but that when bills and other matters of equal importance and concern are before that committee, that no substitution be allowed. That is my understanding of what the ridiculous nature of the prohibition against substitution is going to result in so far as we in this party are concerned in participating in those standing committees.

On the point that my colleague the member for Windsor West made, I think it is a strange corruption of the usages and customs of the House to suggest that what was an exception in times past about a member of the executive sitting on a standing committee, and which is the very exception which in ordinary English language is often used to prove the rule, that suddenly the exception becomes the rule.

I suggest that there is very real consideration, Mr. Speaker. I would ask that you take under advisement this question about whether or not, in the history of this Legislature, from time of its inception, on what occasions cabinet ministers or members of the executive council sat on the standing committees as members of the standing committee, and whether or not that was not the exception that proved the rule that in normal cases this did not occur, rather than to have the conclusion arrived at that the exception now becomes the rule. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that you take that matter under advisement.

Mr. Speaker: Any further discussion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The second order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment of the motion that this House express its grave concern over the serious unemployment prevailing in Ontario and throughout Canada.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, let me at the outset, in adding my humble views to the debate which is taking place on the serious unemployment situation which we have, say that it is my view that the unemployment situation in Canada is really the worst national disaster we have had since the war.

In my view it is the most callously designed measure ever undertaken by any government as a solution to any problem. I recall the experiences of many of us—and I am sure there are others in this House—during the Depression, in which many of us were practically demoralized for many years, riding the rods and sleeping in parks and carrying on for four, five and six years without any hope at all of carrying on any kind of fruitful life.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I had to delay my wedding plans for over five years, although I suppose if I was living in today's morass I would not have delayed them.

Mr. Speaker, no one who had experienced those things during the Depression could ever tolerate the kind of a solution—so-called solution, as I say—to any problem which the federal government has inflicted upon Canada to fight inflation.

The federal government is really saying to all of the people of Canada: "In order that your dollar will buy more, we will put you out of work so that you will not have a dollar." That is really what they are saying and what they have been doing. Any action, Mr. Speaker, in my view, would have been better than the action which they have taken.

It is also the reason, Mr. Speaker, why we have to move carefully on the question of economic nationalism. It is all right, Mr. Speaker, for people in high places, who are employed, to feel that it is all right to carry out such a programme at the expense of hundreds and thousands who are unemployed.

I would think, Mr. Speaker, that anyone who seriously reviews the situation as it exists today and really knows what is going on in the ranks of the unemployed, considers that the so-called solution regarding anti-inflationary measures is cruel and unforgivable and that any such solution which is put into effect for fear of losing control of our economy would be just as bad.

We are fighting inflation today at the cost of some 700,000 unemployed and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that we do not want to fight for what is called today economic nationalism at the expense of some two million unemployed.

Our job is to keep people working while carrying out a policy of encouraging Canadians to invest in our economy. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I urge all to take care and move carefully in the matter of the so-called economic nationalism so that we do not arrive at the same solution as the federal government in respect of its anti-inflationary policy. We must keep an eye on our labour force. We must keep them employed, as I say, while devising plans for incentives to Canadians to invest in their own economy, which, Mr. Speaker, is what this government is going to do so far as it is in our power to do so.

In addition, of course, and this I think has been mentioned by others, the problems created are left largely to the provinces and the municipalities to struggle with. Mr. Speaker, my department here in Ontario is left with the dilemma resulting from federal policies of discouragement of foreign and domestic investment greatly needed to provide new employment opportunities.

Policies on the textile, footwear, rubber and chemical industries; decisions on tariff and quota protections to existing Canadian industry; and indeed the whole issue of taxation have provided an air of uncertainty in the minds of many manufacturers. Consequently, my staff is aware in its day-to-day contacts with businessmen, of investment deferrals, both foreign and domestic, amounting to over $200 million during the past year—and we have documentation for this, Mr. Speaker if any member wishes me to produce it. This expansion could have provided for thousands of new employment opportunities.

Another matter is the deferral, in 1969, of the capital cost allowance on commercial buildings, forced upon Ontario by federal action. Although construction continued strong in Ontario, designating the province as one of the areas for capital cost deferral has tended to delay projects which otherwise would have provided many further construction jobs at a time when unemployment in the province is high.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): How about the provincial sales tax?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We also face the problem of the dissipation of the energies of my department in seeking solutions to layoffs and plant closings when they could be otherwise occupied in promoting new industrial development. The trade and industry division of my department is being forced to spend more and more of its time on problems concerned with plant phase-outs and layoffs.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): By the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Indeed, there are many members present who come to me almost daily and ask my department to do what we can in order to help out a situation in their own area in respect of phase-outs, layoffs and so on. Many of these are related to the floating dollar, new imports—

Mr. Peacock: We do not ask much of the minister.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): We certainly do not ask The Department of Labour to do anything.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —as a result of freer trade and lower tariffs, and the emergence of competition from low labour-cost countries.

The result is that my staff spends much effort studying and reporting on situations over which we as a province have very little, if any, control. This detracts seriously from time that could be given to more constructive efforts in improving technology, introducing new products for import replacement and promoting new industries which would provide employment for Ontario.

The exchange rate on the Canadian dollar is also, of course, impeding exports. The current exchange rate of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar is providing a marked negative effect on many Ontario manufacturers engaged in export sales. In particular, our automotive parts manufacturers and our wood-using industries have been severely pinched by the rising value of the Canadian dollar. As members know, the automotive business is one of the most highly competitive markets in the world and a few percentage points often make all the difference in winning or losing a contract.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): The minister can help them by eliminating that production machinery tax.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This also applies to wood industries, which particularly affect northern Ontario.

Since a great number of jobs in Ontario are dependent upon these export markets, we strongly urge the federal government to peg the dollar at a point which would provide our exporters with a more realistic competitive base on which to maintain high levels of production.

We urge the removal of the three per cent federal income tax surcharge. The three per cent tax surcharge was introduced as a temporary measure, not a permanent one. We feel it should be abandoned to meet today's needs and permit efficient growth in employment and business.

In view of our urgent need to create employment and to sustain competitive business, we favour strongly the immediate rescinding of the three per cent federal income tax surcharge on individuals and corporations.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): What about production machinery?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Retained earnings are a major source of capital investment in business and are usually the cheapest source of funds to expand business and create employment. They are less expensive than external financing and thus do not contribute to inflation. Our businesses require reinvestment to maintain and create employment in an efficient manner, and punitive taxation inhibits this reinvestment and therefore employment.

A three per cent increase in income to our employed citizens would stimulate domestic market demand and create a demand for workers to meet the needs of expanded markets. It would also provide Canadians with funds to invest in Canada and its future and accelerate our growth.

The loss of the three per cent tax surcharge revenue could be compensated for by increased expansion of revenues from the remaining normal income taxes.

The federal regional economic expansion programmes have done little for Ontario. Some parts of the province are as underdeveloped as some parts of the rest of Canada which are actually receiving this programme's support. On the other hand, we know that incentives are provided to other parts of Canada which are more developed than many locations in Ontario which do not fall within the present federal regional economic expansion programme.

It is desirable to encourage Canadian control of its own economy, but such a policy must be carried out over a period of time, having regard for its effect on the well-being of our people.

To resist or discourage foreign investment solely to satisfy our national pride when there are some 700,000 Canadians out of work—including 200,000 in Ontario—surely would be at the very least, most unwise. Under ordinary circumstances, in Ontario alone we must create at least 100,000 new jobs annually.

It is true and desirable that a significant proportion of our people are concerned with the problem of control of our industry and commerce—and so they should be—and so is this government. As I stated in an interview in The Globe and Mail of March 17, I prefer the positive approach; that is, the encouragement of Canadian ownership rather than the discouragement of non-Canadians from investing in this country.

A single province, of course, could not on its own restrict foreign investment. That would simply lead to that province losing to other provinces, funds urgently needed for its economic health.

Mr. Speaker, my department will continue to make every effort to maintain and foster a favourable business climate in spite of the economic difficulties in which this country finds itself today. Indeed, we are stepping up our programmes to meet the pressures that face us. We will do all we can so that much-needed new industrial development will not be discouraged at a time when employment is so necessary.

As the year progresses, I am optimistic that the economy will improve and many of the new capital projects which have been delayed will take place. Recent surveys have indicated a pickup in capital investment programmes as 1971 progresses. In fact, new investment expenditures for the Province of Ontario are expected to be higher than the Canadian average. Total private and public investment in the province of Ontario is expected to advance by nine per cent this year over 1970. All of this will undoubtedly create a more optimistic and buoyant economy and contribute significantly to the reduction of our excessively high levels of unemployment at this time.

Programmes of my department that we will be pursuing in an effort to provide the right business climate for the creation of new jobs are:

(a) Stepped up assistance to manufacturers wishing to establish new plants, expand existing facilities and enter joint-venture and licensing arrangements;

(b) Increased assistance to manufacturers to sell abroad in other markets of the world;

(c) Further assistance to manufacturers in expanding product lines through product prospecting missions and industrial technology development missions;

(d) Expand services to manufacturers exploring overseas markets including assistance in entering international trade fairs, establishing new plants and licences abroad, the promoting of Ontario engineering services abroad, and the provision of export forums and seminars;

(e) Exploring potential for adding to our EEDEE award programmes which encourage the creation of advanced techniques and design of Ontario products;

(f) Provisional additional support for programmes by our 14 existing offices located in prime markets abroad, and exploring the potential for additional offices in untapped markets of other countries;

(g) Broaden the scope of our business opportunity mission programme to accommodate new investment interests in other parts of the world.

Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Development Corporation's role will be broadened to accelerate investment in new and existing industry and thus create additional job opportunities right here in Ontario. Performance and repayable loans already approved have provided many thousands of jobs in our slow-growth areas and this number will be substantially increased.

These ODC performance and repayable loans have spurred additional private-sector investment in Ontario's industries amounting to over $100 million in the last two years.

These direct stimulants to employment and investment will be further enhanced through measures announced in the Speech from the Throne. A new venture-capital fund for Canadian-owned businesses will be set up to encourage the development of companies with exceptional growth potential which cannot be serviced through normal financial channels. This assistance will also be provided the companies with good export potential and for those Canadian companies wishing to participate in joint ventures.

Canadian small businesses will be given greater opportunities to expand and provide additional employment through an enlarged programme of aid, which will make loans available for this purpose in all parts of the province.

Advisory services for small businesses will also be expanded to provide technical, financial and managerial advice with a view to improving their performance. With a view to increasing employment in our tourist industry, I announced a few days ago in the House financial assistance to upgrade the facilities of our tourist resorts and attractions.

As a further positive indication of this government's concern to encourage Canadian-owned businesses without discouraging foreign investment, the Equalization of Industrial Opportunity programme will be amended. The amendments will result in greater incentives being available for Canadian companies than for others.

The government will be making available the moneys required to carry out this enlarged programme of investment and creation of direct job opportunities.

Ontario Place, which will open on May 22, is currently employing directly in construction over 600 men on the job, as well as many hundreds in manufacturing establishments preparing material. These men are drawn from all occupational groups—labourers, carpenters, steelworkers, cooks, architects, draftsmen, film producers, to name just a few.

When Ontario Place opens, approximately 800 students will be employed by the government and Ontario Place concessionaires. These students were recruited from all parts of Ontario, and I believe that when hon. members see this staff they will be very proud of it. In addition, our surveys indicate that Ontario Place will be extremely well attended and this should help business and thus employment at hotels, motels and restaurants.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, one of the major programmes of the government that will have an effect on unemployment will be the housing construction programme.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So long as the opposition keeps trying to denigrate it we will keep repeating it because it is such a positive approach.

Mr. J. Renwick: What is the variation on the theme today?

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Has the minister no honour, no personal shame?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, that is why I am on my feet. I have personal honour.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, before dealing with it I would like to comment on some observations made in yesterday's debate and question period.

During the course of yesterday's debate, it was suggested that OHC did not expend all the moneys which were budgeted for its use. I am not too sure—I think the hon. member for Scarborough West made this point.

I am advised that in no year did the Ontario Housing Corporation not take advantage of every dollar available to it except in those years when, because of federal action, money was frozen in the middle of programmes.

Mr. Lewis: This government budgeted it, and it should have spent it independently of federal money.

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): That is absurd!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that shows the ignorance of the hon. member for Scarborough West in respect of how housing plans are carried out in this province and in every province.

Mr. Lewis: We voted the money.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would permit me to ask a question? The public accounts, as shown for March 31, 1970, show that about $6.5 million was left unexpended from our own funds voted for in this House for Ontario Housing Corporation. Then for student housing we voted over $7.5 million—

Mr. Peacock: Sixteen million dollars!

Mr. Trotter: I am sorry—$16 million.

Mr. Peacock: A total of $16 million.

Mr. Trotter: No, a total of $6.5 million unexpended for Ontario Housing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I get the point.

Mr. Trotter: And for the students we voted over $7.5 million, of which almost $5 million was not spent, and this is our own money we voted.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I get the point, and Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trotter: Now do not tell us—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now just a moment. Mr. Speaker, I stand to be corrected on this, but I would say this—

Mr. Trotter: Yes, corrected again.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now just a moment.

Mr. Trotter: The minister is just trying to give us a snow job.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You make plans to invest X billions of dollars. You make it in conjunction with CHMC—

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, you do, and you cannot stop or start these plans overnight. These plans are made, and if the federal government does not carry out its portion, you are left with some money on that particular occasion. Of course you are!

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: An example of what I am talking about, Mr. Speaker, happened during the 1968-1969 Hellyer task force on housing. During all that period of time all loan commitments for social housing were frozen across Canada by federal action. Now you just do not automatically, as of tomorrow, get all your plans together, because the programme is frozen. I mean without having much experience in this department it is obvious to me you cannot all of a sudden pull in all your plans and all the potential builders, and as of two or three weeks put a programme into effect.

Mr. Lewis: The government had $56 million. You choose your priorities and you build.

Mr. Trotter: Of course.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am also advised, Mr. Speaker, that when in the 1968-1969 budget year CMHC did not allocate funds to individual provinces, but offered them on a first come, first served basis, Ontario used 98 per cent of all federal funds available for family and senior-citizen housing in the calendar year 1967—

Mr. Deans: That left $4.6 million of the government's own money.

Mr. J. Renwick: That was an election year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and 93 per cent in the calendar year 1968. So much for the fact that the government did not use the money that was available.

Mr. Lewis: That was a demolition job!

Mr. Peacock: What about last year?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the hon. member—as a matter of fact, it was the hon. member for Scarborough West who indicated that no plans were available to initiate the $100 million guaranteed mortgage loan programme which we announced. He said we had no plans to put into effect.

Mr. Lewis: I did not say that as a matter of fact.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the hon. member will find that is what Hansard recorded.

Mr. Lewis: I am just looking at the Hansard—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am informed that already some 4,550 units, representing $84 million, are in the hands of banks for consideration. Additionally, some 3,000 units, representing another $65 million, are being processed by the Ontario Housing Corporation. These units were processed and approved by the OHC in preparation and anticipation of the commitments by the banks which we just concluded.

Mr. Trotter: What is the interest rate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The interest rate, if I recall, is the interest rate usually charged under NHA; I think it is somewhere around 8.75 to nine per cent. Now do not hold me to one half a per cent; I think that is what it generally is.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Yesterday he said he would give us the figures for the amount actually expended in 1970-1971. Before he moves on, can he give the House those figures?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will give the member that before I am through, because I have these figures.

The hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) yesterday chided the government for not building more units, yet in mid-February in the Scarborough Mirror he is quoted as protesting the fact that OHC was planning to build some projects in his riding. He suggested a family in need of rental assistance should be placed in existing housing, presumably through the OHC rent certificate programme.

What the hon. member said yesterday, is in fact a contradiction of what he said in February. Further, his suggestion that OHC can meet Metro's public housing needs without erecting buildings, it must be obvious to everyone, is naive.

Mr. Peacock: On a point of order, I believe the minister may not be fully reporting the reason for the objection by the member for Scarborough East. Was the reason for the objection by the hon. member for Scarborough East the same reason for the objection in my own community—the unconscionable density of the project proposed for that borough?

Mr. Lewis: He called it a highrise ghetto, and he retracted. But at least the minister should have given the full story.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The information that I gathered was for the purpose of answering the question he raised yesterday.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Peacock: Do not ram those rabbit warrens—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Is the hon. member telling me that the hon. member for Scarborough East did not suggest that the families in need of rental assistance should be placed in existing housing? Am I wrong in that?

Mr. Peacock: I did not quarrel with that. By the way, how is the rental supplement programme doing?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One thing at a time.

Mr. Lewis: Has the department rented a house yet? In the last three years? That was a Macaulay programme in 1962.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, to deal with the housing programme itself, this programme is a dynamic one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: It gets more dynamic with every successive announcement.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are out building houses right now and finding new sites.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is a dynamic one in spite of the fact that the opposition is attempting to downgrade it. As I have stated on a number of occasions, getting into the details of the figures can be very confusing.

Mr. Lewis: The minister should know.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And the hon. member should know, because I am going to show him where he has been confused. As a result of this, there have been a lot of incorrect conclusions arrived at, including the conclusions arrived at by the hon. member for Scarborough West.

Mr. Trotter: Is the member wrong again?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me try again to clarify.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is getting a little repititious.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): So is Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: What is that about Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First the suggestion is that the government should not have presented this programme including the number of proposed starts, but only that in excess of what was accomplished last year. That is utterly absurd!

Mr. Lewis: Oh no!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is to say that if a record number of housing units were built last year, and if we had just proposed a plan which would equal it, that in itself would not be a tremendous accomplishment, which it would have been.

Mr. Lewis: Get another speech writer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course it would be a tremendous accomplishment; and of course the government is going to tell the people that we intend not only to carry out that record housing construction programme, but in fact intend to exceed it considerably.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): The federal government has a four-year policy.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We of course, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Trotter: Does the minister not wish he were back at Correctional Services?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have a target for producing a potential of 30,000 units a year.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is potential.

Mr. Lewis: The minister has a target for producing a potential.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is nothing wrong with that, even for the hon. member who has a great ability to glue phrases together. If he thinks about it, that does make some sense.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: For example, if you put up a building, somebody has to furnish the building. Now if they do not furnish the building your plans were wrong, but the potential was there, was it not?

Mr. J. Renwick: If nothing happens, it is not the government's fault.

Mr. Lewis: The minister is warning us.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Remember Tommy Douglas! One and one half houses a month for 17 years.

Mr. Lewis: If we do not build, we all bow before the potential.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have this target and we have a target of actual physical starts of 20,000 units in this calendar year. The 20,000 units alone would be a 25-per cent increase over last year—a tremendous accomplishment, if we can do it. Certainly, Mr.

Speaker, it is advisable to set our target high so that the whole machinery of government and all those involved in the programme will have an optimistic target to shoot at. Surely, it is better to plan for 30,000 and reach 28,000 than it is to plan for 18,000 and reach 16,000.

Of course the opposition would like us to present a Throne Speech, I suppose somewhat along the following lines: "Your government plans to inject $500 million into the economy, but remember this is not all our money, so take it easy. As a matter of fact, a small portion of it might turn out to be ours."

Mr. Lewis: That is not a bad thought.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "And, while we are planning on driving for 30,000 units, remember this would only be 14,000 over last year."

An hon. member: Tell us the truth.

Mr. J. Renwick: Tell it the way it is.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: "And remember we must not talk about the potential of the employment of 132,000 people, because the whole business might not work out that way and maybe only 60,000 will be employed."

In other words, the opposition would have us put a programme before the people and put every possible negative aspect in it.

Mr. Randall: They have all things negative over there. They are all negative.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, when this government proposes to the people a programme for housing it does so with a view to, as I say, gearing all the machinery of government toward meeting a high standard of achievement and encouraging the public and investors not to lose faith in the economy. Every effort of the government will be geared to that goal.

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): Not bad! All the way.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let us find out how many negatives the opposition can really find in our programme, even though they are trying very hard.

Mr. Lewis: Not ourselves—The Globe and Mail, the Toronto Daily Star!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now an hon. member has asked me to give him this information today—the hon. member for Windsor West, is it?—he asked me to give him this courtesy, even though members do not give it to me. Let me answer the question.

Questions were asked in order to find out exactly how much new money Ontario itself was putting into the housing programme for the coming year. I have made the point, and I make it again, that I would hope we could put $500 million into the economy without a dime of our money. I think that would be a great accomplishment. Is it necessary for us to borrow, in Ontario, $400 million to prove it is a good programme? However, let us get to the prepared answer.

Suggestions have run all the way, as far as Ontario's own money is concerned, from $50 million used by the hon. member for Scarborough West on a TV programme, which I watched, to some $71.9 million by a columnist, which they were quoting here. They are both wrong, very wrong.

I am advised that in 1970 the Ontario government's share of the housing construction programme was $93.8 million. In 1971, as planned by the government—and I add here, as was explained as clearly as I could do it—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Smile when you say that.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —in every statement that has been made—it will be, in fact, $222 million.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on! One hundred and forty-five million of this is a carryover.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why does the member not listen? If the hon. member will listen, it will be $222 million, which is made up of the various facets of housing which were explained previously. One should really add to that, $100 million of the bank money which—

Mr. Haggerty: The government has not got that yet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —because of its guarantee by the Ontario government, is in fact a charge against the government's credit if called upon to honour its guarantee.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if we were trying really to blow up the programme beyond what it was, we could have said—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—that our government really is involved indirectly with its own credit and moneys, up to $322 million.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is no way at all, Mr. Speaker, that anyone can make this factually less than what it is. Therefore, to recapitulate, let me bring it—

Mr. Lewis: But it is not true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me bring it out clearly again.

Mr. Lewis: How much of the $220 million is carryover?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will tell the House all that. Just hang on. Hold your breath.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Lewis: So Ross Munro was right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of the $500 million, all that—was it Ross Munro?

Mr. Lewis: I think it was.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was Ross Munro, or whoever wrote that article, who said the programme was evaporating. What he was saying, in fact, when I read the article, was that what he thought was being injected into the programme by the Ontario government was a lot less than he thought appeared in the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: That is true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That would not have evaporated the programme even if it were true, because all he is talking about is who put what money in.

Mr. Lewis: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It has nothing to do with the programme, if $500 million is being injected into the economy this year, is that true?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: May I ask the hon. member for Scarborough West if $500 million of new money is injected into the economy this year for this programme, would he be happy with that?

Mr. Lewis: It is not sufficient. The government building only 85,000 units.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of the $500 million that will be injected into the economy—

Mr. Lewis: No, no. The government is planning to.

Hon. Mr. Grossman:—$210 million will come from CHMC, $222 million by OHC and $100 million by the banks, guaranteed by us, for a total of $532 million.

Mr. Peacock: May I ask the minister, will he ask the House to vote $225 million as a loan or advancement to Ontario Housing Corporation in the 1971-1972 estimates?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If it is necessary to ask for the money, it will be—

Mr. Lewis: No, but the government will not, because it is not necessary.

Mr. Peacock: The government does not intend to make a direct investment from the funds of $225 million—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is where your $145 million—let me explain to the hon. member with the short crash programme of education I have had in this. You see the $50 million the hon. member referred to the other day as being in the estimates. You have to have $50 million to commit about $100 million. You have to have that. The $50 million was expanded last year. There is $155 million, let us say. The $145 million you are talking about has yet to be injected into the economy this year. Now you know there is not even a play on words—that you really committed yourself to that last year. That is not what we were saying. We said this money will be injected this year. Is that true or is it not? That is all that matters.

Mr. Lewis: Well, it has not been true in the past. It just has not been true.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What little faith.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: This is what we plan. If it turns out not to be true I will be a stinker.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): We are not going that far.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The fact still remains that whether it was previously committed, as I say we inject it into the economy this coming year. Let us make no bones about that. Unless it turns out the hon. member finds we come nowhere near that, then he can take us to task. But suppose we had not produced a programme of housing—suppose we said, “Let us not set a high target because they will say we have set high targets before and we have not reached them”—although last year we exceeded the target. You say you are going to talk about spending a lot of money—and you may not spend it. We may get to the stage where some other federal government controls may hold us back. We do not know that. But then we would have been accused of lacking any kind of imagination to do something about the economy in this province.

Mr. Lewis: They have been below target every year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let us get to the other one. I am not backing down from anything we said in this statement.

As to the flak from your other side regarding the potential number of jobs, Mr. Speaker, we have only used, and I repeat it again, the formula which has been well established by economists and also used by the federal government to show the multiplier effect of employment created by such a basic industry as housing construction—and surely there is no mystery about that because everybody agrees that it is because of the multiplier effect of that industry that it is an important one.

Mr. J. Renwick: What is the multiplier?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Otherwise, we would be laying stress perhaps on other things to some extent.

Mr. Lewis: All right, fine. It has a multiplier effect.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If course it has a multiplier effect.

Mr. Lewis: It depends on what kind of housing you build. You have student housing and senior-citizen housing and the multiplier effect is reduced dramatically.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is not reduced dramatically. I mentioned that to the hon. member the other day when he used the ridiculous figure of 0.07 and I told him—

Mr. Lewis: I said 0.7.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was 0.07, but even 0.7 is wrong. I told him that the multiplier effect used by—I guess it is the National Housing or CHMC—is 4.8 and I said that OHC used the multiplier effect of 4.4 because of the mix of public housing and others, so that was taken into consideration. Does the hon. member want to call me a stinker because it should be 4.3 when we get to the end of the year and perhaps we cannot accomplish that?

Mr. Lewis: I do not want to call the hon. minister anything.

Hon. A. B. R. Lawrence (Minister of Health): Do not be so offensive.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: My integrity is at stake because I made a statement to this House. I want to make sure I can back it up, because I am very careful about statements I make in this House.

Mr. Lewis: It is not his integrity—it is his statistics and reporting that are at stake.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I have got to be careful about statistics given to this House. I should be able to back them up. This formula has been proved in the past as being fairly accurate. Now these are the economists. I am not an economist. This is the formula they use, and again there was no mention, I repeat, in the Throne Speech or my statement that the 132,000 potential jobs were all going to be new jobs and nobody—

Mr. Lewis: It was the whole implication.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and no way can prove that at all. The fact is that it will be a tremendous accomplishment by this government if we are able to generate through this housing programme 132,000 jobs directly or indirectly, new jobs or by managing to keep people from losing their jobs today. If we manage to keep that many people employed because of this programme, anybody looking at this thing objectively has to say, “That will be a hell of a good job if you can accomplish it.”

Let me further point out that we are just talking about the generating of jobs created by the expenditure of the $500 million and that does not include the tremendous amount of housing which will be built through other sources which we anticipate will total—well, including ours—between 85,000 and 90,000 units.

Mr. Lewis: Which is below your target.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Below whose target?

Mr. Lewis: Below your government target set by the former Treasurer in 1968, so do not pretend—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So this is our target today. Last year we exceeded our target, did we not?

Mr. Lewis: No, you did not.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course we did.

Mr. Lewis: No, you were 12,000 units under your target even last year.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Whose target? Do you mean for the whole of the province including private—

Mr. Lewis: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, all right.

Mr. Lewis: Do not say "Well" and toss it away.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course I toss it away.

Mr. Lewis: The minister's credibility is at stake.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The credibility is what the government can do and that is why we talk about potential. If it fails in the private sector somewhere to reach a target, that is another matter altogether. We do our best to help them if we can.

We have set a total, Mr. Speaker, it is a target we are sure to get and Ontario Housing Corporation and my predecessor deserve a tremendous amount of credit for exceeding their target last year. It was a tremendous job and I hope we will succeed as they did last year in exceeding our target this year as well. We are looking at the future optimistically. We want our people to look at it optimistically. We want foreign and domestic investors to look at Ontario optimistically and even though we know the nitpickers in the opposition and other places would like us not to succeed, we can and we will.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but comment on what has been said to date, because as a great German theorist said when it came to war: "The best defence is a good offence." And I must say that the government is trying to put a good offence, because it certainly has not got much of a defence.

Mr. Speaker, I sat here and I listened to the provincial Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) berate the federal government for its inactivity, trying to recite why this province's hands were tied; saying that it had no power to do this; it had no power to do that; and all the power was in the federal government and therefore the province could not do anything. And the Minister of Trade and Development gets up and says: "We will do this;" "We will provide this;" "We will give opportunities;" or "Opportunities will be provided to do that," and so on.

The question arises, Mr. Speaker, if today The Department of Trade and Development will provide an opportunity for such and such, or will do such and such, and such and such, and such and such—evidently intended to completely wipe out unemployment—why did it not do this last year, and why did it not do it the year before, and why did it not do it the year before that? If it could do it this year, it could have done it last year. As has been pointed out time and time again, it had at least $145 million on hand with which to start.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He would have been sick over it. The hon. member for Riverdale said he would have been sick over it.

Mr. Ben: There would have been a lot of people who would have been sick over it. So all we have here is one minister condemning the conduct of the other minister and in fact contradicting him.

Mr. Speaker, I am getting rather sick and tired of hearing all this emphasis on foreign investments coming in, the lowering of the interest rates, increasing the gross national product, because to me it seems collectively to be a lot of hogwash. The minister who just sat down, the Minister of Trade and Development, is talking about lowering the interest rate and attracting foreign investment.

Mr. Speaker, if you lower the interest rate too low the investment will not come into this country because they can get a higher return in the country of its origin. So some place there is a cutoff, where if you lower the interest rate beyond a certain point you are not going to get foreign investment.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When did I mention all this?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, let us put it this way. If the hon. minister did not, his predecessor obviously did. But he was certainly talking about bringing in foreign investments, of that there is no doubt.

Mr. Speaker, we live in an era of technology and this technological progress is evident all around us, be it in the city, or on the farm. The production of food, which once occupied half of our population, now requires less than 10 per cent and even then we have difficulty disposing of the surplus.

Mr. Haggerty: Seven per cent.

Mr. Ben: I say less than 10 per cent, Mr. Speaker, and my friend here says less than seven per cent. In fact, Mr. Speaker, one efficient farmer can produce enough food to feed 24 people.

Mr. Gaunt: No, no, 34 people.

Mr. Ben: The figures I have are 24 and I am not going to get caught in an argument. The fact is, even at 24 it would be less than five per cent and even then we have a surplus.

Mr. Martel: The Liberals are arguing against each other.

Mr. Ben: Now what has the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Stewart), sitting back across there with his chin buried in his—I should say the Minister of Agriculture and Food Production, who is sitting there with his chin buried in his chest. What has he done to find an export market for our surplus food products?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Yes, I can tell the hon. member. He does want me to tell him now?

Mr. Ben: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: In 1969 we increased it over 1968 by $35 million and last year we increased it by a greater amount than that—and those are increases over a previous $150 million.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is just not good enough.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, the minister has got up to tell us how the farmers, through their own initiative, were able to increase the export of food, but he did not answer the question as to what his government did to bring that about.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Come on, George.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will.

Mr. Ben: The hon. minister had his chance.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have the right to reply.

Mr. Ben: He had his chance, so he should sit down.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, surely I have the right to reply?

An hon. member: Sure he has.

Mr. Ben: We will put his name at the foot of the list.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It was the Ontario Food Council that did it. They did it right through the piece—all the way. They are a great organization, working with the farmers, not against them, as my friend would have it.

Mr. Ben: Yes—when it comes to the production of goods, we can now produce, with less than 20 per cent of the available labour force, all the necessary goods and still have a surplus of goods.

Mr. Martel: The Liberals do not want to talk about unemployment because of their federal friends and the Tories because they bungled it so badly.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, the foregoing factors are again compounded by a population growth.

Mechanization and automation boosts output and cuts costs and has been made necessary by deteriorating sales prospects, rising production costs, increased foreign competition and lower profits. The result has been that while output has soared, the number of blue-collar jobs, as they were once called, has decreased.

We have had this in the mining industry, the steel industry, the auto industry, the petroleum refining and chemical industries; we had it in the construction industry, and we have it in shipping.

Many, many years ago, I think it must be 25 years ago, during the time of the Second World War or shortly thereafter, John L. Lewis, who was then the president of the United Mineworkers of America, foresaw that workers were going to be laid off by automation and increased mechanical efficiency and he at that time provided that the mine owners set aside a certain amount per ton of coal mined to look after the people that would be displaced by—

Mr. Peacock: He is in court right now to answer for the disposition of those funds.

Mr. Ben: John L. Lewis?

Mr. Peacock: His successor.

Mr. Ben: It is not John L. Lewis. At any rate he foresaw what mechanization was going to do and he made some provision.

In shipping, Alfred Bridges, or Harry Bridges as he is better known, out on the west coast made provision for the introduction of pallets and containers, through having the marine shippers and owners make provision for the people who would be displaced by the increased efficiency followed by the use of pallets.

In our own country—in our own city, as a matter of fact—what is hitting the headlines these days is Charles Irvine and Bruno Zanini of a new union that has been formed, fighting the Toronto District Trades Council, in trying to form this new union.

And what it is about, according to what has been written in the paper, is the fact that the plasterers are finding difficulty getting jobs through the introduction of what is called “dry-wall.” So they are trying to find some solution to the problem.

We had, in the automobile industry, Reuther striving for earlier retirement ages and higher pensions for those who are retiring at an early age.

All these things have been facing us and yet this government has done absolutely nothing to help to solve some of these problems.

Since one has to offer at least some kind of a solution to this problem, I could say this. We levy corporate profit taxes—corporation taxes. Perhaps what we should do to encourage export is give a rebate of corporate taxes on profits earned on goods that are exported. That might help to make our goods more economical abroad, cheaper to purchase, and might induce more manufacturing for export here and use more people. I offer this as a partial solution.

I fear this: that the fact that we increase our exports and increase our production does not necessarily mean that we will have to hire more people so to do. Because not only are we faced with unemployment these days, we are also faced with under-employment. People are working fewer hours, so even if we were to increase our production by five, 10, 15 per cent, I question whether it would provide five, 10, 15 per cent more people with work. But at least it is a partial solution to this particular problem.

Not only are people being displaced by machinery, but people are being replaced by machines, that is by automation and also by new techniques.

For example, the bricklayers are being displaced, not because there are too many of them but because they do not lay bricks in the course of construction as they once did. They now use modular or precast construction. In other words, the introduction of new techniques is doing away with the need for people like bricklayers.

I have already mentioned plasterers. We have less need for plasterers because there is less plastering to be done because of the introduction of dry-wall.

Still others have been replaced by computers linked to machines. Mr. Speaker, my most vivid memory of Expo 67 was watching the Kodak display where a machine was assembling projectors without human intervention, at least in the part that was visible to the spectators.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The hon. member has a machine in Ottawa that is disassembling the country.

Mr. Ben: This machine or apparatus had parts flowing toward a tall column and somebody must have fed the parts into the machine behind the scenes, but the assembly was done by this machine.

It was frightening. There was this one machine producing all the projectors that perhaps Kodak could sell, with perhaps a half a dozen people in the background making sure that the parts flowed into the proper slot.

In the same display further on, they had a computerized machine which was drilling. I think it was engine blocks or something. But it was selecting the proper tool, doing the work necessary of that tool, replacing the tool, taking a new one, doing the next step.

These things have been facing us for a long time. It is a problem of cybernetics, I think, the way we refer to it.

What has this government done to prepare the people of Ontario to face up to the problems that are rising out of this automation and computerization out of cybernetics? Not a blessed thing. Or not even a cursed thing. They have not been doing a thing. All they can do now is say what they are going to do to help solve the unemployment problem, whereas their inactivity, their lack of foresight, their ineptitude, led up to the gross unemployment that we have at the present time.

Surely there must be a comprehensive study started and carried out as expeditiously as possible to find out what we, as a government, can do to help relieve some of the pressures that are going to be brought on our people by these problems.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other factors contributing to unemployment. I think that the member for Scarborough West mentioned married women in the work force. More and more women are joining the labour force when, in fact, less and less of them are required.

A lot of them are joining it because they are marrying later and they are self-supporting, others are because they are widows. Still many more are working because they are the sole bread-winners; others because they must supplement the income of their husbands. Some are working to buy something special, to go on a trip, or join the jet set, and still others because they want to work for something to do or just to show that they are equal to the men.

The fact is this has created a problem. It has contributed in no small measure to unemployment as we know it.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Ben: An hon. member at the back says it is a lot of nonsense. So be it.

Mr. Speaker, we are fortunate that this generation, insofar as Canada is concerned, has not seen a war, not since our participation, then called police action, in Korea. If we look upon that as the United Nations' police action, I guess there has not been participation in a war by this country since the end of the Second World War.

Further, we have not lately had a re-armament policy which, under normal circumstances in the past, has helped to create some employment. To be truthful about it, we have had a decrease in the number of people on our defence staff, or defence forces, which has also put more people on the market looking for jobs.

Mr. Makarchuk: Why do you not consider scrapping the government?

Mr. Pilkey: Who engineered that deal?

Mr. Ben: Perhaps what we should look around for are a few more Bonaventures and spend money fitting them out even though we are just going to sell them subsequently for scrap to Taiwan.

Mr. Pilkey: Surely you do not want another Bonaventure fiasco?

Mr. Ben: At any rate, the fact is that this also has, in some ways, caused unemployment. Again, the government has done nothing to fill the vacuum.

Another factor, Mr. Speaker, is over-population. Not too long ago, even in this century, large families were the vogue because they were looked upon as security in one's old age and because so many children died in infancy, or at least before maturity. The state now assumes responsibility for the aged, and medical science has now progressed to the point where anything beyond two children is, in fact, over-population. If one person could produce enough food for 24, one member of the work force could produce enough production goods for 20, then the more children that are born, the more surplus labour we have. Again, the government has done nothing to deal with this particular problem.

A number of years back, Mr. Speaker, we looked forward to the people who were being displaced by automation going into what is called the service industry. We said that as automation comes we are going to have more and more leisure time and therefore more and more people are going to go into the industries which are going to supply us with services in our leisure, goods to use in our leisure. More golf courses would open up and more cottages in summer resort areas.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the service industry itself is going self-service. Motels and motor hotels are replacing hotels. In motels you do not require parking attendants, bellhops, doormen, or room service personnel. Your ice is supplied free by a machine at the end of the corridor and next to it stands an automatic vending machine which, upon receiving sufficient coinage—

Mr. Makarchuk: Is this the level of the Liberals' economic policy?

Mr. Ben: —will deliver food or drink, hot or cold.

Mr. Makarchuk: One mule driver for each ass.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): The hon. member is wandering.

Mr. Ben: To add to that, Mr. Speaker, we dreaded a television repairman coming to our house and saying that he had to remove the set to his place of business. That is no longer necessary. You do not have that threat any more, because now, he can replace the printed circuit in your television set before the ink on your cheque is dry.

We now have high-speed automatic elevators which do not require personnel to operate. I understand that in New York, 40,000 elevators were replaced by automatic elevators. You can dial direct now, anywhere in North America. This displaced a lot of telephone operators. Our shirts come drip-dry; our trousers come with a permanent press in them. Everything is now geared to use as little intervention of services as possible. Again, the government has done nothing in this particular respect.

Mr. Makarchuk: Better ban paper panties next, eh?

Mr. Ben: The only thing that is still active, Mr. Speaker, are the mouths of the people to our left who keep yak, yak, yakking.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): And never say anything.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The hon. member is a bit drip-dry himself.

Mr. Ben: There is actually a way to solve this problem. A lot of activity producing nothing. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, the problem before us is a mess. It requires more knowledge of economics, science, and human psychology than can be expected of any of us here or, in fact, of any human being.

This does not mean that we should shun the responsibility or try to hide it like a slovenly housewife sweeping dirt under a rug. That this government has done nothing to date to solve the problem—what is less, even tried to—does not mean that it cannot be solved if we put enough men of education and understanding to the task.

In the late 1950s during the reign of the Hon. Mr. Diefenbaker, the first, and we hope, the last—100,000 men were enrolled, or enlisted, or mustered, whatever phrase would be more appropriate, into, I do not know whether I should use police or militia—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The government might bring them up here and try them.

Mr. Ben: —but it was called the Emergency Measures Organization. Prior to the Diefenbaker government they called it the civil defence organization, but the name did not sit well with a lot of people so they changed it. These people were supposed to be trained in looking after disasters, both man-made and natural, but the truth of the matter is that they spent most of their time pounding the pavement.

The hon. member for Scarborough West spoke of having youngsters contribute their services in the social service. I consider that to be a splendid idea. I also think, Mr. Speaker, that we could set up, provincially if not nationally, a period of national service for our youngsters. By this I am not implying that all the youngsters are going to be impressed into a militia or the army and shoulder rifles.

I would not be surprised if the majority of the youngsters did choose to go into our defence forces and learn to fly an aircraft or learn to sail a boat, or operate a power boat, or even learn signals or some other such trade—radar for example—in the land forces.

But many others would choose to do social work of the nature that was referred to by the member for Scarborough West. Many of them, for instance, could be used to open roads into our northland. These roads would open the northland for tourists. They would also encourage people to establish themselves there permanently to serve the tourists. They would open the north to more prospectors with the hope of opening it to mining industry and even secondary manufacturing industry. Others could choose to go up to the Arctic and work with the Eskimos and the Indians, but I do not think that it would be harmful to anybody, to any of our youngsters, if at age 18 that they were liable for two years national service.

Mr. Makarchuk: Are we having a children's crusade in northern Ontario?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is this Liberal policy?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Tell Trudeau; that is a national jurisdiction.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): In the north?

Mr. Ben: I do not think that it would hurt any youngster to contribute a couple of years to the interests of Canada.

I think we also have to change our concept of education. I do not think we can any longer threaten our children with the admonition that if you do not work hard at school you will not get a job and will starve or will become a common labourer. Children know that they will not starve and they can receive welfare before, while or after attending school.

bore and they will be unhappy. They must learn that leisure time need not be loafing time. We will also have to train more and more people for those service industries where the human element is still important; serving people in resort areas, in restaurants, in convention centres and so on. We have got to impress upon our youngsters—

Mr. Makarchuk: Keep it up and it will clear the ranks in no time.

Mr. Ben: —that serving is not necessarily slavery.

Mr. MacDonald: They are leaving in droves.

Mr. Ben: I beg to differ with the hon. member for—

Mr. Martel: Sudbury East.

Mr. Ben: No, for York South. On taking a count of the House I noticed that the membership here has increased by at least 30 per cent since I got up to speak.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: They obviously did not hear the hon. member.

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): The hon. member better quit while he is ahead.

Mr. Ben: Thank you. I appreciate that and recognize that.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member certainly attracted the Tories.

Mr. Ben: Most governments have, on the shelf, a lot of public works, to put into effect at the time of unemployment and my own leader, the Leader of the Opposition, comments this government's shelves were like Mother Hubbard's cupboard—bare.

Mr. Yakabuski: Would the hon. member recite that in its entirety?

Mr. Ruston: The hon. member for Renfrew South would not understand it anyway.

Mr. Ben: This government had already started many of its projects, as my leader pointed out, during time of high labour costs and full employment and it has little to do now.

But there are many things it could do for this city—

Mr. Lawlor: I do not like to see anybody unemployed but we would not mind seeing the member out of here.

Mr. Ben: —not because I come from this city, not because this Legislature happens to be located in this city, but because, in fact, it is the capital of the Province of Ontario. For example, the Legislature could subsidize the construction of a domed stadium; not, again, because it is Toronto, but because it could be used not only for professional sports which would have to pay and pay well, but for the training of our athletes for participation in Olympic events.

In Toronto one cannot practise Olympic diving, at least in the wintertime. The Donald Summerville Olympic pool located on Woodbine Avenue has facilities for practising diving but, unfortunately, it is open only during the short summer season.

Mr. Makarchuk: Can the hon. member not get the pool seasonally adjusted?

Mr. Ben: We could make a greater contribution toward the construction of subways, which I think was raised here already.

The city of Toronto proper, as distinguished from Metro Toronto, is plagued by the fact that it has a combined sewer system—that is, one sewer outlet or pipe carries both the domestic sewage and the storm sewers and it was estimated that it would cost approximately $300,000 to correct this defect. This is something that could be done, not only to help cure unemployment but to help the Minister of Energy and Resources Management cut water pollution. This would be an admirable undertaking for this government.

Mr. Speaker, there are many other partial solutions, and I offer these as my suggestions, not necessarily the suggestions of this party.

We have been discussing welfare quite recently, as a matter of fact continuously, and deploring the large numbers on welfare. Mr. Speaker, it is my feeling that if we were to add another 25 per cent or even less to the amount that we now pay out under general welfare assistance and had the people who receive the total sum employed on these public works we would cut down on the unemployment and have something to show for our money after it was all over. We would have a much better city, a much better province and a much better country in which to live.

Mr. Speaker, these are just some suggestions that could be implemented. This government has got up here on two occasions since this debate started and tried to put all the blame on the federal government. I, Mr. Speaker, do not wish to whitewash the federal government. I feel that they also were amiss in not—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The hon. member is quite happy with Trudeau, is he?

Mr. Ben: —looking after a lot of these things that I have mentioned. They also do not have any programme to counteract the evils of automation and computerization and cybernetics. But two wrongs do not make a right. Just because one government has fallen down on its share of the responsibility does not absolve this government for falling down on its share of the responsibility and it has, indeed, fallen down.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Pierre sure fell down.

Mr. Ben: For this it cannot escape the censure of the public at the next general election. This I can predict.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I want to deal, for a moment, with some of the comments that were made by the Minister of Trade and Development when he spoke earlier today, because I feel that though his comments may not have been intentionally misleading they certainly were not as accurate as they might have been.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): They were accurate.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. The Minister of Trade and Development indicated in his speech—and I want to quote from it:

Policies on the textile, footwear, rubber and chemical industries, decisions on tariff and quota protections to existing Canadian industry and indeed the whole issue of taxation has provided an air of uncertainty in the minds of many manufacturers.

Consequently, my staff is aware in its day-to-day contact with businessmen of investment deferrals, both foreign and domestic, amounting to over $200 million during the past year. This expansion could have provided for thousands of new employment opportunities—

And in a little aside it says: "We have evidence to support this—note A." And I want to read to you note A and leave it with you, because if this is the evidence upon which the minister makes decisions for the people of Ontario it is pretty flimsy.

He is quoting from a speech by Paul Hellyer—who is a noted expert in the field, I must say—in the House of Commons on March 25, 1971:

"Technically and financially the federal government policy has been a near total disaster. Morally it has been a total disaster." He states that as a result of anti-inflationary measures taken by the federal government, "the capital flow for new investment has not been sufficient to provide meaningful opportunities for the large numbers of young people now entering the labour market."

He goes on to say:

He has estimated the loss of approximately 100,000 jobs resulting from anti-inflationary measures. A great many of these could—

And I stress the word "could."

—have accrued to Ontario which accounts for over 40 per cent of the Gross National Product.

If this is the kind of substantiation that the government has for the policies that it brings in then we are in trouble. If this is the evidence that the minister—a substantiated statement that there are deferrals of investment in the Province of Ontario—is using to build up the programme that he says is going to create more employment in this province, I think it is time he gave it back to the previous minister, because he was more palatable than that.

In addition to that, the minister dealt with the Ontario Housing Corporation and its grand programme of $500 million worth of expenditure in the next year. The minister did not really deal with it very well. It has been charged by the opposition that much of this money is money that ought to have been spent—in fact was budgeted for—over the last two years; money that was never spent by the government to meet the needs of that particular time.

In the year 1968-1969, we voted in this Legislature $62 million for housing. We spent $15.4 million—a short fall of $46.6 million. No matter how you cut it, no matter how you try to elaborate on the fact that the federal government did not have money available or would not make money available, there was voted by this Legislature over $46 million which could and should have been used to provide housing and was not.

In the year 1969-1970, we voted $56 million. That was a considerable decrease from the previous year, and we spent $40.2 million, a short fall of $16.2 million, in a year in which housing was considered to be a top priority; in a year in which the government spoke very forcefully in the Throne Speech about its housing programme—and again $16.2 million was left unspent. It is no wonder the government can afford to spend more money this year. One might wonder whether the $93.8 million that the government says it may have spent during the year 1970-1971 was ever spent. There certainly has not been any proof of that to date.

The fact of the matter is that the programme that is being offered by the government today as a massive housing project is, in fact, simply an effort by the government to catch up on its totally inadequate programmes of the last three years. The truth of the matter is that there is no more money being spent right now by this government in the field of housing than there was made available by this Legislature over the three-year period and that went unused. I think it is time that these things were on the record.

The whole problem in unemployment is more than just providing some sort of piecemeal effort at this particular time to meet a crisis situation. I think everyone in this Legislature appreciates that we are going to have to provide some kind of additional opportunities for employment right at this time. But the reason for the unemployment goes much deeper than that.

The reason for the unemployment is simply a lack of overall fiscal policy by the government of Ontario. It is a lack of policy toward establishing a more stable economy and this has been a policy that has been pursued by this government over 28 years. Everyone knows—anyone who has studied even the most elementary economics, anyone who has studied parliaments or governments over the course of the last half-century, would appreciate without a doubt—that there are recessions. We should have been able to recognize that as long as we left the economy in the hand of the private entrepreneur there were going to be recessions and that government had a responsibility to set about, to establish, on behalf of the people over whom it governs, the kind of stability in the economy that would ensure that when there were minor dislocations in the employment market, they would not be permitted to snowball into the kind of unemployment that we have today.

The first priority of government is to ensure that the well-being of the people over whom it governs is looked after. That is a requirement that means that in this particular kind of society we have to ensure there are job opportunities. It is not enough to hope that development takes place. It is not enough to trust to some person, well outside the realm of government circles, that they may or may not expand; or that they may or may not seek out new markets; or that they may or may not export. The government has to be involved in the decision-making in a very real way if it is going to have any impact on ensuring that jobs will be available for people; not only the people who are looking for jobs today but the people who will be coming on to the work force, into the employment market, over the next half-century. This is not being done.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Let us have some solutions.

Mr. Deans: We are coming. Do not worry about it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Cut off more investment?

Mr. Deans: It is interesting that the Minister of Pollution is here because it is in his area that much of the work could have been done and was not. I think we have got to begin with the basic premise.

We have got to begin with the basic premise that the ultimate responsibility for the economy rests with government. That there are very few people in the economy, whether they be private citizen or whether they be corporate interest, who blame other than the government for a recession or unemployment. And that if the government is going to be charged with the responsibility when things go badly, they have a responsibility to be part of the decision-making in order to ensure that things do not go badly.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What about prime interest rates?

Mr. Deans: This government has sat very self-satisfied for 28 years on its haunches and done very, very little to try to promote any kind of government direction for the economy of this province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member left out the part that—

Mr. Makarchuk: The member is getting the member for Renfrew South stirred up now.

Mr. Deans: Let me say to you—

Mr. Makarchuk: It was not bad in Manitoba yesterday. You lost Manitoba.

Mr. Lewis: The government knows that there was a by-election?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: That is your mythology.

Mr. Deans: I want to ask how often do you hear the unemployed on the streets blaming the board of directors of the steel company, or the board of directors of Canadian Westinghouse, or of Inco or of any other national company or any other small company for the fact that they are unemployed? The blame ultimately rests with government and therefore the responsibility to make sure it does not happen rests with government.

Now the secret to this is to develop the kind of co-operative relationship between industry, trade unions and government that will bring about an interest in the province never before seen, that will guarantee that the government is involved along with those other areas of society in planning the economic growth. That is something that this government has failed to do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Co-operative socialism.

Mr. Lewis: Right, What is wrong with that? You do it with the hospital workers.

Mr. Deans: Let me say to you that this government has made its position very clear. It does not think that it ought to meet with the people in the decision-making parts of the large corporations in Ontario to determine what can be done to offset unemployment. This government does not believe that planning is a necessary part of ensuring economic stability and growth. This government is prepared to be led by the nose like a small boy around the province, setting things up every time some corporation decides to establish a manufacturing process in an area. That is the basic problem: There is no direction; there is no attempt at direction. There has never been an effort by this government to sit down with corporations to determine what is in the best interest of the Province of Ontario rather than what is in the best interests of a few people who happen to be shareholders.

Mr. Yakabuski: Oh come on!

Mr. Deans: Okay, fine. That is interesting. Let me read to you. On June 8, 1970, I raised such a point with the then Treasurer and with the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and asked him during the question period whether either the Treasurer or the Prime Minister would undertake some special effort to offset what was at that time a 36.2 per cent increase in unemployment in and around the city of Hamilton.

I asked him if he would undertake to meet with the various corporate heads to discuss with them what action might be contemplated co-operatively by this government and then to ensure that the unemployment would not rise. And his answer was, "No." He did not think that the government ought to be involved in these kinds of things.

Well, I would ask him the question: What is the government going to be involved in if it is not involved in such things as layoffs, unemployment, plant dislocation and loss of revenue to the province? What is it going to be involved in if those things are not the direct involvement of the government?

This government has had nine months in which to pursue some form of discussion with the people who are running the corporations, who are laying off the people left, right and centre right across this province—and I say to you that absolutely nothing has happened, nothing. In fact, what has happened, if anything, is that we have paid out more of the taxpayers' money and we have fewer jobs in return for it. And I think that is a problem!

In the nine months that passed, the lay-off I was particularly concerned about at that moment at International Harvester took place, and the people were laid off. Unemployment in Hamilton and area has risen to over 20,000 people during that nine-month period. Still no government action!

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Since we adjourned last November this government has said nothing since.

Mr. Deans: Today, in the month of April, we stand in this House and go through this ridiculous debate. Why was there no action during the last nine months? Why are we now starting to talk about unemployment when unemployment has been running rampant throughout this province over the last year? Why is it that the government now stands up and reads into the record such idiotic statements as the one from the Treasurer and the one from the Minister of Trade and Development over the last two or three days?

The Minister of Trade and Development, in talking of his housing programme, talks about the fact that we need more time, that things do not happen overnight.

Let me remind him, in his absence, that just immediately prior to the 1967 election, the then Minister of Trade and Development stood some place in the province and made a great announcement that on Saltfleet Mountain adjacent to the city of Hamilton we were going to build housing complexes to house 90,000 people. Not one blade of grass has been turned since that day. This is the time it takes.

When we heard last Tuesday it would take a while, last Wednesday that we cannot do it overnight, last Thursday that it takes time, on Friday that we are working at it, and on Monday that it is going to materialize—I wonder just when. Does this government expect us to believe it? I wonder.

The point really is this, though: The projects that are being put forward by the government might well have been of some benefit had they been put forward when unemployment was at its start. But unfortunately it saw fit to do so little at that particular time; it saw fit not even to spend the moneys that were available, and here we now face a crisis situation.

Mr. Peacock: This government ignored every warning.

Mr. Deans: Every single warning that was put out by every individual right across the country was ignored by the Province of Ontario, and it is to that we turn.

It has been generally conceded that to a great extent the branch plant nature of Ontario's economy is a major contributing factor to unemployment. Studies over the last number of months have shown fairly conclusively that a sizable portion of the unemployed is caused—

Mr. Yakabuski: Studies by whom?

Mr. Lewis: What about Renfrew Aircraft over there?

Mr. Deans: —by foreign-controlled corporations consciously making a decision to cut back in subsidiary operations abroad in order to shore up a lagging economy.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: What about those labour heads in Detroit?

Mr. Pilkey: What about them?

Mr. Deans: One would think that since these warnings have been issued over the last 12 or 14 months—in fact these warnings have been issued over the last two or three years—the Ontario government might have recognized that it would be unable to control its own economy and economic growth unless it came to grips with that problem. What do we find? At the height of unemployment now it starts talking about doing something—

Mr. Gisborn: And when the steel industry is going at full capacity and has been for the last three years. Explain that.

Mr. Deans: One might have thought that the government, a year or a year and a half ago, would have taken a serious look at its ODC programme to see whether we, the people of the Province of Ontario, were getting benefit for the millions of dollars that were being spent; that in fact we were deriving new jobs; that in fact there were more jobs in the labour market because of the expenditure, as a result of the expenditure. But this has not been the case.

Mr. Yakabuski: This has been the case.

Mr. Deans: It has not been the case.

Mr. Yakabuski: It certainly has.

Mr. Deans: Well, that is an interesting point. Let me tell the hon. member about it. This government made available $500,000 to Abitibi—half a million, in case the hon. member cannot count—that was to provide for between 30 and 91 jobs. That was the intent of it. Let me tell the hon. member what happened there, because it is interesting. Abitibi, after getting the loan, laid off 85. Half a million bucks, of the taxpayers' money and there is a shortfall of at least 14 jobs.

Mr. Yakabuski: There was no shortfall.

Mr. Deans: In order words, we are 14 jobs fewer in the province as a result of that half-million-dollar expenditure.

Mr. Pilkey: That is right.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Yakabuski: Do not twist the facts.

Mr. Deans: Do not twist the facts? How can I twist facts? I am telling the truth. Just listen to it; there is more. It will be educational for the hon. member.

Mr. Yakabuski: It was an isolated case.

Mr. Lewis: An isolated case? Tell them about Renfrew Aircraft over there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. members would allow the member for Wentworth to carry on. If the member for Scarborough West and the member for Renfrew South wish to engage in the debate, the latter can, of course, later.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, through you to the member for Renfrew South, on May 29, 1969, Canadian Westinghouse got a quarter of a million dollars—we are all familiar with that—which was to provide a number of jobs in the Orangeville area. We are not exactly sure how many jobs but it was to provide a number. It certainly did not provide as many jobs in Orangeville as it lost when they moved from the area of Toronto to the Orangeville area, but in addition Canadian Westinghouse on February 13, 1971, announced the closing down with a loss of 275 jobs. That cost us a quarter of a million dollars. At least it is not as bad as the other. After all, the other cost half a million dollars and we lost 13 jobs. This time it was a quarter of a million dollars and we lost 275 jobs.

How about the case of Courtaulds? You heard about them when they closed down their operation in the Cornwall area—let me read it to you just so that you understand it—throwing out of work over 100 people—600 people, as I recall—and got from the government of Ontario a loan of $199,083 to employ between 12 and 46 people. Not a penny to be returned. In that same company, 600 people are unemployed and they get almost $200,000 of the taxpayers' money to provide between 12 and 46 jobs—and nobody knows how many it did provide to this point. You wonder about unemployment? This government is creating unemployment. It is buying its way right into it.

You talk about your unemployment situation: Let me give you another—there are all kinds of them; we have them by the dozen. Oh yes, this was a good one—Domtar.

You all remember Domtar, I am sure. This is the government policy for creating jobs. Domtar got $484,008 in one loan and $439,333 in another to create a possible total of 99 jobs in both or 73 jobs depending on which you pick. What did they do? Let us have a look and see. Let us find out what Domtar's situation was.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The pulp and paper industry happens to be in trouble.

Mr. Deans: Yes. It certainly is.

They phased out one of their divisions at a cost of 260 jobs. We spent something over a million dollars—close to a million—to provide a maximum of 99 jobs; they close their operation down and put out 260 on the street. Maybe we could have better spent that money, do you not think?

Mr. Lewis: They made $18 million profit last year.

Mr. Deans: There is not any question at all—

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): There are 1,600 employees there year round; why not think about them?

Mr. Yakabuski: He is just twisting the facts, that is all. He only reads one side of the coin.

Mr. Deans: That particular company did not need our money. One cannot help wondering just how much we can afford to spend to create unemployment. How much more do we have in the bank that we can draw out and use to create more unemployment in the province? When are we going to start spending some money to start creating employment in the province?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: How does that create unemployment?

Mr. Deans: Let me give another example. The Minister of Energy and Resources Management will be tickled with this one. This is a nice one. I want to tell him about it.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I want the hon. member to tell me how that creates unemployment?

Mr. Deans: He has heard, no doubt, of a situation that arose in Hamilton recently with a company called H. G. Wright. I raised it before. H. G. Wright was a very profitable little company, operating in Hamilton and doing quite nicely. The employees there were earning about $3.25 an hour, living quite comfortably in the community. H. G. Wright came to the government and said, "We would like to move out in the Caledonia area. Is there any way we could get assistance, because our plant is obsolete. It is on three floors and it is pretty difficult for us to operate in this kind of an environment." The government said, "No, we cannot give you any money."

Selkirk Metalbestos, though, which is located in Brockville and is a subsidiary of Wallace Murray Corporation, an extremely wealthy multi-national corporation in the United States. It met with the Ontario government and said, "We are thinking of putting an addition on our plant at Brockville. How about lending us—giving us, not lending us—some money." So they gave them $77,067. Selkirk then purchased H. G. Wright. Within two months it was purchased. Within 14 months it was phased out, and that $77,000 created, I understand, about six jobs in Brockville. We lost almost 70 jobs in Hamilton.

I wrote to The Department of Trade and Development and I asked if it would investigate this because it did not make much sense that we would be giving money to a company in order that they could enlarge their operation, in order that they could buy out their competition, in order that they could dislocate 62 workers. So I asked. Do you know what they wrote back and told me? I will read it to you. This is the letter back from Mr. Etchen. He said:

In April, 1969, the Wallace Murray Corporation of New York, which is the parent company of Selkirk Metalbestos, acquired the H. G. Wright Company of Hamilton.

I had told him that in the earlier letter so that he would know.

At the time of the acquisition the H. G. Wright Company was profitable. Since that time, however, the company has run into a loss position. Projections of future operations indicate that this position will deteriorate further if operations are continued at the Hamilton plant. The company therefore decided to close down the Hamilton plant on purely business grounds.

Well now, I ask you.

So I said to them, "Did you think to take a look and find out why it became unprofitable? Did it ever occur to you that maybe it was designed that way? Did it never occur to you that maybe the whole exercise was aimed at establishing the priority position of Selkirk in the field and that they themselves manufacture a similar, though not interchangeable product, and that they intended at the time of the acquisition of H. G. Wright to phase it out? And that they built the addition to employ half a dozen people with the $77,000 that they got from the Ontario government, and that 62 people in Hamilton are now unemployed?"

No, it did not occur to them. Sixty-six more unemployed to add to the total. And then you take a look. These were people who had been there for years, who had worked in this business. It is not a business that wanted to go out of business; it was a business that wanted assistance in order that it could continue, and this government refused it. This government cost that particular municipality and those people an opportunity to continue in their jobs. That is how this government meets the unemployment crisis. That is how it provides a good economy for the people of Ontario to benefit from. One wonders, one seriously wonders. He might ask the question, "Was the product that

H. G. Wright manufactured a profitable venture?" That is a fair question, and I am glad he asked it. I will tell you the answer. There is a company in Hamilton—I am talking to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management—

Mr. Lawlor: That is the question he would have asked if he had thought of it.

Mr. Deans: That is right. The situation was that another company in Hamilton invested $100,000 of its own money—a very small company, J. A. Rider. It has employed about 20 of the former Wright employees at its own expense in order to put back into production the product that Selkirk phased out. The product was obviously profitable and obviously the $77,000 should be reclaimed. Obviously it should go to Rider because he is the one who has created the employment. He is the one who has created for the people, who were dislocated by the actions of this government, an opportunity to be employed, and it is to him that the money should go.

I ask you seriously, Mr. Speaker, do you not think it is only fair that if a man will provide, out of his own resources, employment for 20 people, and another company with government funds can only provide for six, that man should at least receive some compensation in order to assist him in his endeavours? Not this government; not this government. They are interested in spending money, and their interest has simply created unemployment, and they have done it and they have done it well.

Mr. MacDonald: No interjections, Mr. Minister?

Mr. Deans: There are so many! You do not have to go through the whole list, although we have something like 28 pages of companies in Ontario which have received hundreds of thousands, millions of dollars of tax payers' money. My contention is that the ODC and its staff have not had an adequate followup on the expenditures that were made in order to ensure that there are indeed more jobs on the labour market.

It is not nearly enough to say that each particular plant is a separate entity. You have got to consider the operation in its entirety. You cannot give money to an operation to build one very small plant in one area while it is phasing out hundreds of employees in another. There is something wrong, something morally wrong, about that kind of a position, and that is the position that the government of Ontario has been following for at least the last five years. I question its validity.

Is this the kind of thing that we expect from a government that is interested, really interested, in creating employment? No, I doubt it. The whole matter of whether or not the branch plant economy is the reason is fairly well indicated by the fact that unemployment in Canada in January of this year—taking into consideration all of the fancy ways in which it is calculated—stood at about 6.6 per cent. It was higher than the unemployment rate in the United States, which was 5.6 per cent. Considerably higher.

That was as a result of the kind of thing that I am talking about. It was as a result of the parent company consciously withdrawing from the foreign market the products that were marketable in Canada. That brought about a great deal of dislocation and unemployment of workers in this province. This government continues, day after day, to hand out the largest loans, actually gifts, to the largest companies as long as they are multi-national and have lots of money in the bank.

The main criteria seem to have been—in spite of the pronouncements of the Minister of Trade and Development—the main criteria for receiving money from the government of Ontario seem to be that you do not really need it; that if you need the money you cannot get it; and if you do not need it, all you have to do is come and ask for it. It makes me wonder.

How many of these companies do you honestly believe settled or located in the areas in which they are now located because they got a grant from the Ontario government? That is certainly is no way to establish a more stable economic picture across this province.

It is not by direct grants to companies that these things are established. It is not by handouts to companies that have more in assets than the province of Ontario. It is not by providing an extra half a million dollars for them to invest somewhere that they determine that they are going to locate in any particular area. If this government had spent the money that it had spent on these loans in providing the necessary services in the areas in which unemployment was highest, we would have been able to encourage industrial development to take place.

What has been done in that area from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury? How much effort has been put into providing some kind of reasonable alternative to the situation which prevailed until November of last year and still prevails; where unemployment is so high that, in many instances, in municipalities the total employable force is unemployed.

What is being done by this government to provide those people with employment?

Mr. Gisborn: How much does the government expect back before the next election?

Mr. Deans: What is being done in areas in northern Ontario to provide for employment for the people who live in those areas? Absolutely nothing. In fact, the Minister of Mines said not long ago that there was nothing he could do in the latest plant closing, which one of my colleagues will speak about later.

I cannot help asking—and I have taken much longer than I intended—if the government—

An hon. member: The member is doing very well.

Mr. J. Renwick: He is really getting to the government.

Mr. MacDonald: At least it has silenced them.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is really getting to the member. The members are nearly asleep over there.

Mr. Deans: I do not blame him. He is very tired. He does a lot of walking.

Mr. Gisborn: It is hard to watch that activity over there.

Mr. Deans: He is the walking man. It really makes me wonder if the government's attitude toward the unemployment situation is real. I do not think it is. I think it is a sham. I think it is a big front for the lack of activity over the last nine months. I am convinced, as I look at the record of this government and the kinds of ways in which it has spent money, the efforts that it has made, that there has been no conscious attempt made by this government at any level to establish itself as a leader in the field of reducing unemployment in the Dominion of Canada, and particularly in Ontario.

There has been nothing done, absolutely nothing done to establish the government's priority position in planning the economy of this province. There has been little, if any, effort at all to bring about some kind of a co-operative effort in the way of guaranteeing that the government is not only made aware after the fact, but is made aware during the planning stages of the proposed shutdowns, the proposed layoffs, and the reasons for them; not only that, but also in bringing to the government's attention the expansion possibilities and the expansion proposals of the various companies that are thinking about enlarging operations in this province.

Surely it is not nearly enough for the government to go running around after companies when they have decided to locate in an area and then trying to meet their needs. Surely it is important that the government must take a lead in determining what the economic priorities are, and that does not mean handing out money. We have said a number of times, that one of the ways to establish a basically sound economy is that the people must have a fairly reasonable control over the resources of the country; that they must have a control over the resources of this province; that the government can, if it so desires, create economic stability as long as the government has a full say in the disposition and use of resources in the Province of Ontario.

From the other side, as often heard, are cries of anguish that we are trying to take over. I want to read a quote. I will read this quote, because I think it will be of interest to you:

Let this be a declaration, not only in relation to natural gas, but in relation to our great resources generally, not in any spirit of selfishness, not in any narrow approach, but rather with the idea that as trustees for future generations of Canadians, along with an export which may be carried out under wise and appropriate conservation and control, our main purpose will be the future welfare of Canadians themselves.

That might have been said by the leader of the NDP in the debate on having control of the gas in Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: It might have been said by Karl Marx.

Mr. Deans: Do members know who it was said by? The hon. George Drew.

Mr. Sopha: Really?

Mr. Deans: It seems to be good for the Tory soul to cleanse itself once in awhile with a statement of purpose—a purpose which it never at any time intends to fulfill.

Mr. Gisborn: A right man like that defeated on a liquor question.

Mr. Sopha: He made Goldwater look like a Marxist.

Mr. Deans: It makes you wonder whether we are going to face another six months of total inaction on the part of this government and whether the people of this province are considered to be expendable by this government; or whether they are going to go about trying to establish some kind of overall control that will ensure a co-operative control that will ensure that there will not be the kind of unemployment and dislocation occurring again in this province that we are seeing at this particular time.

Surely we can learn from past experiences. Surely we can learn from the years and years of history that unless the government is prepared to move immediately there are indications of recession in the country or the province, we are going to be faced time after time after time with the same kind of situation that we have been facing over the last year and that we are going to be facing for the next year. It is too late now to say that the government is on the move and that it is going to create another 85,000 homes. It is far too late for the Treasurer to stand up and talk about a new policy for taxation. It is not nearly good enough to get up in this Legislature and talk about the federal government and its policies that have wreaked havoc on the people of Ontario, albeit those things may be true.

The problem is basically that this government has failed to govern; that this government has failed to grasp the significance of economic planning and the ensuring of economic growth in an orderly and rational way, and that this government has sat back and permitted the planning for the Province of Ontario to be done in the corporate boardrooms. That is the reason why we face unemployment today, and it can only be overcome if we are prepared to make a radical and drastic change in the manner in which government operates, and if government is prepared to step into the breach, and if government is prepared to do the kind of planning that will ensure that we will not be governed by people, not only by those in corporate boardrooms in this province, but by people who live well outside the confines of this country.

I say to this government now that it will be defeated. It will be defeated because it has no will to govern. It did not have a will to govern, but the economy of the province was too strong and it withstood all of the bungling of 28 years. This government's economy was sufficient that it was able to withstand the kind of irrational bungling that took place by people like the ministers of the Crown, most of them still sitting in their places, over the last three and a half years and over the previous 25 years.

There is one thing for sure: this government has reached the end of the road. The province's resilience is no longer there, and without proper and adequate economic planning there is going to be the kind of unemployment in this province again that we are facing now, only I suspect it will be worse. Because we are totally unable, in this kind of an economy and the way this government operates, to provide the numbers of jobs that will be necessary not only to meet the unemployed today but to meet the unemployed that will be coming on to the work force over the next five years.

There has been absolutely no provision by this government to try to provide jobs for people who are coming on to the work force. All one needs to do is take a look at the numbers of young children growing into the working age, coming to an age when employment is a necessity, and one can readily see that under the present administration there is not going to be any opportunity for them to find employment. And employment is important; it is important to the average individual. I know of very few people who want to sit home and watch television. I do not know of very many people who are not interested in finding a job.

I happen to think that if this government were progressive, which it obviously is not—Conservative though it may be—there would be a programme undertaken now, for example, to reduce the work week to a level where there would be additional employment and there would then be a greater sharing of the natural wealth. And there would be a programme undertaken by this government that would ensure that the natural resources of this province are used in this province to develop the kind of salable materials that can be sold at a reasonable profit. This has not been done, and I think that we can scrap this kind of give-away programme that we have been following over the last four or five years and replace it with a programme of incentive by providing adequate services throughout the province to ensure that orderly, economic growth takes place.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Scarborough North): Mr. Speaker, although I really want to deal with another aspect of this total problem and perhaps bring some other information, which I think any debate such as this requires to be laid on the table if it is to be a meaningful debate, I would like to just comment on what the hon. member for Wentworth has just said. As far as I have ever seen, and I am sure even he will have to agree, there is no other government in this country that has done as much over the past few years to create new jobs than this government.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He can drag out all his stories and illustrations, he can talk all he wants about the Ontario Development Corporation—and nothing is perfect, I suppose—but still the indisputable fact is that more jobs have been created in this province, and they have been here.

Mr. Randall: A great disappointment to that crowd over there though!

Hon. Mr. Wells: And I think that if they had been lacking, and if the super-salesman from Don Mills had not been here, the people of this province would have been the worse.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): The Premier decided he could do without him very quickly. He was the first one to go.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, what I really want to talk about today, as I say, is another aspect of this whole problem. First, I want to perhaps give what I would say are some of my personal feelings and they are these: The root cause of this problem we are discussing today, the root cause of unemployment, is inflation, and the blame for it falls on each one of us.

Mr. J. Renwick: Over there!

Hon. Mr. Wells: When I say each one of us, I am not talking about governments or parties; I am talking about the member for Scarborough North, the member for Scarborough West, the member for Wentworth and the member for Downsview—everyone here.

Mr. Singer: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Because I think when we look around and see what has gone on in our society over the past few years we cannot but be convinced that the blame for inflation lies with us.

Mr. Lewis: Who are you talking about?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Companies, no matter what they say, have wanted more profit. Labour unions, no matter what they say to the contrary, have wanted more wages. Landlords have wanted more rent. Merchants have wanted higher prices. Mr. Speaker, even we in this Legislature have wanted increases in our salaries.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): They need more money. They like to eat.

Mr. Martel: They like eating.

Hon. Mr. Wells: And so it has gone around and around in our whole society. We have all wanted more, we have raised prices, we have got fantastic wage settlements, such as the construction industry. We have seen people raise rents, and time and time again it has been put to us that we—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): But we have produced more.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Not as much.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —as individuals in this society, Mr. Speaker, who love freedom and believe in freedom, it has been put to us—

Mr. Lawlor: This is a lecture in elementary uneconomics.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —that we voluntarily should do something about this and we have rejected it.

Mr. Lewis: What kind of nonsense is this?

Mr. J. Renwick: Who determines the prices of the basic commodities in a society?

Hon. Mr. Wells: They have rejected it, we rejected this and I said all segments of society have rejected it.

Mr. Speaker, we have been asked if we would voluntarily control wages, we have rejected it. People have been asked if they would voluntarily control prices, they rejected it. We have rejected this and the Prime Minister of Canada has said this—much as I place much of the blame on him for the situation we are in now—he said that the people of this country rejected any voluntary programme to put any controls on those things which govern our economy and so we were faced with inflation. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Lawlor: Do not blame us all. Do not blame poor old Elliott.

Mr. J. Renwick: He is engaged in a little visionary thinking. That is not why we were faced with inflation.

Mr. Lewis: That has nothing to do with inflation.

Mr. J. Renwick: Absolutely nothing to do with inflation at all.

Mr. Randall: They have verbal diarrhoea over there.

Hon. Mr. Wells: You, know, they could argue on and on but the—

Mr. J. Renwick: This is an administered price economy and that is what causes inflation.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The Prime Minister said on the weekend that the government had to cool the economy after Canadians refused to accept voluntary wage and profit guidelines last year.

Mr. Lewis: The hon. minister would do better quoting his own Premier. His words tend to make more sense from time to time.

Mr. Makarchuk: That is not what the Treasurer says.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I say I really do not want to talk on this part of the problem, but I am just saying because we found ourselves in this particular situation—

Mr. Lewis: Someone has to come to your defence.

Mr. Makarchuk: He should be out in the back benches if he is going to talk that way.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —Ottawa felt they had to act and they acted and because of their monetary and fiscal policies unemployment has resulted.

Mr. Lewis: When does the minister think we will come back to this?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Now I do not agree with their policies, because I think their monetary and fiscal policies, coupled with the very great fear and uncertainty of the Benson white paper, have caused jobs not to be created. Jobs either disappeared or they were not created, and these policies have brought us to the dire position that we find ourselves in today.

Many of my colleagues have talked about some of the answers to this, but as I say, Mr. Speaker, the other dimensions—the new dimension that I want to add to this problem today, which I think just again shows the urgency of all of us finding a solution and taking action on it—is to look at this problem in terms of people, not just economic statistics, cold economic statistics, which we become very accustomed to deal in when we deal with a problem such as this.

We should look at this problem in terms of human beings—men, women and children who are being desperately affected because of this situation, because of this problem today.

These are the people—the men, the women and the little children—who, Mr. Speaker, become the pawns in this great economic game that is being played by a lot of unnamed government mandarins and 300 or so staff in the Prime Minister's office in Ottawa. These are the people who are being affected and I would like to say something about the way they are being affected and the way all of us are being affected in relation to the programmes of our department.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, our department deals with income maintenance programmes. We are charged with offering assistance to those who, for one reason or another, are unable to provide for themselves—those who do not have sufficient income for the basic necessities of life. Of course, Mr. Speaker, one result of the unemployment situation is this—that there are a great many more people than is normal who find themselves now in the position of not being able to work and obtain an income through the normal economic process.

By their nature, Mr. Speaker, of course, the programmes of our department do not in themselves alleviate the unemployment problem or indeed the economic conditions which lead to it. But our programmes tend to reflect the economic conditions that we now find ourselves in and, of course, when unemployment increases, as we now find it, there is naturally an accompanying increase in our assistance caseloads.

The programme in The Department of Social and Family Services most directly connected with this problem is our general welfare assistance programme, a programme that is administered by the municipalities under The General Welfare Assistance Act. In this past year there has, of course, been a rapid acceleration in payments under this programme. I should say, in use of statistics here and I am just going to give a few of them, a case means either a single person or a family and this is counted regardless of the size of the family. A beneficiary means in this case everybody—a child, a parent, a single person—everyone together who is receiving assistance; all persons and dependants who are receiving assistance.

Mr. Speaker, the January figures, that is the number of cases on general assistance, have gone from about 40,000 in January, 1968, to 43,000 in January, 1969; 48,000 in January, 1970; and 76,000 in January, 1971. I would draw your attention Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the caseload figure for January, 1971, is a 58 per cent increase over January, 1970.

During the same period, 1968-1971, the number of beneficiaries, that is the total number of men, women and children who are on our programme, not just cases, has risen as follows: 109,000 in January, 1968; 116,000 in January, 1969; 127,000 in January, 1970; 188,000 in January, 1971. This means an acceleration, Mr. Speaker, in the past year from 127,000 to 188,000—an increase of 48 per cent.

We have slightly more up-to-date figures, Mr. Speaker, for Metropolitan Toronto. You may be interested in knowing that in February of this year there were about 59,000 beneficiaries on our general welfare assistance programme as compared with 37,600 one year ago, an increase of some 57,000.

Expenditures, Mr. Speaker, under the general welfare assistance programme have, of course, increased along with the rise in the caseload figure. In 1970-1971, a gross amount of $58,834,000 was voted for assistance under this programme, under which The General Welfare Assistance Act, of which $21,580,000 would be the net provincial cost.

Mr. Speaker, our actual expenditures for this year have been approximately $87,240,000, with $32,127,000 net.

It will be recalled that supplementary estimates were presented here last September for an additional $22 million and we had to approach the Treasury Board just recently for a Treasury Board order for another $6.5 million. This means, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: This is not the seat of the member for Don Mills; not his seat—a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —the complete expenditures for general welfare have gone up now to about $109 million—$109 million, including the municipal share. This, as I say, is something in the neighbourhood of a 40 to 50 per cent increase over last year.

Mr. Sargent: How much federal money?

Hon. Mr. Wells: This in itself—and I will show you, Mr. Speaker—shows the effect that the unemployment problem is having. Now in connection with the general assistance programme, the Ontario seasonal employment programme, which was brought in specifically to offer jobs to those who did not have them and who were on welfare provided employment for a number of recipients of general welfare allowance. A total of 4,420 men have been employed on this programme and of them 2,400 were referred by welfare offices. I might say, Mr. Speaker, that a majority of those referred by welfare offices were heads of families and many of them—about 95 per cent—are still employed under this programme.

Mr. Speaker, the family benefits programme has also increased from a year ago. In March of 1970 there were 61,500 active family benefits cases and in March, 1971, there were about 70,500. We have been unable to determine exactly how this caseload has increased, but there are certainly indications that a number of cases of people who are disabled and aged have come to our caseload because they can no longer find part-time employment or do the kind of things that they were able to do when employment was more prevalent and they now, therefore, find themselves as one of our cases.

And it appears that if these other sources of support are available to them, that it is reasonable to assume that the unemployment situation is one of the reasons why alternative resources are not as readily available to this group as formerly, and they now find themselves on the family benefits programme.

The next few statistics I think are very interesting and they point up what I referred to early in my remarks—

Mr. Martel: When something is asked in the minister's department one gets a nebulous answer.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —the human effect that this problem has on people. It is significant to note that the number of cases on family benefits resulting from desertions and divorces has increased sharply in this recent year. I think that these statistics are very relevant to our current social and economic situation and conditions.

In March, 1969, there were 6,400 cases receiving family benefits who were deserted wives. In March, 1970 there were 8,671 and in March, 1971, there were 11,303, in other words an increase of one-third in women or people who had been deserted receiving family benefit allowances.

In the case of divorces, Mr. Speaker, in the figures from March, 1970, to March 1971, there has been an increase of 70 per cent, from 1,550 divorce cases receiving family benefit to 2,517.

It seems very likely that the stresses resulting from unemployment have been a factor in this very rapid increase in the number of persons seeking to turn to public assistance as a result of divorce and desertion. We all know that lack of employment brings with it attendant family problems and can contribute to the breakup of families.

I think that in looking at these figures in this context, Mr. Speaker, it is also interesting to note that the number of cases of widows and family benefits where social and economic pressures are not an important factor, have actually decreased slightly over the same period. Whereas there were 6,322 widows receiving family benefits allowance in March, 1970, there are now only 6,135—a decrease. Costs of the family benefits programme have of course increased proportionately just as our general welfare programme has increased.

Mr. Speaker, no one questions that unemployment as a problem goes much beyond the aspects of economics and statistics. It affects people. It seems clear that the most deplorable feature of unemployment is its social consequences and its impact on those temporarily unable to be productive and working members of the society. We all know what it means in our society to have a job. It means a position and a recognized place in the community. It means a regular income. It means being a productive and contributing member of the community, and it has a bearing Mr. Speaker, on one's feelings of self worth and self respect.

In times such as this when a person may be laid off through no fault of his own, the first thing we usually consider is the loss of his pay cheque. But, Mr. Speaker, we should remember that all the other attitudes and feelings which are a part of his job are also threatened, and all of them are an important part of the social fabric. It is appalling to consider the cumulative effects of these social consequences of unemployment.

In our assistance programmes we have attempted and we have accepted the principle that those unable to work, and those able to work but for whom jobs are not available, should secure social assistance. In this province our legislation establishes social assistance as a right when conditions of eligibility are met and through this means this government ensures that income will be maintained and that a person's dignity and self respect will be supported. However, Mr. Speaker, as a person I believe, and our society believes, in the economic and social value of work. This debate and the general public concern about unemployment demonstrate that. The great majority of those securing assistance who are employable would much prefer to be employed. They do not want to be unemployed.

While I would not for a moment downgrade the importance of or the need for social assistance for those out of work, I would stress that there are severe negative social effects from this problem of unemployment and, of course, the best solution is a return to a high level of employment. And I would say we in this government are doing our share to insure that, and we are putting all our efforts to this end. But I would say, let us see Ottawa do the same. Let us see them quit putting us on.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I should try to cover part of the ground—

Mr. Speaker: I think perhaps the hon. member might move the adjournment of the debate because in five minutes he probably is not going to make any contribution.

Mr. Farquhar moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before moving the adjournment of the House, tomorrow we will move on to the Throne debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 7, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We have many guests with us today in the galleries. In the east gallery are students from Holy Family Separate School in Toronto; in both galleries from Danforth Technical School, Toronto. Later today we will have students from George Brown College here in Toronto; from Rosethorn Public School in Toronto, and from the Laurentian Senior Public School in Kitchener.

Statements by the ministry.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): So that is why the minister is here.

Hon. C. J. S. Apps (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, I am usually always here for prayers.

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to announce changes in the regulations under The Department of Correctional Services Act, 1968. One of the significant changes provides for an extension of the authority of superintendents of correctional institutions to permit them to grant temporary absence from institutions of up to five days for humanitarian or other rehabilitative reasons.

The new regulations also provide for changes in the names of various adult correctional institutions, including the replacement of the terms "reformatory" and "industrial farm" with the term "correctional centre."

Under the temporary absence programme introduced by the department on August 26, 1969, superintendents were authorized to grant absences of up to three days to selected offenders. This type of absence has been utilized to permit men and women serving sentences in our institutions to go into the community for a variety of reasons.

For example, individuals have been permitted absences to go for job interviews, to arrange academic and/or vocational training programmes, and for numerous other reasons related to their rehabilitation.

One of the widest uses has been to permit individuals to return to their homes during a family crisis such as a serious illness, or a death in a person's immediate family. Authority to grant absences of up to three days was vested in superintendents primarily to ensure a flexible and immediate response to emergency situations. Empowering superintendents to grant absences of up to five days in length will facilitate distances. In the past, absences of longer than three days required the approval of the deputy minister.

Under the present amendment, absences of from six to 15 days, or a series of daily absences to permit a person to participate in a training and/or educational programme, or to work at gainful employment in the community during the day, will continue to require the approval of the deputy minister.

Approximately 98.5 per cent of those who have participated in the temporary absence programme during the past 17 months have done so successfully. Of a total of 2,245 participants in this period, only 32 have had their privileges revoked. The success of the programme has been due, in large measure, to the sound judgement of superintendents and their staff at institutions in the screening of applicants.

The terms "reformatory" and "industrial farm" do not reflect the wide variety of programmes provided in our correctional institutions today. Therefore these names are to be replaced by the term "correctional centre," which more appropriately describes our present programmes and facilities; for example, the institution formerly known as Monteith Industrial Farm will be called "Monteith Correctional Centre."

The department operates five training centres which provide academic and vocational training for young men 16 to 25 years of age. In the past there has been some confusion of these centres with training schools for juveniles. Therefore, to distinguish them from training schools, our training centres for young men will be known in future as "adult training centres". For example, the institution known formerly as the Ontario Training Centre, Brampton, will be known as the Brampton Adult Training Centre.

These changes in regulations will go into effect as of the date they are published in the Ontario Gazette.

Mr. Speaker, as this is my first statement in the House as minister of this department, I would like to conclude my remarks by informing the hon. members that since being appointed to this post I have travelled across a great deal of the province visiting various institutions. I met many staff members and held discussions with inmate councils and, through a series of conferences, I have met the superintendents of all our institutions. I also met many provincial judges at a recent judges' seminar.

I am impressed by the staff of my department at all levels. I realize that there is still much to be done in the field of corrections—that we must continue to move forward. I am confident that with the support of the dedicated team of correctional workers drawn together by my predecessor and colleague, the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman), my department will continue to consolidate the gains of recent years and to innovate programmes to meet the needs of tomorrow. I look forward to co-operating with all the hon. members and to keeping members informed of progress and new programmes within the correctional system.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Just tear down Millbrook.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): I hope the hon. minister is not going to follow the closed-door programme of his predecessor.

Hon. Mr. Apps: Pardon? Sorry, I did not hear the hon. member on that.

Mr. Pitman: Tear down Millbrook.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

NIAGARA REGION TAXATION

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier if he is still uncertain as to whether or not he will meet the delegation from the city of St. Catharines over the difficulties they are experiencing with regional government?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Premier): Mr. Speaker, I have referred this matter to the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales). If the matter is not resolved I have indicated that I would be quite prepared to meet with the mayor of St. Catharines.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: They are going to meet with the Minister of Municipal Affairs in the near future and if that is not satisfactory then the Premier is prepared to meet with them?

Mr. J. Renwick: The Leader of the Opposition got that right. That is what the Premier said. That is what the man said.

METRO TORONTO WELFARE BUDGET

Mr. Nixon: Question: Is the Prime Minister planning to meet with Metro Chairman Campbell with regard to his request for additional support on the welfare budget of Metropolitan Toronto which has been increased 50 per cent over last year?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Trudeau turned that down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Metro chairman had a singular lack of success with the federal administration. I do not know that he has requested an appointment with me. Certainly if he requests such an appointment I would be quite prepared to see him.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to ask further if the Premier would look with favour on his request to improve the contribution that this province makes toward the problem of welfare in the metropolitan area?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that we have not had a meeting with the chairman of Metro and in that he has not made any request of me at this point, I will not speculate as to what my reaction will be.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: If, in fact, the Premier's reaction were positive would it not be possible—even without an agreement at the federal level—to make an additional contribution which would be met at a minimum of 50 per cent by the government of Canada, whether they agree with the need or not?

Mr. Speaker: Of course, this is an entirely theoretical question which does not form part of the question period. If the Prime Minister wishes to give an answer—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, just to amplify my first answer. The request has come in now for a meeting and a meeting with the Metro chairman is, at this moment, being arranged.

Mr. V. Singer (Downsview): Ho! That was quick information. Where did the Premier get that from—a carrier pigeon?

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Singer: What will they think of next?

Mr. Trotter: Assuming the Premier does meet with the Metro chairman—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the hon. member want us to meet with them?

Mr. Nixon: Sure we do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Good.

Mr. Singer: We just like the Premier to be informed, that is all. Find out what is going on.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale has the floor for a supplementary.

Mr. Trotter: I have a supplementary of the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is there any possibility that the government will have a policy in order to assist any municipality—Metro Toronto or not—in order to assist them with the increasing welfare lists that they have? Has the Prime Minister any overall policies?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there has been no determination of any alteration in government policy as it relates to welfare benefits and there is nothing further that I can add at this moment.

Mr. Singer: Naturally.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF LAND

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Did his department take part in the study, the results of which were announced yesterday, indicating that 92 per cent of the recreational lands in at least one township immediately north of Sault Ste. Marie is owned and controlled by foreign interests, and that the general average is 46 per cent in the Lake Superior area north of Sault Ste. Marie?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the study that the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Did the minister not make a statement—I believe about six months ago—that his department was undertaking a study of this type so that the government could be informed as to the extent to which our recreational lands had been lost to Canadian control?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I did have a committee within my own department to study the terms of—not the terms of reference—but what other jurisdictions were doing, what other provinces were doing in Canada and what other states were doing as to the disposal of their own land for cottage purposes.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): What is the minister talking about? British Columbia passed the bill last year as I pointed out to him.

Mr. Trotter: He does not know what he is doing.

Mr. Sopha: Six years ago.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The study indicated to us in a general manner the areas in the province where cottage land had been sold. It was a study in a very general area, but it did not go into specifics as to how much Crown land you are referring to in the Sault Ste. Marie area; this would be a very extensive study.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Was the member referring to Crown land or private land?

Mr. Nixon: The land is now owned privately. It was no doubt originally Crown land.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): So was the county of Brant.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The study that I had, Mr. Speaker, referred to Crown land.

Mr. Nixon: I think one of the few Canadian residents in that township is the former Attorney General.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say—yes, my cottage is in the township of Fisher, and the lands there have been owned by the Americans since, I would think, about the turn of the century; purchased as lumbering property. Much of the share has been reacquired by Canadians and others, but that is a situation that has prevailed over the years and it is the same through other townships in that area.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You mean during the Hepburn regime, too?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I would think during the Hepburn regime.

Mr. MacDonald: Interesting.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Lands and Forests tell us when the results of his study and survey can be seen by the members of the House?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: This study, Mr. Speaker, was a study within our own department. As a result of that study, an announcement was made in the Throne Speech whereby cottage lands in the future would only be leased and Canadians would be given preference. We would be glad to send him a copy of the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: I do not need a copy of the Throne Speech, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to see a copy of the study that is available to the minister. Surely, if that was the basis for the Throne Speech announcement, rather than the urging of opposition members, we should have the information that is available to him. Would he undertake to give it to us?

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough had a supplementary.

Mr. Pitman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether it is a supplementary to the original question, but it is a supplementary based on the minister's reply. When will his department have information as to how one goes about leasing lands and forests land? Apparently at the present moment there is no way by which anyone can lease anything in the Province of Ontario from The Department of Lands and Forests.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this information will be known in the very near future.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

Mr. MacDonald: Next week's statement before the orders of the day.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will take his turn. The member for Scarborough West is next for a supplementary.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I am certain

I recollect accurately that the minister informed the House he was taking an inventory of recreational land holdings in certain parts of northern Ontario, and that he would share that inventory with us when it was completed.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I have just informed the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, that this study was completed and I would be pleased to make it available.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, I understood the minister's answer to suggest that it was a study of approximate or parallel legislation. As I recall it, it was a study of the nationality of recreational land holdings in northern Ontario and that he would share that with us and he indicated so in the House at the time.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the study that I had undertaken was a study of the amount of Crown land that had been sold for cottage purposes to Canadians and to non-Canadians in the last 20 years and the percentage in those areas. It was sort of a general study and this information I will be pleased to make available.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: The minister would be pleased—sorry, he will make it available?

Mr. Singer: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the minister yet able to tell us whether the leasing arrangements will involve leases of nine years or 99 years or 999 years and what the rates of rental are going to be?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: As I just indicated, Mr. Speaker, in the very near future this information will be available.

Mr. Singer: Yes, yes.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary, in view of the loss of private recreational land to non-resident ownership as well as Crown land, is the minister prepared finally to do a major inventory of what is left to Ontario by way of our own ownership and release that to the House, on the basis of which policy can be made?

Mr. Sopha: It is too late.

Mr. Lewis: The government is losing most of northern Ontario.

Mr. Trotter: It is a giveaway programme.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I do not know of any jurisdiction in the world where private land is interfered with. At the present time, in 1971, we have more land in Ontario in public ownership than at any time previously. We have close to 200,000 acres more now than we had in 1961.

Mr. Trotter: And we have more foreign-owned land, too.

QUETICO PARK

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a further question of the Minister of Lands and Forests. Will he comment on the statements made to the advisory committee on Quetico Park, that there is in fact only one game warden supervising the provincial regulations in that area—I think he calls them conservation officers—is the minister satisfied with the policing of government game regulations in Quetico Park?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, we have increased the number of conservation officers in the province. A year ago we also increased the aerial detections in addition to our own planes, and I am not aware of any problems in Quetico. If the member can bring to my attention specific areas I would be pleased to look into it.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question, really in response to the minister's comment: Is he not aware that the charge was made before the advisory committee on Quetico that the park is—I think the word used was a "mess," because of lack of supervision? If he is not aware of that perhaps he would look into it and give us some further information.

A supplementary question associated with this same matter: Can the minister assure the House that the ban on logging and lumbering operations in a part of the park, which he announced some months ago, is in fact a permanent ban, and not just a holding order?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that public hearings are held—for instance, today in Thunder Bay; they will be in Toronto next week, April 14 and 15. This advisory committee will be reporting some time this year and I am very optimistic that this whole matter of Quetico will be resolved within the next few months. As I indicated in the House two months ago, in the northwestern area of the park, under volume agreements, there is a moratorium. The only area that is logged at the present time—there was a bit of logging, but none now; all logging has ceased until next fall; there is no logging going on during the summer months—is somewhere less than one per cent. I believe 15,000 to 18,000 cords were cut during the past winter.

Mr. Nixon: One final question then, Mr. Speaker, really for clarification: Am I to understand then that the area which is covered by what the minister calls a moratorium, is simply something to hold the situation until the review of the committee, or is it a permanent moratorium?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I would say, Mr. Speaker, that this is more or less a permanent moratorium.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): On the same question, can the minister indicate who the government officials are who are using government airplanes to fly into the park and establish structures?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: No. I would like to get that information. I would be pleased to look into it.

JUG MILK COMPANIES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Is he undertaking any further investigation on the operation of jug milk stores, particularly in light of the rather expensive practice of confiscating the manager's deposits without any right of a hearing or appeal?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I have no investigation that I am aware of going on at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I carried on some investigation when I was in The Department of Justice. As far as I am aware we have no complaint on this matter before us. That may be the case. If it is so I will check and see, but there is no general investigation going on.

Mr. Nixon: A further question, Mr. Speaker. Was there not an investigation undertaken—

Mr. Speaker: Is this a supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: —a supplementary—undertaken by the minister's predecessor in the matters concerning franchises? Was it not begun under that committee?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: We have a committee on the studying of franchises which has made an interim report recently and I met with that committee—that is, on the general question of franchises. We have that study going on and I expect the final report from that committee before the end of this month.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of clarification, will the minister undertake to review this situation that I have put before him?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Yes, most certainly.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has a supplementary?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, is the minister not aware that I asked for a study of this particular matter some nine months ago by the previous minister and that it was referred by him to the franchise committee, and that the study obviously is inadequate if the minister does not know anything about it?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would listen, I just said—

Mr. Deans: I am listening; he knows nothing about it.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —that I am aware there is a committee studying franchises and they have reported to me once. I have met with them; they have given an interim report. They have promised their final report before the end of this month. It is too bad I have to be repetitive, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: Well, it is too bad that I have to be repetitive. By way of a supplementary question, is the minister not aware that an investigation was asked for in this House of the operations of the Becker Milk Company as a result of their withholding managers' deposits? And is he not aware that the previous minister sloughed it off?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any such thing. I do not pretend to be aware of every question the hon. member asks or demands, but I do know that there is a committee on franchises, which has been working, which has been studying, which has reported and, if I may repeat again, Mr. Speaker, will make a final report before the end of this month.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Parkdale has a supplementary?

Mr. Trotter: I was wondering, Mr. Speaker, if the minister would table a copy of the interim report of that committee on franchises?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will not undertake to do that, Mr. Speaker, at this moment. Such reports are generally for the use of the department for framing its policy—

Mr. MacDonald: Why?

Mr. Lewis: Why?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I will not undertake to do that at this moment. It may be possible—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If the members want to get my answer, there may be information in such reports that is not for the use of the House but for the use of the department. I will have to judge that when I get the report.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Prime Minister in this instance: In view of the indications from the presidents of Imperial Oil, Gulf Oil and Shell Canada that gasoline prices are likely to rise in the immediate future, has the government requested a justification for the price hike which the consumer will pay?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that report in the press. The government has not requested a justification from those three firms of the possible increase in price.

Mr. Lewis: Such precision! May I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question?

Does not the Prime Minister feel that in the public interest these companies should be brought before the Ontario Energy Board or at least a committee of the Legislature and requested to legitimize their increases?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I say, I have read this in the report. I am not prepared to suggest that they should go before the Energy Board. Quite frankly, I am not sure the Energy Board's area of jurisdiction would include this, and I do not anticipate that the standing committee related to certain matters of this House would necessarily be involved with this discussion.

Mr. Nixon: But they could be and should be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not know that they should be.

Mr. Lewis: Why not? Does the Prime Minister not want those committees to have the autonomy he implied?

Mr. J. Renwick: It is energy, is it not?

Mr. Lewis: Would the Premier indicate whether there will be any special effort to cope with the very sharp anticipated rises in northern Ontario, which are always disproportionate, as some of his colleagues recently pointed out, and which will be felt in this instance?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton)—the new Minister of Transportation and Communications to be—indicated that there is a study under way within his department as it relates to the cost of goods in and out of the north.

Mr. MacDonald: Tra-la, tra-la, that has been going on for 50 years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is there.

IMPORTS OF ALBERTAN OIL

Mr. Lewis: The minister when he was provincial Treasurer refused to tell us of his conversations with Imperial Oil at a previous time.

May I ask the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, has the government of Ontario been consulted in the National Board's report that imports of Albertan oil will be restricted in the case of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): I think, Mr. Speaker, that question would be more appropriately referred to the Minister of Mines under whose jurisdiction matters of energy are now lodged.

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Minister of Mines: Has the Province of Ontario been consulted in the proposal put forward by the National Energy Board that imports of oil from Alberta into Ontario would be decreased substantially?

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question by the leader of the New Democratic Party, to my knowledge—and I have not been in touch with the Energy Board—I know nothing about this request at all. I would be glad to find out and report back to him.

Mr. Lewis: Some interest should be taken in matters of energy.

Mr. J. Renwick: You will find the National Energy Board in Ottawa—

PUBLIC TRANSIT POLICY

Mr. Lewis: When it is not in Fort Frances.

May I ask another question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker? When can the Premier give some indication of government policy on public transit in view of the efforts to extend the Scarborough Expressway, now that we have dealt with the Spadina Expressway for the moment?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there were references, of course, to public transit in the Throne Speech. It was also indicated in the Throne Speech the budget would be coming down on April 26, if memory serves me correctly, I expect there will be more elaboration on that particular situation at that time.

Mr. Lewis: That is all, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member object?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

MONITORING STATIONS FOR AIR POLLUTION

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management: Will the minister consider setting up more monitoring stations in the Windsor area so that the air pollution index may be recorded for pollution coming from the industrial complex on the east side of town, rather than the monitors as they are now, recording pollution from the United States?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, that is where we assume most of it is coming from. The present location of the monitoring station on University Avenue was indicated to give the most accurate reading for the index as far as this whole city is concerned. It is quite possible that we will extend that monitoring service and add further stations to our index, as we intend to do in Sudbury, but in the meantime we are trying to include other cities in the index. We can only do so much at once.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary: Is the minister aware that the monitoring station on the unemployment insurance office building, because of the prevailing westerlies, does not give a true recording of Windsor pollution but really records a pollution coming in from the United States, and the setting up of a monitor in the east part of the city, where the heavy industry is located, would give a more accurate picture and at the same time would be able to test the effectiveness of controls that are being presently implemented on the part of Ford Motor Company, Chrysler Manufacturing, Hiram Walkers, Dominion Forge and so on?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there are now two stations in operation in Windsor—one at University Avenue and one located at the Morton dock just south of Windsor. These are, of course, fed into the index system to give an accurate reading. Now the hon. member requests that we establish stations in the more heavily industrial area. I might say, first of all, that we do have monitoring stations in the area of the Ford Motor Company and Chrysler plants. These stations are not included in the index but they are used, as the hon. member indicates, to judge whether or not these industries are complying with our orders under The Air Pollution Control Act. It is quite possible that by having these particular stations, which are close to these industries, in the index, you would not get a fair median reading of the atmospheric conditions over the whole city.

Mr. B. Newman: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware that the locations of the two stations today are on the west side of the city and because of prevailing westerlies they do not record anything on the east side of the community, and only record it on days on which the wind blows from the east?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has a rather incorrect impression or idea of what the air pollution index is intended to do. We are not attempting to measure winds or any pollution that may be carried by prevailing winds. We are attempting to measure the condition over the city under certain atmospheric conditions and particularly when there are inversions. As the hon. member will recall, the more serious situations when we get the higher index readings, were days when there were no winds. There were no prevailing winds of any kind when there was stagnation, and this is when we get an accurate reading of the condition over a particular city.

Mr. B. Newman: Another supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary.

Mr. B. Newman: Is the minister aware that when the pollution index records 20 on his two present monitors in the area of a heavy industry, it could be 60 or 80, so we definitely are not getting a true reading?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

ORCHARD HOUSE CONTRACTS

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Public Works. In the matter of the demolition of Orchard House at the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital, did the highest bidder, C. S. Wark, who bid $89,000 receive the contract, and did they subsequently sublet their sub-contract for work to the lowest bidder, Apex, who bid $50,000, and if so, what happens to the $39,000?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, from memory, as I recall there were five bids—four or five bids. The low bidder did not cover all the requirements of the bid, including, I think, some of the filling of the excavations with grass or sodding. The lowest bidder who conformed to the tender call was Wark, and its tender, I believe, was $83,000.

Mr. Deans: The highest bidder.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The highest tender—this was the cost of taking it down. They were not paying us anything. We had no bid in which anybody offered us money for the building. This was the charge to us and the other two bids were from, I think, Toronto firms, and they were in the order of $110,000 to $115,000.

Mr. Deans: Might I ask the minister by way of a supplementary question, is it true that Wark subsequently sub-contracted the work to Apex, who bid $50,000 in the initial bid?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am afraid I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker, because I think it was last week that the contract was signed, but—

Mr. Deans: April 2.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —I can find out and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has the answer to a question asked yesterday.

POSSIBLE AID FOR GREENHOUSE INDUSTRY

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to provide the answer to the hon. member for Essex South, whose question I took as notice yesterday. Capital grants are available to the greenhouse operators, including those who produce flowers in greenhouses. On the question concerning the application of retail sales tax, it is dealt with the same as it is in the purchase of any other building material. The sales tax does apply to their particular purchases.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): As a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, is the minister experiencing any difficulty in trying to determine whether the flower producers are in fact a part of agriculture, or are they considered as industry for other purposes in this province; and can any direction be given in this regard in relation to matters affecting not only sales tax but The Department of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Any questions pertaining to The Department of Labour, I think, more properly might be addressed to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton), Mr. Speaker. But as far as our department is concerned, we look upon the production of flowers as an agricultural activity in that it involves the use of soil and, as all crops do, the use of sun and air and water in proper amounts.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Essex-Kent.

NUTRIENT REMOVAL PROGRAMME

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management. Has the minister got any plans to assist municipalities in installing new equipment to take phosphate out of their sewage in order for them to meet the deadline he has set up?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, it is hoped that our programme of assistance—as far as nutrient removal is concerned—as indicated in yesterday's news releases, will be implemented in time for the municipalities to meet deadlines as laid down by the IJC. There has been no decision on that. I have been meeting and having discussions with the federal Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Davis, who has indicated that he is prepared to accept the IJC recommendations and to assist the Ontario government and its municipalities in meeting these deadlines, and until those talks are concluded, I really cannot say anything definite to the hon. member.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Family—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview has the floor.

SCHOOL FEES INCREASE

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Welch), but since the matter to which I refer may well have taken place under the former Minister of Education, I would like to ask the question of the hon. Prime Minister. Is it true that The Department of Education approved an increase of fees for the DeVry Institute of Technology on 970 Lawrence Avenue West from $350 to $400 a quarter? What was the justification for this increase and is this a general increase across the province in institutes of this kind?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess I did not hear the name of the institution.

Mr. Young: DeVry Institute of Technology on Lawrence Avenue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am just guessing that this is a private trade school and the question of whether the fee increase is subject to the trade school regulations is doubtful. I will ask the Minister of Education to get the specific information, but I think we will find that this is not within the purview—the determination of the amount of fee—of The Department of Education. It is a private trade school, upon which there are no grants payable, the only supervision being that of bonding to make sure that the students who pay fees receive the courses, and so forth. I do not think we are involved in fee structures.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary: Perhaps the Prime Minister is not aware that the letter which went out announcing that increase said, and I quote: "This increase has been approved by The Department of Education authorities."

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot take responsibility for what an institution may say. As I say, this is a private trade school. I will find out for the hon. member whether fee increases or fee determination is subject to the approval of the department. I will have the Minister of Education let the hon. member know.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Highways and Transport has the reply to a question asked by the member for Yorkview.

SPEED GOVERNORS FOR AUTOMOBILES

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can report back to the hon. member that the province has agreed with the federal government that the responsibility for safety in cars at the point of manufacture or import is the proper responsibility of the federal government. It is assumed by the Minister of Transport for Canada.

I would advise the hon. member that my predecessor has made representation to the federal Minister of Transport for Canada that consideration be given to the matter that he expressed concern about yesterday.

Mr. Young: A supplementary then, Mr. Speaker: May I ask the hon. minister is it not true that the provincial authorities set the speed limits on the highway? I suppose this is a mechanical thing rather than simply a speed limit. The two are interrelated.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is an interrelation, of course, to the extent that speed limits are, in fact, set by the provincial government, The Department of Transport. This is quite correct. The other, however, relates to matters concerning the manufacture of automobiles. As I have stated, that is, in initial terms, the responsibility of the federal government. However, as I say, my predecessor has made representation to the federal Minister of Transport in this respect.

Mr. Young: Is this not a method of enforcing the speed limit?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Right!

Mr. Speaker: Member for—a supplementary?

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Does this responsibility of the federal government also include children's car seats? If so, will the minister not be able to take any action on the request from the consumers' association that standards be set up?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, is the member talking about the portable car seats that go into an automobile? I do not know that these are manufactured by the automobile manufacturers. I rather doubt that they are.

Mr. Shulman: Ford and General Motors.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Probably, probably. It could be taken up in the manner that the hon. member suggested. I will be happy to pursue that for him.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York Centre.

SALE TAX LOSSES

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A question of the Minister of Revenue: Is the minister aware that substantial sales tax revenue is now being lost on the sale of securities by Ontario residents when they deal with brokers outside the province?

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in responding to that statement, I must say that I am aware of it. A change in the policy was recently made so that Ontario security dealers would not be in the position of losing transactions simply on account of the tax.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a promising maiden speech.

Mr. Deacon: I have a supplementary to that. Is the proposed legislation going to put the responsibility for payment of tax on the seller of the security as well as on the broker so that the tax will be collected by the province?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: I will have to take that part of the question as notice because the original question was different from the supplementary. I shall inform the member accordingly.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton Mountain.

USE OF PARK FACILITIES

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management: Can the minister inform the members of this House as to when the general public might be able to use the newly acquired facilities at Fifty-Point Park?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This summer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deans: After they have got something; it took the government what, 15 years after it started?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Highways and Transport—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: This summer.

Mr. Speaker:—has an answer to the question asked by the member for Huron-Bruce.

DEAD ELM REMOVAL PROGRAMME

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. This is in response to a supplementary question asked by the hon. member yesterday. As I recall, he asked what the price difference was, or the difference in quotations on German-made and Canadian-made chain saws. Am I correct?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Sorry, I did not hear the hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The price varies in accordance with the size of the saw. The price for a German-made 16-inch saw was $209. The price for a Canadian-made 16-inch saw was $236. The price for a Canadian counterpart 16-inch saw was $236. The German saw was $209; the Canadian-made saw $236.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): About $30 difference in price.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The price of a German-made 24-inch saw was $223, and the Canadian 24-inch saw was $244.

As I pointed out to the hon. member yesterday, Mr. Speaker, quotations were obtained on a local basis and the prices vary slightly, as can be expected, by a few dollars, depending on location.

It was necessary, I think, to take into account the matter of servicing these saws; and we also felt that it was desirable to buy the saws locally in the areas where the elms were being cut. To this point in time, Mr. Speaker, we have had no complaints from any of the sellers.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary.

Mr. Gaunt: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister, just as a matter of interest, were these saws purchased through central purchasing?

An hon. member: That is interesting.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Speaker. Time and circumstances did not permit us to go through that routine for the few saws that are involved. I suggest to the hon. member they were purchased locally and the local merchants really liked the business.

Mr. MacDonald: In other words, the minister is opposed to central purchasing?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The member for Huron-Bruce has another supplementary.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker: Does the minister think it would be a good idea to give a 10- to 15-per cent price advantage to products made in this country over and above those of foreign make, as they do in Quebec province, for instance?

An hon. member: Yes; we think we should.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is an expression of opinion that I do not care to make.

Mr. Speaker: The member for High Park has the floor for a supplementary.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Shulman: Does the minister find that going through central purchasing takes an inordinate length of time under all circumstances?

Mr. Speaker: This is not supplementary to the original question. The member for Hamilton East has a supplementary?

Mr. Shulman: Is it not supplementary to his answer?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It was not what I had in mind.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): My supplementary question to the minister is: Is the minister not aware that the previous Minister of Trade and Development established Canadian guidelines and he did permit a percentage mark-down for goods made in Ontario of good quality and price?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I must say, Mr. Speaker, I never thought we would get into the wide-ranging debate we are in today over the purchase of some chain saws to get on with an emergency programme to provide employment.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deans: Answer the question.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: There might be a couple of hundred more people working in Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I really do not know how to respond to the hon. member's question. I did make a comment yesterday—probably a superfluous one at that, Mr. Speaker—but I think the former Minister of Trade and Development would have said that "trade is a two-way street." If we buy something from Germany, they will be more inclined to buy something from us.

An hon. member: Say yes or no.

Mr. Gisborn: It takes a lot of thinking.

Mr. Deans: That pay cheque—

Mr. Sopha: Where is he now?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He is still around.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. Lewis: As soon as those loans came out, the former Minister of Trade and Development went into the hotel business.

$40 MILLION SEWAGE PROGRAMME

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Energy and Resources Management regarding yesterday's announcement of the $40-million programme to install facilities capable of removing a minimum of 80 per cent of phosphorus from sewage at municipal and institutional treatment plants throughout the province. If municipal sewage were recycled as organic fertilizer, would the only reason for this $40 million expenditure then be the fact that phosphates have not been removed from detergents?

An hon. member: Wake up, Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I think I understand the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: He is asking if the government is subsidizing the detergent companies by $40 million.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why does he not answer it then?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Hon members opposite must have caucused this question!

Mr. Speaker, I think that if the recycling of sewage was not effective, as the hon. member indicates, we would still have to make this expenditure because the expenditure is, for the most part—as the information indicates—for nutrient removal only. It is only for nutrient removal and it is an extra expense based on a minimum of 80 per cent removal of phosphorus.

Mr. Burr: A supplementary question: Apart from the human sewage and the phosphates from detergents, what other phosphates would there be to be removed at the sewage plant?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Outside of the possibility of agricultural runoff getting into the sewage system in some way, none.

Mr. Burr: It boils down to the question—

An hon. member: It does not boil down.

Mr. Burr: If it can be boiled down, the question is: Is the minister abandoning his programme to remove phosphates from detergents?

Mr. T. Reid: It boils up.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, Mr. Speaker—this of course is a federal regulation. The maximum amount now is 20 per cent, and we hope that that will be down to nil by 1972.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, does this mean the minister is abandoning his plans to recycle sewage as organic fertilizer?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I did not hear the first part of it.

Mr. Burr: Is the minister abandoning his plans to recycle human sewage as organic fertilizer?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We are not abandoning our plans. That programme is still in the experimental stage. We are still involved in research and in trying to perfect it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Citizenship and Provincial Secretary has the answer to a question asked by the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Okay, tell us all about it. Remember I thought of the idea first.

PLASTIC CONTAINERS FOR ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Just wait, maybe the hon. member did not want that to happen.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sudbury asked the question the other day:

I should like to ask the Provincial Secretary if my understanding is correct that the Liquor Control Board is actually studying the feasibility of dispensing alcoholic beverages in plastic containers in order to decrease the pollution potential of the landscape by the bottles they presently use?

The answer is in three parts.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Yes, no or maybe.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: With respect to beer, the answer is no, because the Brewers' Warehousing Company, operating on behalf of all the breweries of Ontario, has a 96 per cent return on its beer bottles.

Wine: No. However, the wine industry is continually researching to find alternative types of containers. One Ontario winery is presently using a clear plastic bottle for a Canadian sherry.

Mr. Sopha: Right.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Spirits: No. However—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: However, the LCBO is co-operating with the government, and particularly with the litter control council of Ontario, chaired by the Deputy Minister of Energy and Resources Management; a senior representative is sent to each of their meetings. Canadian distillers are keenly interested in the future of plastic containers.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Nipissing have a question?

REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON ALGONQUIN PARK

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received a report from his advisory committee on Algonquin Park, and if so when will he table the report and will he comment on the content of the report?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I have received an interim report and my understanding is that this matter will be discussed at their next meeting, which I believe is April 15.

Is this correct? Is the next meeting of the advisory committee on April 15?

Mr. R. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister if he had received the report from the committee.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Yes, I have received the report.

Mr. R. S. Smith: And is it his intention to table it in the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, that decision has not yet been made.

Mr. Singer: Decisive, pertinent—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired, and I think that the Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship has some very distinguished visitors whom he wishes to introduce to the members of the House.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Mr. Speaker, thank you. I would draw to the attention of the hon. members of the House that in Mr. Speaker's gallery there is a very distinguished parliamentary delegation from Italy. In visiting Canada they are today the guests of the government of the Province of Ontario and of the capital city of Toronto, and I only wish that I had the time to tell you the details of the contribution that these dozen distinguished personages have given to the political and public life of Italy.

Earlier at a luncheon today one of the leaders of the delegation told us of the very high regard that the people of Italy have for Canada, not only because of so many of their kin being in Canada, but because of the very close relationship that has grown in the past decade.

I would like to read into the record the names of the distinguished government.

Senator Antonio Pecoraro, one of the leaders of the delegation; the hon. Giuseppe Fracassi, a co-leader with the delegation; Senator Luigi Anderlini; Senator Vittorio Naldini; Senator Michele Zuccala; the hon. Giacomo Bologna; the hon. Vittore Catella; the hon. Claudio Clanca, the hon. Lorenzo Isgro; the hon. Bruno Corti; the hon. Sebastiano Vincelli; and, as I said to them earlier, Mr. Speaker: Anche per noi è un piacere di darVi il benvenuto nella nostra grande provincia dell Ontario.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, it certainly is, on behalf of my riding, a pleasure to welcome the Italian parliamentary delegation to this country. As you know, Mr. Speaker, I probably have the largest riding of Canadians of Italian descent and of Canadians who are immigrants from Italy in Canada.

I would like, as the first Canadian of Italian descent to sit in this House, to welcome them to Ontario and to Canada: Benvenuti, Parlamentari italiani. Speriamo, che la Loro venuta qui sarà molto felice.

Mr. Lewis: Given the—

Mr. Gaunt: The hon. member cannot speak Italian.

Mr. Lewis: In a moment. Given the profusion of political parties in the Italian legislature, the distinguished parliamentarians will know, of course, that there would inevitably be an additional party here, and we too extend our warm greetings. I know, alas, only one phrase in Italian with which I have been schooled: Votate per il candidato socialista democratico.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. De Monte: I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker—not in a debate with my friend, the leader of the New Democratic Party—but I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that the member for Bologna is sitting in the gallery. He is the member for the area from which my mother and father came from many years ago.

I would like to specifically welcome Mr. Bologna, the member for Venezia Giulia, the member for the Friulano language and people in Italy, and I would specifically like to say that he is a Liberal. We had a long talk at the dinner we had this afternoon, and it certainly is a pleasure to talk to a fellow Liberal from the Parliament of Italy.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence presented the annual report of the inspector of legal offices for the year ending December 31, 1970.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Sir, if I may say to you, the report is not yet available from the printers, but as soon as it is it will be distributed.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): A bit premature is it not?

Mr. Speaker: Presenting reports.

Motions.

Hon. Mr. Davis moves the procedural affairs committee consider the possibility of the House not sitting on Wednesdays to permit the use of the full day for meetings of standing committees and make its recommendation to the House with all convenient dispatch.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT

Mr. T. Reid moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to prohibit landlords of residential premises shutting off the supply of electricity to their tenants.

PUBLIC UTILITIES ACT

Mr. T. Reid moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Public Utilities Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. T. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to add to the Act the provision that a corporation supplying electrical power cannot permit a landlord to shut off the supply of electrical power to residential premises occupied by a tenant.

LANDLORD AND TENANT ACT

Mr. Deans moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is for an amendment to provide for a standard form of lease, and the amendment also provides for a rental review board with power to determine the amount of rent in individual cases where an increase is demanded.

PUBLIC HEALTH ACT

Mr. Deans moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require that drugs and medicines be sold only in childproof drug containers.

ADMINISTRATION OF MEDICINE IN SCHOOLS

Mr. Ben moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to control the administration of medicine in schools.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to control the giving of medicine to children in schools. The bill requires that certain conditions precedent be met before a pupil is given medicine in a school and requires that a record of the giving of medicine be kept in each school. The bill also provides for control of experimental drug programmes in schools and requires a public hearing before such a programme is commenced.

REGULATION OF DRIVER TRAINING SCHOOLS

Mr. Burr moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to provide for the regulation of driver training schools.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Burr: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide for the regulation of the driving school industry in order to improve service to the public. Provision is made for the registration of operators of driving schools and the licensing of driving instructors. Provision is also made for the setting of minimum standards for such schools, the instructors and the instruction given.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day I would like to advise the House, and particularly the member for Downsview, that I have now had Bill 8 introduced by him checked, and I am advised that the new standing order 86 has cleared this problem. While there are two sections of the bill in question which would cause indirectly the expenditure of public funds, they do not specifically direct the allocation of funds; therefore I must conclude that, under the provisions of the new standing order, this is not a money bill.

I would also like to give the members advance notice of Mr. Speaker's dinner. This year we started rather late and the normal time in March, of course, is past, and April is well on its way, and I would ask that the members, and members of the press gallery and those whom Mr. Speaker normally expects to attend will reserve Wednesday evening, May 19, for Mr. Speaker's dinner. In due course invitations will be issued.

Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I begin this Throne Speech entry perhaps in rather unorthodox fashion, by introducing a visitor in the Legislature who is relatively close to the leader of the New Democratic Party. I hesitate to invoke the dynastic spectre in the full light of the Ontario Legislature, but I would like to introduce the federal member for York South, the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party federally, Mr. David Lewis.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Is the member his campaign manager?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I have stayed rather carefully away from involvement in the federal leadership campaign.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Laxer does not think so.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): That is setting a precedent for the leadership campaign.

Mr. Lewis: I repeat: I have stayed rather carefully away from involvement in the federal leadership campaign. I have indicated only those whom I do not support. That encompasses all save one.

I am very pleased to be in the Legislature at this moment. There have of course been, as the young new Premier (Mr. Davis) opposite knows, many memorable moments over the last few months. I recall, as he must recall, that night in mid-February when he ascended to the throne. Some in his party are wont to recollect aspects of that evening which are not as congenial; but the moment that sits best with me is when the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) turned to the microphone and said, if I have it correctly, "Willie, my boy, the best to you."

And I thought, what a stirring of reassurance swept through Ontario as the family compact was asserted yet again to give us that sense of enviable continuity. Ashen-faced and drawn though the Premier might have been on that occasion—nonetheless it did signal just how strongly the crown prince was accepted into the bosom of the family.

It is very hard to imagine, for instance, that the former Premier would have greeted the victory of the current Minister of Health (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) with the words "Bertie, my boy" or the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) as "Bobby." He might have said "D'Arce." Had the present Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) won, on the other hand, he would have announced to the delegates that Mr. Lawrence was the new Premier.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It might have sounded better too.

Mr. Lewis: It is a different Premier today, is it not? A little more sartorial elegance, I may say, in the latter weeks, Mr. Premier, chaperoned as he is by Arthur Harnett and under contract to Alan Eagleson, and programmed by Martin Goldfarb—quite a life he leads as a politician and as a Premier. Not that he is—

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): The hon. member left out my wife.

Mr. Lewis: I am going to get to that. Not that he is undergoing any discernible change, mind you. Both of us have our image problems. I should not be self-righteous about it, but in reference to his observation I was going to say that surely there are limits. What right has Alan Eagleson to comment on the length of Kathy's skirts? I want to tell you something: She is the first lady of this province at this time and Alan should be told to confine his aesthetic observations to hockey, which would be vastly more appropriate.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You mean Bobby Orr's hair?

Mr. Lewis: He does better in that regard. I could not help recalling those insightful quotations of John Zaritsky, unfailingly accurate, alas, in what he writes in the paper from time to time, when he reported that lengthy analysis of the Tory party and said:

Helping Mr. Davis and his ministers decide what to say will be the results of a poll now being taken by Martin Goldfarb Consultants of Toronto. Mr. Goldfarb, whose previous accounts have included a major auto company, a razor blade manufacturer and the federal Liberal Party, says his in-depth research polls will help Mr. Davis find out how to handle the issues. It will show him whether the issues are the result of communication problems or legitimate divergent opinions within Ontario.

The Premier therefore joins the illustrious company of all the other politicians who have turned to democratic sources for their policy formation. One can see Tory commercials with the Premier shaving with a Wilkinson blade, or perhaps—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are they made here?

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact, they may be made here. But I do not want to confine this discussion. As the Premier knows, being a man of great observation, there is a third party in the Legislature. That party has no image problem—as Frank Scott said of William Lyon Mackenzie King—"He had no sides because he never took shape, and he had no shape because he never took sides." So it is fairly easy therefore to quote Trent Frayne about the enigma party—I think he called them the Liberals in an off moment—that they too have this problem. He said in his article on January 16:

For a fact, though, there is another party—

This is the enigma party, the Liberal Party.

—which has made a career since the Second World War of organizing governments in Ottawa and wakes in Ontario. Confronting them is an almost ludicrous paradox. In nine federal elections since 1945, the Liberals have been the leading vote-getting party in Ontario six times. In eight provincial elections since 1943 they have only acquired more than 35 per cent of the vote and obviously have never led.

But that is not to say—with a great friendship for my colleague in the Liberal Party, who was equally charitable to me—that they are not trying, and perhaps the definition will take shape along the way. I thought I should put it on the record just to share with the House because it is rather useful.

The various comments from the current Liberal handbook, with which they will fight the next provincial election, cow us all into submission. On page 36 of this handbook is the heading “Local Policy and the Provincial Campaign.” Liberal candidates are told:

There are times when we may want to play down some of the stands the leader and the party have taken. For example, in your area our separate school policy may be unpopular.

Well, I am glad that Father Matthews came into the Legislature just to note that—well, it is nice to feel fairly flexible. On page 38 of the same handbook they stress the importance of being flexible in these words:

Flexibility is vital. Our policies are not equally popular everywhere. Before the election is called, the candidates should visit local plants and have little chats with the managers. But when the campaign is under way, make a tour of the plant in company with a worker, not a manager. During the active parts of the campaign when you visit industry you will want to be identified with the working man.

A very prescient party.

“A candidate not at your best on a platform”—ah, there will be many of those should arrive just before it is his or her turn to speak and then leave for another meeting. In extreme cases you can be represented by someone else. Take your committee’s advice on this matter.

the manual advises.

Then—I suppose this came directly from the leader of the party; it smacks of his bon vivant attitude—it says:

There are all manner of gimmicks designed to attract attention to the candidate and to breed stories about him. Perhaps he can shoe a horse, or kiss a baby, and thereby earn some publicity. Publicity is good, but not at the price of credibility. A candidate looks best when he is doing what comes naturally.

Like shoeing a horse, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I will just conclude this with a little epilogue.

The use or misuse of television can decide the result of an election perhaps more than any other aspect of the campaign. Candidates must be assessed frankly. They fall into three categories: the dominant persuasive, the benign moderate and the avoidance type. The latter must avoid television at all costs. There are many in every campaign and they must—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Very good advice.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Renfrew South should not feel self-conscious; this is a Liberal manual.

There are many in every campaign and they must be steered away from most forms of television at all costs. He is likely unattractive-looking and next to hopeless on the public platform.

Well, that is an inspired résumé of the Liberal Party. With that I terminate that portion of my remarks.

Mr. Singer: Would the hon. member give us a few words of Steven Penner? Tell us about Penner—

Mr. Lewis: I did not want to drag out a file I have, and I will not be provoked.

Mr. Singer: —and how many times he tried to get in.

Mr. Lewis: In the last many months, Mr. Speaker—particularly for that period, I guess it was mid-December to mid-February—there was more life in that desultory government over there than one has seen for a quite considerable period of time—a lot more animation. Dare I say it, even cabinet solidarity was breached and the true affection with which each of the colleagues viewed one another was displayed from time to time. However, I do not intend to recall those words to the Premier’s mind; he would not expect that of me.

There were more vigorous pronouncements—some real, some absurd—for the last 28 years. Especially for four of the contenders—four of the contenders, minus Mr. Pharand.

You may recall, Mr. Premier, that someone suggested that education costs should be cut to 33 per cent of the budget; that all logging in Quetico be banned; that everyone believed in the recycling of wastes in Ontario; that the Ontario Savings Office was to become a full loan and trust company; that the Ontario Northland Railway would provide idyllic transportation possibilities for everyone in the north; that commodity costs for all products in the north would be equalled with the south, even if the south had to pay more—that certainly smacked of realism! That drugs and paramedical services would be included in health care costs; that there be complete disclosure of campaign funds—I did not notice that in the Throne Speech, but one of the nobles opposite suggested it.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): It is strange that not one of them is here.

Mr. Lewis: They agreed that there was “waste and fat in education”. The Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) said on January 26 in an apoplectic moment—he had many apoplectic moments—at one point in the campaign he lost control of himself altogether, said—and I quote—“the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party has not a divine right to go on governing, and if we think we can do business from the same old stand as in the past”—forgive me for mentioning this—“we are going to wake up and find the NDP doing it for us.” A very prescient insight on the part of the present provincial Treasurer.

So it went, with a variety of model programmes and useful disclosures. Only one of the major candidates, Mr. Speaker, managed to avoid commitment on almost any single issue at any point during the campaign. It will not astonish anyone in this Legislature to learn that he emerged victorious.

True to the traditions throughout; the traditions of longevity, passivity and immobility which characterized the Tory party for the considerable period to time prior to the present moment; despite all the storm clouds—and the Premier will admit there were a few—the party decided not to be half safe; and their caution has not gone unrewarded.

The Tory party and its momentary enthusiasms have been expertly dampened. Since the Premier took office there has been a period of listlessness, almost despondency.

This rather surprises me a little; I thought there would be more verve.

As I recall, until the Legislature reconvened there were only three major policy pronouncements. One was to create 8,000 jobs. The next was the announcement by the Minister of University Affairs around post graduate students, which Harold Greer called a “palpable misfire.” The third was Dow Chemical, about which there will be much debate in this Legislature; I will not belabour it right at this moment. Beyond that everything was focussed on the Throne Speech, the document which would unveil to Ontario the inspirations of government.

I do not know who wrote the Throne Speech. I suppose if others had written it, it might have been a document of a little greater life. The Attorney General I gather, before he does anything Mr. Speaker, goes through a particular ritual. When his profile was released during the campaign by Sheilagh O’Connor, his campaign press secretary, it said:

The first move Allan Lawrence made to get into the Ontario leadership campaign was totally typical of the man. He went to his doctor for a complete physical check-up, rated A-1, and only then did he instruct his cadre of volunteers to step hard on their campaign throttles!

Mr. Nixon: He learned that from Diefenbaker.

Mr. Lewis: And then he enlisted the support of the current Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Wells) who is profoundly concerned about his cholesterol count. It sort of runs in the ministerial family.

Had the Throne Speech been written by the present Attorney General you can imagine what its contents might have been. Had it been written by the current Provincial Secretary (Mr. Yaremko), think of the pages we would have given to the problems of native affairs in the Province of Ontario and the new sensitivity that might have been shown.

If it had been written by the former Minister of Trade and Development it probably would have begun, roughly, in this way: “Ladies and gentlemen. Ontario is a vast province. Let us not treat it in a half-vast way!”

Do I catch the feeling, the tone, of some of the earlier efforts of the hon. member for Don Mills?

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): I will supply the hon. member with the material at cost.

Mr. Lewis: Right! Just get me a bed in the Constellation Hotel. I will be glad to settle for that.

Mr. Randall: The best room in the house for twice the price.

Mr. Lewis: Right, fair enough.

I, for one, would have wished that the current Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton) had written the Throne Speech because then we could have had little erotic sketching conveyed to the House, in the corners.

Mr. Nixon: Erotic?

Mr. Lewis: Erotic, yes, for those who recall those matters which concern the Minister of Labour.

However, with the exception of housing and unemployment, which suffered a rather sad decline in reputation in that portion of the speech, the rest of the speech, the Premier will have to admit, had very little in it that was daring, or original or novel. I just remind him, even though it is a kind of painful litany, of the compendium of the predictable in that Throne Speech—much of it taken from the opposition, of course, hardly stirring the blood to excitement. Our policies now advance roughly a generation beyond those which the Premier chose to include in the Throne Speech.

It was, in a sense, a quite soporific document. Does he remember that he included that the government would give preference to Canadian-owned businesses seeking grants and loans—a startling change in public life in Ontario—that the ODC and the NODC would do the same; that Crown land was to be leased? The Minister of Lands and Forests was profoundly excited about this move, debated as it has been for only, I think, 43 years now in Ontario, yet not touching on the reclaiming of public access to beaches or recreation land generally.

The government is going to set up a Department of the Environment to intensify present programmes and new approaches to eliminate pollution, an environmental council, a committee on government productivity to examine Hydro and energy resources. The government is always giving attention to the creating of “functional and integrated and balanced transportation systems”—whatever that kind of gobbledgook means—the government has raised ambiguity to the level of statecraft in the Throne Speech.

The government has set up a Department of Colleges and Universities and a Department of Transportation and Communications. It might have pleased some in the Legislature, but this fetish of creating departments and interchanging them has never had the greatest of appeal for those of us in this party. This absolute fixation with departmental reorganization is as clear a substitute for policy as one could possibly find.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It is a Liberal preoccupation too.

Mr. Lewis: It is a Liberal programme too, of course.

There is a land bank programme; consumer protection—there is a novel idea—more efficient delivery of health services; a word about Ontario Place. I look across and see a sort of slightly blemished imitation of John Parmenter Robarts. At least his pre-election manifestoes had spirit, they had panache, they had moments of electricity. This document barely survives scrutiny before the reader lapses into somnambulism. That is hardly worthy of the efforts to strike the sense of a new regime in Ontario—

Mr. Nixon: The readers are pretty weary.

Mr. Lewis: —and yet, Mr. Speaker, the Premier had the audacity to say in the document:

This address has indicated the new ministry is fully aware of the existence in Ontario of many problems of a serious and urgent nature. Measures to deal with these matters have been described.

In our humble submission—and I shall now get to that part of it, Mr. Speaker—those matters have not begun to be described. There is so much that is wanting and absent in this Throne Speech that it is now beyond the capacity of government to retrieve it. There were some areas that were touched on so lightly, so inconclusively, so marginally, that it makes one wonder whether the capacity to govern has not faltered completely.

One of those areas, extraordinarily enough, was that of economic development and growth in the Province of Ontario. It was as though, Mr. Speaker, the entire Design for Development plan on the part of government had been abandoned. It was as though thoughts of economic development, regional development and regional government no longer constituted a priority for the government at all.

How can it be that one has a substantive document like a Throne Speech, which at least hints at certain propositions which might be implemented by government, and that economic development—the very basis of provincial life in terms of the effects on the citizens in this province—how can it be that that is excluded almost totally from the document?

One would hope that it was excluded because the government had decided to abandon it; but I fear not, because the splendid procession of reports which the government has now produced—some while the session was in recess are renewed for the province and for Ontario.

We have committed ourselves to an untenable pattern in the Province of Ontario. We may be locked in. I suspect that only a change in government—and we on this side of the House, while not sanguine, look forward to it—but only a change in government may indeed alter the pattern.

This Design for Development programme on which the entire future of the province is based. It is stunted in its conception, Mr. Speaker; it is misdirected in its analysis; it is trivial beyond belief; it is a great abortive epic in the life of this government. However, it is the brainchild of the men who surround the Premier. I am not at all sure how much the Treasurer himself had to do in its makeup—or the Premier himself—but the first monumental publication, as it were, was the Toronto-centred region plan. The more we learn about it—because this is a cumulative process—the more it must be rejected. The government cannot proceed with it. It would not be tolerable. The premises are false and the argument is wrong. It is an untenable document and it is absurd that in this Province of Ontario it should be given serious contemplation at this time.

First, Mr. Speaker, the Toronto-centred region plan—and it is increasingly reinforced by ministerial pronouncements—accepts the whole pattern of rate of growth and productivity in and around Toronto in an entirely predetermined way. It is as though, for a moment, all the Tories had become Marxists and believed in determinism as the sole factor in looking at the way in which growth patterns evolve in and around Metropolitan Toronto.

Second, after bowing to this fetish of growth for growth's sake, the plan then deposits eight million people—contemplate it, Mr. Speaker—by the year 2000 in an uninterrupted cordon of industrial concentration from Montreal to Milwaukee. It governs our lifestyles accordingly for the next 30 years, as though the worship of some kind of industrial juggernaut at this end of the province made good and compelling sense.

Third, the government has locked us irretrievably into the vortex of American control by virtue of that programme. And many of us have drawn attention to the problems that are involved. The Premier shakes his head. Let me read to him and refresh his memory, because I am sure he has studied all the documents carefully. What is called "The International, National and Provincial Context of this Plan" says—and I think it is probably worth just putting on the record:

The development of the region—that is the Toronto-centred region—

—obviously is greatly dependent upon the role of the region in the northeastern quadrant of North America.

1. The Toronto-centred region is strongly influenced by major metropolitan centres of northeast North America—New York, Boston, Detroit, Chicago, St. Louis—

it does mention Montreal—

—the market within 500 miles includes 900 million people.

2. The region is in close proximity—

Hon. Mr. Davis: How many people?

Mr. Lewis: Ninety million. I am sorry.

The region is in close proximity—

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member upset me for a minute. I wondered what had happened.

Mr. Lewis: What had happened. Right!

Mr. Randall: Get that fly speck in the right place.

Mr. Lewis: Right, okay! The member may return to his reading. You know, I think his new appointment has gone to his head. Some of us thought there would be a change.

Mr. Randall: There is.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but in which direction?

Mr. MacDonald: Humility might then descend upon the member.

Mr. Lewis: To continue, Mr. Speaker:

2. The region is in close proximity and has strong economic linkages to the heartland of American industry, which is found in the Chicago-St. Louis-Cincinnati-Cleveland quadrilateral and reaches eastward in both Canada and the United States to such leading seaports as Montreal and New York.

3. With increasing economic interdependence these linkages have stimulated a development corridor between Chicago and Montreal.

They call it the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence megalopolis, of which the Toronto-centred region is a major sector.

I am skipping point 4 for the moment.

5. This region performs a leading manufacturing, financial and cultural role in Canada. The manufacturing predominance is partly a result of the adjacent location to American firms with branch plants producing for the Canadian market.

Mr. Speaker, I put it on the record because it is the essential premise on which the plan is based; it dictates the direction of the plan. The minister knows that the special map which accompanies the book called the "Toronto-centred region: Northeastern North America Context" deals with radials depicting development corridors. And where do the radials go? They go to Milwaukee, Chicago, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Washington, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Sault Ste. Marie, Sudbury, Ottawa, Montreal. That is the nature of the radials. Now for us, there is no—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where have they missed?

Mr. Lewis: Well, they have missed Timmins, they have missed the Lakehead, they have missed western Canada, they have missed essential arteries within this country. They have focused entirely on increasing economic interdependence with the United States. There is no sense in this government's mind that economic developments can move along other corridors. That is the problem. The problem is that it has fixed us into this locked position and it is prepared to let us languish there and lock us in until the year 2000 at least.

There is no serious analysis now or before of land-use planning. How much land for industry, for recreation, for agriculture? There is no decisive look at environmental factors, which are barely touched on. There are more arterial highways from Bowmanville to Kitchener directing development, with no guarantee of how much money there will be for public transport. There is so much gibberish in that report, so much nonsensical formulation of a statistical and rarefied kind that it often reaches heights of indigestible nonsense.

May I point out, Mr. Speaker, as well, that regional government is wholly irrelevant to the context of this report. It is as if the Oshawa formulation did not exist; it is as if the Fyfe report had not been published for Kitchener-Waterloo and area. It is as though Hamilton-Wentworth or the Halton-Peel set-up had not been contemplated at all. The report just runs roughshod over any existing schemes of regional government or regional organization without any effort to correlate the two.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, with great respect, it is not true.

Mr. Lewis: It is most certainly true.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will just await my opportunity to speak.

Mr. Lewis: By all means. We will be very pleased to see how regional government integrates with this report. It will be very useful. There are so many—

Mr. MacDonald: We look forward to the Premier finally entering the debate.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member want me to speak ahead of his leader?

Mr. MacDonald: Is the Premier going to speak after him? That is the point.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no. I will be speaking at the end.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, the Premier is not speaking next? Well, I will see if I cannot provoke him during my discussion of education.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I may not be here to be provoked.

Mr. Lewis: Yes I know. The pressures of state will ease him on his way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: May not.

Mr. Lewis: When we are a government and a cabinet, I want to tell the Premier, through the Speaker, and opposition members are speaking in important debates we are going to have the benches filled as a matter of policy. It makes very little difference—these things waft over the benches—but I noted last Friday morning with the Leader of the official Opposition speaking in the Throne Speech debate there were no more than four of the Premier's cabinet colleagues here at any time, and their total numbers dwindled to 11 at one point. One could at least have that moment of humility to think that there are occasional thoughts offered on this side—if not always valid, at least in goodwill—which are heard by government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Leader of the Opposition says we have taken their entire platform.

Mr. Lewis: Well, I will not haggle with the Premier. I just point out the way in which this government views the legislative process and the committee process and the whole business. However, these are the rituals we perform, and I shall continue performing.

There are so many unanswered questions about this Toronto-centred region plan. How will the growth in the west be controlled? How can this government produce a plan almost a year ago and to this day not indicate to the public a single substantial piece of evidence on how it is going to relocate industry or control growth? Does the government intend to purchase private land for recreation? If so, in what quantity, and at what cost?

What happened to Century City in the process of the plan? What happens to Peterborough and the eastern part of the Toronto-centred region? What incentives will be used to designate the location of industries? Why should they go where they have not gone before? I hope this government does not use the generation of hydro-electric power as the incentive for growth points—but I will come to that a little later.

This government has left a gross legacy to future generations, if it insists on proceeding with it. The fact is that everyone from the Ontario Institute of Town Planning through to a number of independent consultants has indicated how faulty the plan is. It is a growth plan in isolation. It confirms our client-state position, and it is a growth plan that acquiesces to intense, self-defeating, antisocial urban concentration. It is the work of unimaginative minds, Mr. Speaker—hurried, scattered, superficial and inadvertently revealing along the way the Tory view of the Province of Ontario.

Let me remind you, if I can find it now, what the document says in terms of other regions because there was one giveaway in this report which is perhaps more revealing than any other aspect of it.

Point 4 in the "Putting of the Perspective" says:

Because of the location within the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence megalopolis, the Toronto-centred region probably can increase its economic role in processing resources which currently originate in northern Ontario and move to major markets in the Chicago-Detroit-Cleveland industrial area.

What happens to "Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region"? What happens to "Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario Region"? How much bad faith can one government maintain in the process of drafting these unrelated ad hoc documents which do so much to mutilate principles of planning? Any integrated proposal which might be made by relatively unsophisticated people, let alone the panoply of planners which the government has at its command, would be better.

That one sentence I quoted, in itself, can be the death knell for northern Ontario. Do not think that the people of northern Ontario do not know it, because they do. They are well aware of what it is that is intended for them, and they are in the process of rejecting it fairly dramatically.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I guess that is why we were left out of the Throne Speech.

Mr. Lewis: Let me therefore turn to the next production in this epic—because after all it is the basis of the government's plan for the entire province—"Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region". It is again, one of the most disappointing documents currently being examined by the people of the northwest. Its aims are far too limited. Its policy recommendations range from the modest to the negligible. It sets out a catalogue of problems which have been enumerated a thousand times before.

The Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart) surely cannot suffer it forever, and I suppose I should deal with it momentarily.

Incidentally, I would be truly pleased if the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) could stay for a moment or two because I want to deal with him on north-eastern Ontario. Some of the government members must surely be a trifle embarrassed about what is being done to northern Ontario in the name of the government of the Province of Ontario.

Do members know what has been demonstrated in this northwestern report? The report states that the primary sector is capital intensive and labour static; that there is a large distance to major markets; that there is a dependence on United States markets; that the health services are dependent on Winnipeg in the far northwest rather than having any internal viability; that the tourist services are poorly developed; that in terms of growth and employment in value added, manufacturing in northwestern Ontario lags considerably behind that of the province, indicating that the region's competitive position is continuing to weaken.

Then they study it with graphs and observations which are really quite remarkable and when that is done, a series of glimpses of the obvious—they set out their goals, breathtaking in their precision and insight. I am not sure that all the members of the Legislature have heard—I am not sure all the members of the New Democratic Party have heard—what the government of the Province of Ontario was able to fashion in its report after years of study.

Listen to the remarkable goals which have been discovered by the Minister of Lands and Forests and the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. They want to reduce the annual and seasonal rates of unemployment. They want to increase male and female employment opportunities—well, there is a rare insight given to government in a report of this length. They want to increase manufacturing employment. They want to optimize the use of prime forest resources. They want to increase accessibility between centres of population.

There is a most extraordinary revelation which occurs on page 64. It says: "Reduce air and water pollution." Now how do you like that for striking new ground for government in economic development? "Reduce the incidence of poverty." Who thought of that? Which civil servants did they bring together for that? Under public safety they have, "Reduce the rate of accidents"; "Reduce the incidence of crime"; "Reduce the incidence of fire"—and what are their recommendations? What are their recommendations? Eighteen thousand jobs over 20 years. Nine hundred jobs a year. That is their total recommendation in terms of work. To diversify the economy, to bring in some secondary manufacturing; but nothing set out in specific terms. To talk about the more advanced phases of resource processing and manufacturing which should be located in northwestern Ontario. How does that jibe with the Toronto-centred region plan?

Mr. MacDonald: They have written off the north.

Mr. Lewis: They have already written off northern Ontario. They are not going to develop the new processes. Everything in the report is conditional. None of it is assertive. Your absence of policy recommendations in this report are an insult to the people they are designed to serve.

Perhaps I am forgetting something in this report; this report which used all the creativity and capacity of six different departments of civil servants. They say there is another section of northwestern Ontario to which we should turn our attention? The native population? The Indian population? Lo and behold here comes the Provincial Secretary. Well, let me tell him—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): I have been here all the time.

Mr. Lewis: Good. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, what the report on northwestern Ontario economic development says about the Indian people in that part of the province, to give you the full flavour of its analysis. On page 1, it had this comment: "Over one-tenth of the regional population is of Indian origin. Many of these people live in small, isolated settlements, widely dispersed across the northern part of the region."

The Indian people do not enter into the discussion again until page 44 where there is a classification of organized municipalities in northwestern Ontario with every single piece of population data given—including all of those that are unclassified—and at the bottom, it says: "None of the above population data includes Indian reserves." And then the third and last time which Indian communities are represented in this report in any substantial way occurs on page 76 as a preface to the recommendations and it reads: "A number of recommendations are marked with an asterisk. These have particular implications for the Indian community and will be discussed further at appropriate times." And there you have it. So much for that particular social and economic problem.

All of that is characteristic of the empty superficiality of all of these reports for which there will be political debts to pay in the next provincial election. But quite apart from any political debts, which should be aside from it, it is a great pity indeed that you see fit to release these kinds of documents. The best of them all, of course, was the "Design for Development: Northeastern Ontario Region"—ah, the minister smiles slightly—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): That should make him blush.

Mr. Lewis: On January 23, 1971, Mr. Speaker, I was there. What a pleasure. There we were in Timmins—250 people breathlessly awaiting the unveiling of this document which would recast development for northeastern Ontario. At all the other conferences there had been five, six or seven ministers present.

Behold, when the curtains were pulled back, who walked out on to the stage—alone, isolated, nearly in tears—the Minister of Lands and Forests. Where was the then Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs (Mr. A. F. Lawrence)? Where were all the others?

It was quite a remarkable performance. I have not seen anything like it in some time. It was a cultural event in Timmins—that is how all of us felt of it. A sort of evening with the “theatre of the absurd,” that was it.

It was billed as the announcement for the Design for Development of the northeastern Ontario region. I thought all the ministers would be there to receive the plaudits of the crowd. For “high camp” it was unequalled entertainment; it was of rare vintage. One of the best single put-ons in the province. There were slides and satraps and civil servants and slogans and majestic formality and carnival boosters—all the trappings of government, you know. The designers who wrought the product—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Was the former Minister of Trade and Development there?

Mr. Lewis: No, he was not there; he stage-managed it.

Mr. Randall: Sounds like an NDP convention.

Mr. Lewis: I wish our conventions were like that on occasion. And then when it was all over—I may say that this document has more graphs per page, more charts, more delights for the designer’s eye and mapmaker’s pleasure than any other single document the government has so far produced. This one is 300 pages long—the minister was so embarrassed about it he said to the audience, “Now do not expect anything new. I am merely repeating in this document things you have known before.” I wonder if I can catch the full flavour of the minister’s words, I feel I do not have them here—oh yes, I do. He said:

Let me caution you here that you are not likely to discover any startling or unexpected revelations in this report. It is, after all, an analysis of the region which you know best, a description of the trends which you have been experiencing at first hand.

Mr. MacDonald: More of the same old thing.

Mr. Lewis: To continue:

The report outlines in statistical form many of the changes which are well known to you.

Well, the report took five years to prepare. Five years for phase one. Imagine the prospects for phase two. There are some unexpected revelations in this report and I would like to share them with the Legislature. This report, unlike the northwestern report, has 82 goals, and some of them have the most astonishing priority. I think right at the beginning they are set out. I am not sure that I can read them into the record without trembling. I am not even sure I can find them—but they said things like this, Mr. Speaker:

Increase female employment opportunities. Reduce housing costs for low-income households. Reduce recreation accidents. Increase the numbers of doctors and dentists. Increase adult education. Preserve historic sites and buildings.

They have this most extraordinary pre-occupation with accidents. “Reduce recreation accidents.” They go into it in great length. They even had a separate section on public safety, and under it they say that the goal of public safety—I hope this sits well with everyone—is “to reduce the hazards to life and property from external events and maintain personal security.”

Mr. MacDonald: Reduce the common cold too?

Mr. Lewis: Some may think that is a generalized pronouncement, so in order to make it more particular, the following revelation appears: “The hazards of drowning appear to merit attention only in those districts bordering large masses of water.”

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I can understand why it took five years. You know, the wisdom of the ages takes some time to filter through, and one should not jump to these historic conclusions impulsively. You take a little time to sift away, to savour, to measure, and then you promulgate a document of this kind. It is absolutely astonishing that they would dare to do it.

Now, the minister was not railroaded out of town, in fact, he was greeted most respectfully. There were only two people in the audience who were a little acid with him. One was the member for Cochrane South, and one was the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Jackson), who wondered aloud what kind of nonsensical array this was, and they received for their efforts the quiet support of the crowd. But I may say, Mr. Speaker, that what is so disappointing about this particular document, of course, is that it misses the point entirely.

The minister makes all the appropriate observations. He says that the population in the northeast is declining. He says that it is now a slow-growing economic area. He says that manufacturing employment is declining in many centres but there is no substantial additional employment in forest-based industries; that the income per capita is below the provincial average; that there is a marked absence of communication facilities; that the problem of retraining is particularly acute; that the infant mortality rate is 10 per cent higher than that of the rest of the province; that housing is inadequate in quantity and quality. I am quoting from the report.

Can he tell me who has been in power for the last 28 years?

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: These things occur, sure, and the minister dares to document them in this kind of a report.

Then, as though the refinements are not sufficient, he brings it down to the context of the districts of Timiskaming and Cochrane. Let me tell him what it shows, in case the minister himself has not done the statistical analysis.

In Timiskaming, the labour force rate of growth in 1951 was 17,000 plus. In 1961, 16,000 plus—a positive decline. The same for Cochrane. The infant mortality rate for the northeast generally, is 22.4. For Ontario, it is 19.6, for Timiskaming, it is 28.7. Per capita income improvement between 1961 and 1966, in the northeast generally, 34 per cent, in Ontario, 32 per cent, in Cochrane 29 per cent. Doctors per thousand in Cochrane, 69 as compared with 83 in the northeast, and 132 in Ontario. Dentists per thousand, 17 in Cochrane as compared to 22 in the northeast and 38 in Ontario. Manufacturing employment is below any acceptable standards through the other areas in the northeast compared to the rest of the province.

What is contained in the report, Mr. Speaker? Not a single positive suggestion worthy of the name. What kind of illogical proposition is this—to press upon the people of the Province of Ontario something called Design for Development on which our economic future is based? The Toronto-centred plan is distorted and the northwest plan is inadequate; the northeast plan is a fiasco and the minister will lock us into a series of ad hoc unrelated propositions, I repeat. It is simply not tenable. It is especially not tenable in northern Ontario.

I want to make a particular point of that. This government has abused, exploited, discriminated against northern Ontario shamelessly for its entire period of office.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: There is no other area—

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Mines knows this better than anybody else.

Hon. L. Bernier (Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs): Go up to Kenora and see. The member should have been there on the 19th, the greatest day of history.

Mr. Lewis: Sure, sure!

An hon. member: We can get lots of quotes from the minister to document it.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I will be back. The NDP cannot find a candidate up there. What are they talking about?

An hon. member: The government just silenced the minister by putting him in the cabinet.

Mr. Lewis: As a matter of fact with the two by-election wins in Manitoba I would urge you to seek other employment, Mr. Minister. Kenora will now go the way of all political flesh.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Let me remind the members opposite, Mr. Speaker, through you, that they condescended to give northern Ontario two paragraphs in the Throne Speech. My, that must have gladdened the heart of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Two paragraphs! I think one of them related to the new department undertaking a review of the cost of transporting goods into and out of northern Ontario. Twenty-eight years in office and that is what the government leaves for the people of the north and the government expects to hold a single seat the next time around.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): We will increase our seats.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: The government will increase its seats? Why even in Cochrane North we anticipate our majority to be somewhere between 3,000 and 3,500—and the minister's is a little tougher.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Yes, we will. Five more seats.

Mr. Lewis: The minister's is a little tougher than most. But then, we were in second place last time so it is an easy acceleration. And the government has a lot of answering to do to members on the opposition benches; a lot of answering to do to the member for Sudbury East.

How is it that they have got a hospital crisis in Sudbury now, unmatched anywhere else in northern Ontario? What kind of planning is it for the north? How is it that in Sudbury there are 3,000 people on the waiting list for housing, with a zero vacancy rate in that city? And the cabinet does not a thing to alleviate the situation which is persistently damaging and demoralizing to many sections of the community, despite how much pressure and how much pleading comes from the member for Sudbury East to move the fossilized but friendly cabinet to some action. What about the matter of Cobalt refinery? Why was it not possible for the ingenuity of government to cope with it?

I understand that the former Minister of Trade and Development would not give a loan to Jack McClelland if he had asked for it. After all, Jack McClelland was a lousy businessman and the former minister would not extend money that way. Knowing his own illustrious past in General Steel Wares, I suppose that was the basis on which the decision was made.

What about the little Cobalt refinery? Why was it not possible at the testing laboratories to add whatever was required in order to provide a way of processing in the north? Why does the government have to grant more exemptions?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is not possible.

Mr. Lewis: What is not possible? Cobalt refinery has operated, what, for 10 years?

An hon. member: More than that.

Mr. Lewis: More than 10 years. Have they been so charitable that they have operated at a loss throughout?

Mr. Randall: They lost money every year—

Mr. Lewis: Utter nonsense! The reality is—

Mr. Randall: Nationalize like Saskatchewan and we would all go down the drain.

Mr. Lewis: Look, the only thing—

Mr. Randall: Name me one company that was still in operation when Douglas went out of power. They all went down the drain.

Mr. Lewis: Will the member just stop it? Will he just stop it. In his case, of being a director of the Constellation Hotel, we will enter into an equity relationship. It will be a joint public-private venture. Cobalt refinery, Mr. Speaker, is another example—

Mr. Randall: Tell us about the unemployed.

Mr. Lewis:—of the way in which the government allowed the mine to close down in Geraldton without any appreciable response. It is exactly the same classic pattern for northern Ontario.

The government still has not made up its mind on Quetico. Sure, the volume agreement with Ontario-Minnesota is now under—what did they call it—a more or less permanent moratorium, but the logging still goes on in the northeast section of the park, the only section of the park where there is a Canadian entry point. The government has not tried to find an additional cutting licence, either with Great Lakes or one of the other pulp and paper companies, to provide the timber requirements which would keep the mill going and take the logging out of the park.

The government has played games with it and with the Quetico advisory committee. And what about land generally? It may be that we own land in northern Ontario, but the minister knows how much advertising there is of recreational land in northern Ontario. How frequent are the transactions which convey land to non-resident control? How much of the recreation land have we lost in the northwest, just as we have surrendered access to the beaches of Lake Eric? The minister knows that he is going to have to take an inventory of land requirements or he will deliver much of the best in the north to non-resident ownership within his period of the ministry.

What of Moosonee and Moose Factory in the minister's own riding? I have a confidential report which was submitted to the band council by Mr. Gerald Hodge, who is with the department of urban and regional planning at the University of Toronto. He makes the point that if the federal hospital closes down—and it is an entirely viable operation—the economy of the entire area will be so profoundly dislocated that they may never be able to recoup, and that years of conflict and pettiness have characterized this inability to sort it out.

What about the export of power in northwestern Ontario? Now there is a classic illustration of the way in which the government works. The government of Ontario enters into a little cabal with Ontario Hydro to export 37,000 kilowatts of power across the Rainy River to International Falls by the year 1976 for what purpose? It was undefined before the National Energy Board. Boise Cascade will build a kraft mill, a stud mill and a chipboard mill. There has even been some talk of the possibilities of a chemical plant, or at least much rumour of it. What happens in the final analysis? The export of our power, and the export of our jobs from northwestern Ontario to the United States, particularly to Minnesota.

What happens then to the "Design for Development: Northwestern Ontario Region" in which the government guarantees to maintain a certain increased job ratio? Does it go down the drain as well? How is it that the government has not yet publicly reversed its position and made the appropriate announcement?

What about the processing of ores in northern Ontario? How is it that we are continuing to export greater percentages of unprocessed ores each year, rather than lesser percentages, especially in the important ore areas like nickel and copper, which constitute at least for the last year for which there are figures—1968—some 47 per cent of the mineral production?

What about the secondary industry which is constantly denied to northern Ontario? The minister has surely seen the report, "Prospects for an Expanded Non-Ferrous Metals Industrial Complex for Northern Ontario", by Gerald Hodge and Cheuk Wong, in which it is suggested that there be a wire and cable plant, a copper and brass mill, a couple of non-ferrous foundries and a cement plant; all of which could be arrayed between Nipissing and Timmins? Where is it all? Why does the government deny economically viable industry to northeastern Ontario when there is documentation and a basis for which to give it?

Then the government ends up with the most gratuitous blow of all when the former Minister of Public Works (Mr. Simonett) is appointed as vice-chairman of the Ontario Northland Railway. Can one imagine a more cynical appointment for political patronage?

An hon. member: Unload the seller of hats.

Mr. Lewis: What in God's name was the point in putting the former minister on that commission except, in effect, as a favour for services rendered?

Mr. Ferrier: That committee is just a senate for the Tories.

Mr. Lewis: When did it need a vice-chairman before?

Mr. Ferrier: That was a payoff.

Mr. Lewis: Does it have a reputable chairman? Yes, it does. I travelled down from Timmins on the Ontario Northland Railway with three directors of the railway just a few weeks ago. They seemed quite competent to handle it without the expertise and omniscient sea of knowledge of the member for Frontenac-Addington. They will not need him to give weighty input to their deliberations. The government cannot treat the north that way. It cannot make southern appointments that way forever. What about the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers)? He still has a phone in his car waiting for his appointment, and it never came.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Now that is wrong. He took it out.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): He has not done it in this House.

Mr. Lewis: Well perhaps he will one day be moved to it. Let me draw this portion of my remarks quickly to a close, Mr. Speaker. What is true in the north is a sad and desolate array of governmental neglect—persistent, calculated neglect.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Watch the results!

Mr. Lewis: We will watch the results. We are positively enthused about the electoral prospects, but that does not satisfy the needs and requirements of the people of the region.

There is in this province, Mr. Speaker, no serious province-wide economic planning at all. All we have are these various individual documents, that are occasionally supplemented by materials like the Haldimand-Norfolk studies, which add very little to what is available to us. The government cannot proceed in that fashion.

There must be a province-wide plan for development and land use; it is an absolute priority. We would establish a provincial economic secretariat in order to achieve it and, then, there must be a way of relating regional government to these plans and involving regions in them. The provincial government has already emasculated regional government in various areas by its refusal to give them the funding assistance they need in order to operate. It has driven a perfectly legitimate concept of regional government into a concept of disrepute, so that all of us in this party have now come to the conclusion that government should not be introducing regional government until it can give an iron-clad guarantee of the financial wherewithal to meet the expectations of the people in the region. We have always put the proposition—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman: New policy.

Mr. Lewis: New policy. The member for—

Mr. MacDonald: Has the member heard of the foundation programme? We enunciated it along with regional government. His party repudiated it.

Mr. Lewis: The member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) talks about a one-tier system for the Sudbury basin and then his leader vaults up a day or two later and says a “freeze on regional government.”

We are not going to trifle with the issue in that contradictory fashion Mr. Speaker. We have always committed the Conservatives to the appropriate funding of these regional governments. Now we ask for a similar commitment in relationship to whatever economic plans the government has. Otherwise it will introduce a shambles.

There must be an end to the indiscriminate forgivable loans which bear little or no relation to the patterns of development. The government has not even begun to involve the cities in serious economic planning. If the development of growth points continues to be a problem, then measure all the appropriate indexes—labour costs, natural resources, transportation and above all environmental effects—and if industry is to be located outside of Metro, let us say so and relocate it. Then obviously, the government has to place a limitation on certain areas where industry either would be moved from, or not allowed to move into, and incentives provided for others to locate in other parts of the province.

But the government has laid down none of the ground rules; not a one! Just vague, conceptual insubstantial designs, with the occasional regional variation. It has no sense of this province as an integrated, economic whole. It has no sense of the art of government required to order the future of Ontario. For that there will be a response a number of months hence.

That leads me, Mr. Speaker, to the second of three points I want to make of a major kind in this debate. The government has another singular failing and that involves the cost of services to the people of the Province of Ontario, both in the fields of education and health. Ironically enough, costs of government were never higher than under a Tory regime. Ironically enough, with all the managerial skills to which it pretends, there is, in fact, no capacity to arrange its finances in a way which would introduce efficiency or economy.

Everyone in this caucus, Mr. Speaker, concedes that there is a need to control the cost of education in the Province of Ontario. Obviously, that is so. But we question the context and the fashion of the present methods of cost-cutting.

For eight years, Mr. Speaker, we have pleaded for debates on the philosophy of education in the Legislature. We have never achieved it.

I remember my colleague from Lakeshore (Mr. Lawlor) and his efforts—unsuccessful efforts—to envisage the former Minister of Education some time ago. For eight years we have rejected the government's obsession with numbers and plant and all other related aspects. For eight years we have questioned this monolithic system, lacking in diversity and expensive in cost. Year after year we pleaded that the new educational philosophers—Goodman, Holt and Freidenberg and others—begin to infuse Ontario's system so that we could introduce economies, and year after year it is rejected.

We have pleaded for a justification of the numbers game. The former Minister of Education says “There will be 25 per cent of the young people between the ages of 18 and 25 in university, 25 per cent of the young people in community colleges, another five per cent in post secondary technical schools”—and then gives no basis whatsoever for the projection of the figures.

Year after year we have asked for an analysis of teacher training so we would not be in the present bind. If it is right, Mr. Speaker, we may have up to 3,000 graduating teachers unemployed in the next while. What kind of inspired planning principles have brought that to pass on the part of this government? How is it possible that that could possibly be achieved?

We have questioned the Robarts' stream. We have applauded the relevant parts of the Hall-Dennis report and wished for their implementation. We have asked for the long-term justification of the community colleges. We have raised the issue of the manner of imposition of the county school boards. We have talked incessantly of transferring the cost of education. We could never get any answer.

Now we have a crisis over which the former Minister of Education presided. He officiated over the crisis which the people of Ontario now inherit. And having destroyed the system and destroyed equitable taxation in the Province of Ontario in the process, he does not want to be responsible or, if responsible, purely in the sense of imposing arbitrary guidelines. The government lets things get out of hand and then it clamps down. It retreats behind the wall that it has erected for itself.

Incredibly enough, you know Mr. Speaker, this government never tried to establish priorities or programme budgeting. I learned with great interest—I did not know this until a few days ago—that over the last several summers in the Province of Ontario a small and select committee chaired by the former Treasurer, now Minister of Highways and Transport (Mr. MacNaughton) had been meeting very privately about the establishment of budgetary priorities for the province. I suppose it was probably held at Honey Harbour, at the Premier's cottage.

One of the main areas of contention was always that of the budgetary provisions for the cost of schooling, and it was required that five-year plans be submitted to this private cabinet committee which, curiously enough, is now enshrined in legislation. This is really quite interesting. Remember the Throne Speech, page 13 said:

To confer reason, flexibility upon its policy-making and management capacity, a number of committees of cabinet will be created to deal expeditiously with the co-ordination of policy in a number of related areas. Two major committees will be established by statute. One will deal with policy and priorities and will ensure by continual review that established policies and expenditures remain relevant to the needs and wishes of the people.

Well, it is not a new committee, Mr. Speaker. It is a committee that, as I say, has been meeting privately since at least 1967 either by note of cabinet, by minute of cabinet, or, indeed, by order-in-council, although I have not had the time to check back. That is the committee to which this Throne Speech material now refers.

It is a committee to which five-year projections of needs—in which Ian MacDonald participated to show how the expenditure curve would outstrip the revenue—were to be submitted to these cabinet ministers. And the extraordinary truth is, Mr. Speaker, that in the last three summer sessions the small cabinet committee was not able to arrive at priorities. As a result, individual budgets were presented to the Treasury Board on an annual basis and dealt with accordingly. And as a result they got themselves into this notorious financial straitjacket reflected largely in the area of services to people.

I do not know what happened in the last round of negotiation with this committee. Either The Department of Education would not conform and there was a rebellion and it was told to cut six per cent across the top, or it did conform and gave them a projection and the Treasury Board could not handle the selectivity so there was a flat cut.

Mr. Speaker, let me say on behalf of this party that we think the cuts are needed in the educational system in certain areas, but that those areas are rather different from the ones that are now receiving the effects of the ministerial order.

There is the area of administration. There is the area of plant and building. There is the area of educational television and duplicate computer devices. There are some cuts to be made at the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, all of which would mean a reasonable—perhaps even a substantial—saving to the taxpayers of the Province of Ontario.

Let me say something about OISE. I do not share the views of the member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) who said to the OSSTF meeting recently:

The Metro school boards are being forced to cut $13 million from the overall budget of $370 million; why not cut out OISE and get the $13 million that way.

You talk about a meat-axe approach—

An hon. member: Do not quote me.

Mr. Lewis:—which the Leader of the Opposition dissociated himself from, to his credit.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Totally irresponsible.

Mr. Lewis: I must present his view accurately. He indicated to the member for Scarborough East that he was not pleased with the proposal that had been made and dissociated himself from it during the course of his remarks.

But it does say something about the problem of OISE which has continued to create difficulties for government and for those of us in the opposition for a considerable period of time. OISE is not performing the function for which it was intended. That is the great pity about OISE. It has become a self-serving institution. It does not serve the people of the Province of Ontario.

It was designed largely to work through programmes which would be appropriate for the Province of Ontario and the school system. But there is very little to show for the money which we have put into OISE—which now exceeds something like $100 million, Mr. Speaker, a very considerable investment.

It is not just that the departments of curriculum, and the departments of applied psychology, and the departments of educational administration are dominantly non-Canadian in character—we took exception to that at the time—it is just that OISE has forgotten its responsibility to the school system of Ontario and that its administrative leadership is preoccupied with the rarefied, esoteric activities of a number of various research experiments.

There are legitimate postgraduate activities at OISE which should be sustained by members of this House. There are extraordinary problems which OISE could analyse.

OISE should be doing the work on the cost of extending aid to the separate school system to the end of grade 13. OISE should be analysing the saving that might be introduced if grade 13 was eliminated from the school system. OISE should be looking at the way in which Hall-Dennis might be introduced to the school system. Instead, OISE is often fraught internally with irrelevant and fratricidal battles.

Do you know what is going on in OISE now, Mr. Speaker? Very briefly—there is now a battle within OISE over what amounts to a conflict of interest charge.

Eight hundred and forty-eight thousand dollars—that is a lot of money in the life of an institution—was dispensed for research grants in OISE. One hundred and fifty-eight proposals were submitted to a research review board and a development review board. Eighty-one of those 158 proposals were funded. Fifteen of the 17 proposals submitted by members of the two boards which sat in judgement were accepted to the tune of three-eighths of the total amount of money. The other 66 projects, coming apparently from lesser mortals, received something just beyond half of the money allocated.

I do not know what that means in the context of OISE internally, and I cannot pretend to say. I do know that there are memos from senior members of the educational staff at OISE expressing great concern over the way in which the review board works, expressing great concern over the way the decisions are made. Listen, Mr. Speaker, if you will—knowing your acute interest in OISE—to two of the projects which were funded. One of them goes by the title of “Developing a Test Item Bank for the Physical Sciences”; and another one goes by the title of “Completion of the Development Work on Self-Concept Scale.”

Listen to three of the titles which were refused funding: “Canadianization of the Earth Sciences Course”; “Communication Effectiveness, A Study of the Language Behaviour of the Northern Indian”; and, “Supplementary Native Language Aid to Immigrant Children.”

Those were the projects not funded. I have named a couple that were funded.

The general comparison holds true in an almost bewildering way; there is much mystification about it. What is happening internally in OISE? How is it that that institution with so much public money seems to behave in such an erratic fashion?

We are not asking for the kind of investigative apparatus which upsets an academic institution. We are asking only that OISE be called to account in the sense that it justifies its budgetting to government and to the Legislature more adequately and that it relate the projects which it undertakes far more directly to the school system, which it is designed to serve and which it does not now serve in a fashion which any of us can begin to understand.

I have indicated that in some of these areas there would obviously be room for cutting back, or at least for raising questions.

The pity of it all is—if I may point it out—that the cutbacks now are not in those areas.

As things now stand, Mr. Speaker—and I am going to try to make my case ironclad—the cost cutting in education in Ontario imposed by virtue of the ceiling. I repeat that there have to be limitations acceded to by all; but that they should be handled in this way suggests a degree of arbitrariness and insensitivity which is self-defeating. The Premier, one would think, had more pride in his system than to treat it in such a fashion.

Listen to where the cutting of costs comes. Even if it is only for certain boards in the province, these boards represent up to 40 per cent of the kids in the educational system. The Carleton board. Let me read to you from the report of the minutes of their meeting when they had to cut costs.

In order to meet these limitations, it has been necessary to conduct review after review of the proposed expenditures covering every facet of the board's operations, and has necessitated a reduction of over $2 million in expenditures which would have enabled the board to continue and modestly expand the existing programmes. However, because of the severity of the limitations placed on this board, it has been necessary to curtail certain programmes, make no provision for increased staff to support a growing system, and again seriously restrict the amount of funds available for the maintenance and operation of the system.

To comply it has been necessary to make the following adjustments to our ordinary expenditure commitments in the 1971 budget to meet this ceiling.

What adjustments? Note:

Board's system-wide support of student councils and other student oriented projects withdrawn. Student aid fund eliminated. Teachers assigned to schools at reduced rate. Average class size to be increased at all levels of the system. Remedial teachers assigned to regular classroom duties and the programme discontinued.

Mr. Speaker, remedial teachers are involved usually with remedial reading in one of the most indispensable areas of educational concern in Ontario.

Specialist teachers of grade 1 to 6 music assigned to regular classroom duty and this very successful music programme discontinued. Board support for student involvement with the National Art Centre withdrawn. Additional special education classes planned, cancelled.

Special education classes! One need only recall—it was in the Hall-Dennis report—one need only recall the report on a million children suffering learning disabilities, perceptual handicaps and emotional disturbance to know what folly it is to cut in the area of special education.

Beginning September, 1971, no board support for adult education. Free use of schools policy of the board to be amended.

And so it goes in the Carleton board, in areas which none would like to see cut and which suggests that there could at least have been some selectivity introduced.

When the OSSTF put out its pamphlet, it said: "Because of economy, the less experienced teacher may be hired before the more experienced, the less qualified before the more qualified."

I have before me, Mr. Speaker, a memo to the principals of two counties immediately to the east of Metropolitan Toronto. Item 3 on the memo to the principals, which comes from the director of education, reads as follows:

Many school jurisdictions have moved their staffing ratios for secondary schools sharply upward. We have found it necessary to make minor adjustments in individual staff numbers, but have been able to maintain our overall complement of secondary teachers for 1971-1972.

A number of jurisdictions are planning drastic reductions in consultative staff and in special education staff serving elementary schools. We have avoided these steps. In hiring, however, we are forced to give priority to low-category inexperienced teachers who are willing to upgrade themselves. There are going to be a great many experienced teachers who go without jobs in the current glut while our orders go out to hire inexperienced teachers.

North York, Mr. Speaker: The North York board found it impossible to reduce the 1971 operating budget by an amount sufficient to meet the ministerial request, so what was cut out?

The regular per-pupil allotment for supplies, texts and library books to the schools has been reduced by 10 per cent. The programme development in the function of instruction and educational services has been reduced by 50 per cent. The budget for out-of-classroom activities has been deleted. The health service has been discontinued. The adult education salary cost has been reduced by five per cent and the night school fees have been increased by 50 per cent. Services under consideration for cost-cutting—community schools, prologue for performing arts, young people's theatre, music events, the elementary French programme.

What sense does all of that make?

Niagara South, Mr. Speaker. A great many of the courses will go as a result of attrition of teachers, classroom size increasing accordingly. "Eight consultants returned to teaching"—that is a very good idea, as a matter of fact. The consultants should return, perhaps not to full-time teaching, perhaps to part-time teaching. But it does raise a question of whether or not the consultative staff is important, because the day on which the cutbacks were made, there appeared in The Globe and Mail in Toronto an advertisement from the Ontario Department of Education to hire consultants.

Lincoln board. The elementary French programme, a librarian, two special education teachers, four assistant counsellors, four para-professionals—all of these people working in useful areas.

Peel board of education. No new programmes; deferred purchasing of any new library books; termination of drug education programme for teachers and pupils—now there is a cut one would have thought makes little sense—"elimination of evening counselling service for parents/students; reduced caretaking staff, elementary and secondary school"—that is where the physical jobs are often lost, Mr. Speaker, in the caretaking staff of these schools.

The Toronto board of education: That is reasonably well known to people here, but the areas which were cut again were odd: Driver training was cut, summer school programmes were cut, non-medical use of drugs inservice programme—cut significantly by 60 per cent. (And the cry goes up about the use of drugs in the school system and all the concern expressed on all sides of the House.) Seasonal cleaning was cut—which may not seem to be that important except that it loses several hundred students summer jobs. And the picture, Mr. Speaker, is not a pleasing one, and it is one which we think could have been altered drastically had the legacy of the Premier worked in other ways.

The fact of the matter is that these are the things which appear to have frustrated the teachers and driven them to actions, or to threats of actions, which none of us would condone or wish. The OSSTF president, Geoffrey Wilkinson, put it this way at his meeting;

The spending limitations violate the local autonomy of school boards, attempt to provide a single remedy for a bewildering variety of economic ills and force school boards to spend less without forcing them to spend more sensibly or economically.

It is truly a difficult position for the teachers, Mr. Speaker. We understand their frustration. We appeal to them, through this forum if need be, not to carry their irritation to the point of strike, not to be the strawman for a desperate government, desperately seeking a public peg on which to hang an election. That is not what the teachers should now be roped into. The government waits, you know, taut as a coiled spring, ready to pounce.

One hopes the teachers will be rational and considered, even though provoked in their presentation. Be it over guidelines or the present salary negotiations, nothing is to be gained at this point by precipitate action. We are launched into a debate. A government having created an extraordinary crisis over years of unwieldy operation of the educational system is virtually on the ropes, and I say to the teachers: "Do not rescue them now. Demonstrate solidarity and firmness, but wage the battle at the ballot box because there is an election this year."

All of these things, Mr. Speaker, that I have enumerated really rest on one central proposition—one major proposition. That is, that the issue has been very easily diverted by the Premier and those who sit with him in the cabinet, and we in this province are not going to permit it to be diverted any longer. What has come to pass has come to pass as a result of government policy.

The crisis over the cost of education is essentially a struggle around the reform of taxes in Ontario. It can be seen in no other context, and that is the crucial issue on which the next election will be fought.

Our premise of taking up 80 per cent of the cost over the life of our first session in Parliament, the life of that Parliament—the four years or five years; however long it may be—is what is at the root of the entire analysis. And we will take this government on constituency by constituency across the province of Ontario on the basis of tax reform and on the basis of the property tax. The government will not be allowed to shift, divert, deflect, in such a fashionable and expert way, the area of discussion to the question simply of costs of education. It will come back every time to shifting the burden of the property tax to provincial revenue, and to emerging provincially with 80 per cent of the costs after the first Parliament over which we preside.

Mr. Speaker, I have some rather lengthy economic remarks that I intend to make. It is an effort to deal rather seriously with the background and, in fact, with the costing factor, because too much of this has been left in an ephemeral way. If the members will bear with me, I am going to put it on the record because I think it is worth having before this House; because it finally has to be determined how we will fund it and what the precise cost will be.

Briefly, then, the background:

Since 1946, expenditure on elementary and secondary education in Ontario has risen by 25 times. Per capita expenditure has risen from four per cent of personal income in 1960 to six per cent in 1970. What is even more significant is that total school board spending has risen 109 per cent from 1965 to 1969, while equalized assessment in the same period rose by only 60 per cent. That is where the property taxpayer comes in. In the same four years, the provincial share of the load crept up from about 45 per cent to 48 per cent, so that most of the extra burden fell on the homeowner. In dollar terms, then, the local contribution to elementary and secondary education rose from $394.5 million in 1965 to $741.9 million in 1969. Obviously there were bound to be outcries.

Now you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that the former Minister of Education compounded the situation by the major policy moves sprung on the electorate after the 1967 election. It is his legacy we are talking about; it is the Achilles heel of the government we are talking about. We shall remind everyone in the province every step of the way the reason for which we have inherited such a difficult situation.

The county school boards were introduced without consultation with local officials and without consideration of regional government development in the works. I am reminded that the Premier gave the municipalities a lecture last year about the usefulness of consulting with school boards on planning decisions. His own example hardly gave strength to his advice. There were inevitable cost increases as the boards struggled to equalize services, provide kindergartens, and make salary scales uniform across the board.

Other cost additions came from the buildup of expensive administrative structures as county boards vied with one another for prestige.

The Premier did nothing to discourage this empire building and provided no immediate assistance to boards with severe cost problems. His failure to anticipate the problem is a measure of his government's incapacity to govern.

A second government policy also instituted after the election aggravated the situation further. I refer to the decision to put assessment on a market value basis across the province. Hardest hit were the farmers, some of whose assessment shot up as much as 500 per cent, and their education taxes often rose correspondingly; but many other property owners fall precisely into the same category.

In some cases they were retired persons or low-income homeowners, whose little cottage had become surrounded by urban and suburban development. They were quite unable to bear the huge tax increases resulting from the reassessment, but were reluctant to move or were unable to cash in on the assessed value of their property.

School tax increases contributed to their problems, especially in the rural municipalities where they had received in some cases up to 100 per cent payment before the advent of county boards. The government's reaction was a sort of glacial-like paralysis. The provincial share of education revenue drifted up only a point or two.

The then Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) told taxpayers facing huge assessment increases to go to the courts of revision and we waited while the reports came down—the Smith committee, the Carter commission, the Benson white paper, while there was further futile and antagonistic skirmishing between Ontario and Ottawa.

Suddenly, in 1969, the government awoke to the fact that education costs were a serious issue. The pensioners were in danger of losing their homes because of school tax increases. The farmers were paying three or four times as much education tax as city doctors and lawyers who had six times the income.

Typically, the government reacted rather than acted. It put patches on the system. It produced in 1969 the education mill rate subsidy at an estimated cost of $48.4 million. Then there was a Treasury Board authorization—which I note in the public accounts and wish someone could explain to me, maybe the Attorney General or the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs—for a further $43.5 million, through the legislative grant vote. How much of this went to the county school board additional subsidy?

In 1970, the government finally yielded to the proposal that the province must assume a greater share of the total cost of education and relieve the property tax of the burden. But it only undertook to go from the level of 46 per cent currently to about 60 per cent and that over a three-year period. Even before the 1967 election, Mr. Speaker, you will recall we hoped it would go to 80 per cent. The provincial share was expected to reach 51 per cent in 1970.

Mr. Singer: That was a great discovery. When we announced that three years ago, you said it was nonsense. Do you recall that? That was quite a discovery, particularly for the member for York South.

Mr. Lewis: Also in 1970, the government had another typical reaction to the mounting prices. It threw a bone to the pensioners who were hardest hit by the steady rise in education taxes and the failure of their incomes to keep pace. It offered all those on the federal means test guaranteed income supplement—a $50 handout—and an additional sum based on property taxes or rent paid which would guarantee each household the total of $100. Pensioners who were ineligible for the guaranteed income supplement did not get any tax relief, nor do the working poor. That was the second try after the first abortive try to provide tax relief for senior citizens. Then came the farmers, with the 25 per cent tax rebate classification.

Now, the Prime Minister has apparently ended his abortive efforts at tax reform, this dismantling of the system through tax credits and tax rebates. He is trying the newest approach, the imposition of the ceilings, which make sense in some areas because some boards can cope with them adequately, and unselective nonsense in others.

You recall that quiet amendment which slipped through the legislative session in the dying days of the 1969 session, Mr. Speaker? The explanatory note on the bill said the 23-word amendment “authorizes regulations to be made governing school board estimates and expenditures for any purpose.” Admittedly, the opposition did not discover it until after the event. It was on that basis that the Prime Minister took to himself, arrogated to himself, the authority to move in and do whatever he, at that time and subsequently, wished to do with the system.

That is a serious step. It raises fundamental questions of the role of our school boards and the goals of our educational system. I am suggesting that one does not exercise that kind of power, but surely one exercises it in the glare of public discussion, particularly when a recent Gallup poll shows that 49 per cent of the people are concerned about education costs.

There have to be priorities struck, Mr. Speaker—measured, reasoned—dealing with the essential problem of tax reform. That is what we are discussing when we strip away all the rhetorical nonsense in which, alas, politicians engage.

We then look at the whole mechanism of the delivery of educational services and the methods of paying for them and the method that has paid for them, which is advocated by the Liberal Party and by ourselves, the NDP. I cannot recall who was first, except I am sure we were.

Mr. Singer: Yes, indeed, the member's party spent a year and a half telling us how wrong it was.

Mr. Lewis: The answer to all of this—you know, I would not have believed the member would interject at that point.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Was the member for Scarborough West here before the Lord?

Mr. Lewis: The answer to all of this is not an 11th-hour repentance on the part of government. The answer is the assumption of 80 per cent of the costs of education.

Mr. Singer: That is a very good idea.

Mr. Lewis: All right. Let me get to it. The Liberal Party said that they would do it through more progressive forms of taxation than the outmoded property tax. Provincial revenues, I think the Liberal leader said. They have adopted the policy, but so far they have failed to give us any details at all—

Mr. MacDonald: As always.

Mr. Lewis: —of how they expect to finance the extra cost to the province except to suggest that it would be done through personal income tax. Now I believe the Leader of the Opposition estimated in his speech the other day—I listened carefully—he gave an estimate of $700 million for the cost of assuming 80 per cent right now.

Last year the personal income tax in Ontario yielded about $31 million or $32 million per point. This year it may yield as much as $38 million per point if it grows at the rate it has in recent years. But even at that level it would require a surtax of 18.5 points to raise the $700 million this year.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): That is the Liberals.

Mr. Lewis: Is that what the Leader of the Opposition is advocating?

Mr. MacDonald: They have never thought about it.

Mr. Lewis: A provincial income tax not of 28 points but over 46.5? Because that is the way it works out arithmetically. In fact, it just shows how preposterous it is to make a blanket statement forever without an effort to analyse it.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): What has the NDP done?

Mr. Lewis: What have we done? I am going to tell the House very precisely, very precisely. What we have done is to make—

Mr. Ruston: We have been listening for an hour and have not heard a thing yet!

Mr. Lewis: I still have not exceeded the member's leader in time. I will, but not by much. We have made a careful study of the trends in education costs over the next five years in order to assess how much it will cost the province to take over 80 per cent on a phased programme during our first four years in office, which is what we have always said.

We do not think it would be feasible to do it all in the first year, much as we would like to relieve the property taxpayer overnight—

Mr. Singer: That is about word for word what we said—just about exactly.

Mr. Lewis: Nonsense! Seven hundred million dollars is what would be absorbed now. As a matter of fact, it is worth pointing out that if that is what the Liberals meant then you do not talk about $700 million, because over a four-year period you are talking about $1,400 million. That is the sum of money which has to be dealt with. A sum of money which the Liberals may not have thought of.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): A typical Liberal attitude.

Mr. Lewis: New sources of revenues, like capital gains tax, and a greater return from our resource industries take time to develop. We think these are areas which can provide some of the additional revenue needed rather than trying to load it all on the personal income tax.

Now in our calculation, Mr. Speaker, we have assumed that education costs will continue to rise as enrolment grows and price increases have to be met. But we think that the rate of increase can be reduced from the 15 per cent to 20 per cent evident in the past few years, to 13 per cent or 12 per cent or less. We hope that it can be reduced even further when our planned re-direction of the ways in which education is provided begins to take effect.

We are assuming that the province is prepared to pay 54 per cent of education costs in 1971 on its way to the promised 60 per cent by 1972-1973. We expect that that is already in the provincial Treasurer's budget.

We assume that we will take office some time in 1971 and have therefore worked out a phased plan—

Mr. Ruston: Do not hold your breath!

Mr. Lewis: —for moving from 54 per cent in 1971 to 80 per cent in 1975. This means that we are prepared to take over an additional 6.5 per cent in each of our first four years of office to make up the 26 points needed to reach 80 per cent by 1975.

After allowing for the anticipated increases in total education costs—and I have taken them at 12 per cent to 13 per cent, which is surely generous in present circumstances—we estimate that our programme will require the province to put into education grants an additional $276 million in 1972; $330 million in 1973; $385 million in 1974; and $444 million in 1975.

We have also calculated how much additional revenue can be expected with no increase in present tax rates but just from the growth of our economy. The interesting fact is, Mr. Speaker, that the anticipated growth until 1975 exceeds each year, in dollar amounts, what we would require to make up the 80 per cent of the costs of education by 1975. It is useful to note that, although we would not resort to that strategy alone because obviously it would leave money for normal increases in other cost factors. It is reassuring to find that the growth of the economy would outstrip the additional costs of education even were we to assume the full 80 per cent by 1975.

Mr. Singer: That destroys the member's previous income tax percentages, does it not?

Mr. Pilkey: He missed the point.

Mr. Deans: Come on, listen!

Mr. Lewis: But because we do not want to rely on the natural growth rate of the economy, which we have worked out rather carefully, we have looked at other possible ways of financing the expected amounts required.

We think it is high time that a corporate capital gains tax was instituted, and can see no justification for taxing capital gains at anything less than full income-tax rates. As Carter said, "A buck is a buck," whether it is made on the stock market or on an assembly line at General Motors.

The federal government is moving toward some sort of capital gains tax and we believe that Ontario must press them to introduce a fair one, not the emasculated version advocated by the provincial Treasurer in his white paper on tax reform.

Even if the federal government fails to bring in our kind of capital gains tax, we think it would be feasible for the Province of Ontario to make an arrangement with them to collect capital gains tax on a different basis for us, once the information relating to capital gains is included in the tax reform.

Mr. Martel: Do the members opposite understand?

Mr. Lewis: Now the capital gains tax is not anything for which anyone in this party has any apologetics. Believe me, it should have been instituted a very long time ago.

Were it not for the federal and provincial governments it would have been introduced by now.

We also think, Mr. Speaker—this is equally important—that this province should find the time to get a greater return from our resource industries, which produce over $2 billion of wealth, but which return to us only about two per cent of that wealth, in mining and logging taxes and stumpage. Even their contribution through the corporation tax seems much less than it should be.

A recent DBS study showed that metal mining companies in Canada, in 1966, had book profits of $396 million but taxable profits of only $15 million, or four per cent, compared to a 56 per cent figure for all corporations. Other mining companies, Mr. Speaker, had taxable profits of 28 per cent of book profits. You can see how far behind the mining industry is in terms of paying its fair share of resource taxation to Ontario, yet the mining industry had the second highest rate of return on capital employed in 1969—eight per cent after taxes, compared to just under seven per cent for all industries.

The balance of the requirement should be financed through the corporation and personal income taxes, in our view, even in their present unreformed state.

These are much fairer taxes than the regressive property tax and we do not hesitate to advocate the substitution of income tax additions for property tax. Only by so doing will we convert our unprogressive tax system into a progressive one.

There are many possible packages. Let me throw out some examples for at least the first couple of years.

For instance, in the first year we estimated that we needed some $276 million. That could be obtained by earmarking one quarter of the revenue yield from the growth of the economy, estimated at $80 million. Our anticipation of the first year's yield of a new capital gains tax at full rates is estimated at $150 million, and $48 million from an additional three per cent of the value of mining production.

There is not a single suggestion there, Mr. Speaker, which is other than sound. It involves an adequate percentage of natural growth, leaving 75 per cent of growth for other services to be provided. It takes a little more from the resource industries, which they should surely be willing to pay, and it takes the additional money from the first year of a capital gains tax.

Incidentally, the full capital gains tax in Ontario, according to the extrapolation which Carter provided, would be $460 million. So you can see that by asking for $150 million in the first year we are being measured and responsible within the limits of introducing this kind of tax.

Let us take it to the second year. We would need $330 million in the second year. That could be raised by again taking one quarter of the revenue from economic growth—$88 million—getting another $70 million from a second year of capital gains tax—conceivably a little more—and the contribution of 10 per cent of production of the mining industry—which would bring us to $80 million—and an additional one point on the corporation and personal income tax, and we would have the total of $330 million. Again, in view of the drastic reduction in property taxes and the new tax revenue sources, this is something that would be acceptable, I am sure, to the people of Ontario.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, I could indicate how one would finance the third and fourth years by using the growth of the economy, by using the capital gains tax, by using a further increase of mining tax. We have not even touched the logging revenue, which would give an additional yield; and we certainly are not interested in stepping up unduly the points on personal income or corporate income tax. We have never advocated 18.5 points, for example.

However, I may say, Mr. Speaker, that after the second year our own feeling is that we will save so much money in related programmes that it will no longer be necessary to tap these sources beyond present production. We will have so realigned the educational system in areas of community schooling—rather than confining education to buildings—in areas of teacher-parent-student control of the schools, incorporating certain economies and efficiencies in terms of teacher aids and assistants rather than all the emphasis on professionals which is now the case, and in terms of dramatic savings in the field of health services, that in these areas we could draw on certain additional funds and it would no longer be necessary to introduce drastic alternative alterations.

All of this, Mr. Speaker, if I may say, is entirely plausible. It brings us, by 1975, to the point where 80 per cent of the costs of education are absorbed provincially in a way which would relieve people extraordinarily in terms of property taxes, year by year, in increasingly dramatic ways. It funds the costs in ways that are responsible and appropriate. It would allow us finally, Mr. Speaker, to come to the core of the entire educational debate, which is to relieve the frustration and irritation which people right across this province feel, not so much because of the educational system, but because of the inequities of taxation with which we have lived under this government for far too long and which we will transform.

Mr. MacDonald: That is the new-look government.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Do the members opposite want to join us?

Mr. Martel: Where?

Mr. Randall: Well, obviously over here, not there.

Mr. MacDonald: Even the Attorney General would agree secretly, I am sure.

Mr. Lewis: While the predictions are based on governmental figures, the political predictions we share.

Mr. Speaker, I now want to turn to one other aspect of the high cost of government. I note that the member for Downsview is itching to get to his feet and I assure him that I will deal only with those matters which I regard as compelling, and then take my seat. The high cost of government—

Mr. Speaker: The member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Farquhar) is next.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry—that relates especially to health services, and I have some things in this area that I want to say because it is surely the most inadequate department of government, and one where the possibility of savings is absolutely endless.

In fact, I am going to indicate that we could save, in relatively short order, up to $300 million for the Province of Ontario, were we to change the distribution of health services in the province and begin to develop the community clinics and the patterns that are the experience of other jurisdictions.

We have tolerated in the Province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, for far too long, a health system which is oppressive in its cost, and there is absolutely no reason for that to continue to obtain. We have had all kinds of promises from the members opposite that the health services system would alter, but it has not happened.

For years they have deliberately been resisting alternative methods of delivery. They have constructed wasteful, non-preventive, monolithic-building-centred, wildly costly systems. The government has hospitals in this province whose per diems are in excess of $100 a day; chronic and convalescent care occupying active treatment beds; still no funding for nursing homes. It has to end.

Without giving all the quotes—although they are neatly set out in Harold Greer's article on "Team Clinics and Health Care," reproduced, I imagine, in many papers—I have the one from The London Free Press. The quotes from Justice Hall, from the federal task force on the cost of health services, from the committee on the healing arts, from the Economic Council of Canada—they all show demonstrably that we get a better quality care at reduced cost by changing the system.

What do I mean by changing the system? I mean shifting the hospital-centred acute treatment apparatus of Ontario to a community clinic focus. Now let me give some comparisons so that the Speaker knows exactly whereof I speak.

In the Sault Ste. Marie clinic, for the last year for which figures are available, patients who came from the clinic had 680 bed-days of hospital use per 1,000 population. The figure for non-clinic patients—1,400 bed-days—was reduced by half.

In the plan for United States government employees, health centre patients occupy 408 bed-days per 1,000; private doctors plans—876 bed-days per 1,000—again, fewer than half.

In the Saskatoon community clinic, clinic patients take 650 bed-days per 1,000; non-clinic patients, 1,650 bed-days—better than twice the saving.

The Kaiser plan in California, which has been carefully investigated by this government, although it has said very little about it to the Legislature for reasons I do not know, is a similar comparison. The Ontario Council of Health sent a study committee to the Kaiser plant in California. They have there a plan involving 2,000 beds, 11 hospitals and 14 clinics with 900 physicians for the care of approximately one million persons in circumstances analagous to Ontario. The Council's 1970 report to the government quoted in a Medical Post article reads as follows—and this is from the Ontario Council of Health:

It noted that under the Kaiser plan, hospital days per 1,000 subscribers dropped from 650 in 1966 to 500 by 1968. The Kaiser figures do not include convalescent, chronic, psychiatric, or rehabilitative beds.

In order to get a direct comparison between the two systems, the committee adjusted the Kaiser figures to include hypothetically all these categories of patients plus mental patients according to standards of care prevalent in Ontario. It found that the adjusted total of days of hospital care per 1,000 subscribers under the Kaiser programme would be 1,722, compared with 2,858 hospital days of care in Ontario under our system. In effect, the total days of hospital care required in the Kaiser system is equal to only 60 per cent of 1967 Ontario figures—and those figures improve as the years pass.

The manpower committee was so impressed with its finding that it recommended—

And I have not heard a word of it uttered in this Legislature—

—a technique of health care delivery management utilizing economic incentives for efficient use of hospitals similar to the Kaiser system be introduced on an experimental basis in Ontario.

What does it mean for Ontario? Based on the net allowable operating cost of the Ontario Hospital Services Commission for 1970, we would have saved $278 million—and it is a transposition which is entirely legitimate. It is one of the plans that has been carefully studied by government. All the other parallels hold up if we applied it to the Province of Ontario, and perhaps that is what is hinted at in the Throne Speech—the savings would be incalculable.

During the budget debate, Mr. Speaker, I will give you the actual costs, except that now I point out that the per diem rate in the Ontario Hospital Services system is $49 a day, and for the Kaiser system, $30 a day. It is on that basis that we worked out the per diem decrease. In fact, we worked out the cost in thousands of dollars per bed—the overall operating budget. No matter how it is checked, it works out to the same saving.

If, in addition to that, I say to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, drug costs were channelled through a central purchasing agency, according to the figures submitted by the Ontario Pharmacists Association, in Ontario we could save up to $37.5 million. And even if that was not done through a medical care insurance plan, even if that was only done on a private basis, we could save up to $24 million a year.

There are potential savings of major amounts to be derived from an extension of the home care system in Ontario, with which my colleague from Cochrane South will deal further in the Throne Speech debate. He will deal with all these matters in greater detail.

The chronic and convalescent areas can equally be provided rather less expensively. The premium levels in the province are the highest in the country. The double billing is unacceptable. There is no collective bargaining with the Ontario Medical Association, although it should be another dimension of cost-cutting which would introduce very major savings. The entire health services apparatus in the province is unduly costly. That is true of the mental health system, as well as the acute treatment hospital system. There are many cumulative changes to be made. Again, the capacity of the government to function is called into question, and we will try to make those enviable alterations in the delivery of health services when we take office in this province.

That, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the concluding point for this Throne Speech debate, and it relates to the third matter with which the government dealt so cavalierly in the Throne Speech. That is the matter of foreign investment and economic nationalism. It is a matter on which we in this caucus intend to join issue with the government. We welcome the Tories to the fold of economic nationalism. The recent conversion of all their candidates, the inspired observations of Eddie Goodman with whom the member for Don Mills debates from time to time—Eddie Goodman, the bagman of the Tory Party, one of the senior representatives of the party who indicated catastrophic consequences for Ontario unless there were regulatory controls.

Mr. Randall: Has the member got any provincial premiers or Mr. Trudeau?

Mr. Lewis: We used to spoof the—

Mr. Randall: He did not answer me. He has not got any.

Mr. Lewis: Well, does the member want to throw it out again?

Mr. Randall: Even Mr. Schreyer is not in the member's camp.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Schreyer is firmly in our camp.

Mr. Randall: No, no!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Schreyer went to borrow portfolio capital, not equity capital, and the member for Don Mills knows the difference. Equity capital—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Equity capital exerts control. Portfolio capital is entirely legitimate, just as if one were to borrow $50 million from—

Mr. Randall: It is a phony money deal.

Mr. Lewis: As though one were to borrow $50 million from Germany. The member may have heard that this is done from time to time by the Ontario government.

Mr. Randall: The mad professor will take the member down the drain if he does not.

Mr. Lewis: The problem, Mr. Speaker, will not disappear. I know the member chafes a trifle. It was more fun in the front benches.

Some of us used to spoof the present Premier on his addiction, or his predilection, for committees. He has a capacity to establish committees where no others would dare. But I must say that none of us expected the masterpiece of evasion and dilution that he contrived in the establishment of this conference. The problem will not disappear just because he has established the conference.

The Throne Speech asks for a rational and unemotional discussion. That is the special Tory virtue of antiseptic and dispassionate debate where nothing is invested with any feeling, lest it be invested with conviction.

It is not emotional, Mr. Speaker, to establish that our energy resources are being sold to the United States, that our natural resources—mining and forestry together are controlled by non-residents; that book-publishing in this province—as the Prime Minister well knows—is in the process of serious erosion of Canadian control, thanks to his stewardship.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: And the union movement?

Mr. Lewis: I think it was one of the former ministers who said, "Why not let Jack McClelland go down the drain? Nobody reads his books anyway." That is the cultural view of the government. The distortions which the EIO forgivable loan programme created in Ontario, with its imbalance of aid to multinational corporations, the effects on secondary manufacturing industry, the consequences of branch plant layoffs and shutdowns.

What is emotional—if the repetition of all that which is factual is not—what is emotional, irrational, ad hominum, self-serving, is this strident stuff from the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) and his predecessor about losing jobs because we might want to curtail foreign investment. It is just so much nonsense to continue raising that bogey forever. We are not dependent on foreign capital; the member opposite knows it and the Minister of Trade and Development knows it.

Mr. Randall: Get rid of General Motors. There will be more UAW jobs. Remember saying that in St. Catharines?

Mr. Lewis: Was the member like this in cabinet meetings? Maybe that is why they removed him.

Mr. Randall: That really nailed him.

Mr. Lewis: It is the silliest piece of demogogy for the Minister of Trade and Development in his remarks yesterday on unemployment to say that the figures of the unemployed would go from 700,000 to two million if there were controls on foreign investment. The government will not make any marks on that posterous kind of nonsense.

Mr. Randall: The hon. member thinks they will not?

Mr. Lewis: They most certainly would not, because as people in this House recognize, including the minister himself, despite the efforts of the lobby of multi-national corporations in conjunction with charitable governments, bankers and others, this economy is not dependent on foreign investment. It has not been dependent on foreign investment since the early 1960s and it is a matter of gross distortion for anyone to pretend otherwise. Because we are assembling the material, the government will necessarily be put on the defensive on this issue over the next little while.

Mr. Randall: How about all the jobs you are exporting?

Mr. Lewis: The fact of the—

Mr. Randall: Does the hon. member want to bet?

Mr. Lewis: I most certainly do. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Randall: The party opposite would be wiped out like it was 1944 if it votes on economic nationalism.

Mr. Lewis: I suppose I should point out to the minister, sir,—

Mr. Randall: Look at the effect last night. Double the vote against the NDP.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The member is sitting there because of his stand.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Makarchuk: That is the first word the Deputy Speaker has uttered in the Legislature.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, will you move for that member to be ejected—will you have him named? I know your authority, Mr. Speaker, and the weight of your personality, sir, and the way you can galvanize this Legislature into control and I would ask you to assert your control.

Mr. Speaker: He was not the only member. The hon. member for Don Mills was not the only one. There were others.

Mr. Lewis: There were others? Oh well.

Mr. Speaker: The member will continue.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, go to work on him.

Mr. Lewis: The point is, Mr. Speaker—I will be a little circuitous—but the advocacy of controls and repatriating our economy from foreign control is no different from policies advocated by virtually every single other country in the western world and the members opposite know it. And in all those countries there continues to be stepped-up activity on the part of the subsidiaries.

The fact that there is a political party in this province which would take seriously the matter of developing our economy with our own money is something which terrifies many members of the government benches who have developed a dependency relationship on continentalism, who see their roles as subservient to foreign interests in a way which works against the value of economic development in Ontario.

The positions of the members opposite are just a mask for their homage and capitulation to the continental design. In fact, that is why the conference has been called—so that we can have a little chorus of continentalists in Ontario somewhere toward the end of May or early June—

Mr. Randall: Take out the emotionalism.

Mr. Lewis: —paying the occasional lip service toward the need to exercise our own autonomy.

May I say, Mr. Speaker, that the government has embarked on a really seriously mistaken strategy. It just will not wash. The government drastically underestimated the extent of public feeling and nobody in the Conservative Party has answered the essential questions. They are very simple questions. How does anyone in the Conservative Party in the Province of Ontario explain that 94 per cent of the money which is generated for investment in this country—perhaps therefore even more of it in this province—is generated from the retained earnings and the depreciation and depletion allowances, and from borrowing in the Canadian market on the part of those subsidiaries operating in Canada?

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Randall: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. That statement is completely incorrect. It is completely incorrect. It is a statement by Tommy Douglas and it was proven—

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Speaker, that is not a point of order. Sit down!

Mr. Deans: What is the hon. member's point of order?

Mr. Randall: I rose on a point of order.

Mr. Deans: State your point of order.

Mr. Randall: It is a completely irresponsible statement.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Eddie Goodman made that statement last night.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker is on his feet.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will continue his speech.

Mr. Randall: It is completely irresponsible. I refute it.

Mr. Lewis: All right, Mr. Speaker. I am not going to ask—

Mr. Randall: The figure is 26 per cent if the member wants the facts.

Mr. Lewis: —for a retraction from the member. I am going to refer him to the United States Department of Commerce study by David Bell on—to give it the exact title—“The Sources of Funds of U.S. Subsidiaries in Canada Operating in the Year 1968, Calculated from the Figures Published in the Survey of Current Business, November, 1970, by the United States Department of Commerce.”

From retained earnings—25 per cent. From depreciation and depletion—41 per cent. From borrowing in Canada—24 per cent. From equity sales in Canada—two per cent. From other sources within Canada, including miscellaneous sales of assets—two per cent. From U.S. parents and other U.S. sources—six per cent.

Mr. Martel: How does that grab you?

Mr. Pilkey: How do you like that?

Mr. Lewis: It may be that some people have been so traumatized by their demotion that they cannot add.

Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deans: No, sit down.

Mr. Makarchuk: The hon. member's problem is that he has not been weaned from the bosom of foreign investment.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: Do not argue with those guys. The hon. member has got to convince them that he should be back up there.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker is standing. Sit down.

Mr. Lewis: There are a number of Freudian barbs coming from our back-benchers directed at the member for Don Mills and he will not understand them. I want him to relax.

Mr. Randall: Speak English!

Mr. Lewis: Let me go on to the next point.

An hon. member: Would the member answer a question?

Mr. Lewis: No, I will not answer a question. The member can enter the debate at will.

Mr. Randall: May I suggest the member for Scarborough West is talking gross instead of net.

Mr. Deans: The member for Don Mills wants to mess up the Constellation the way he has messed up everything else.

Mr. Lewis: I am talking figures which are absolutely indisputable. Mr. Speaker, the next point—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Randall: The member lost that one.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the six per cent which is money raised from U.S. parents and other U.S. sources—amounted for all of Canada to the sum total of $127 million. It is a fairly substantial sum of money, but it is not a sum of money which reduces us to a position of subservience when 94 per cent of the rest of the money is generated by ourselves. As a matter of fact, even the report recognizes that the money earned by American subsidiaries in Canada is Canadian dollars; our money, with which we are bartered and purchased from abroad. Only some find that difficult to comprehend.

Let me make the other point. Most of the $127 million, Mr. Speaker, is invested in the resource sector. That is where our foreign investment goes, largely—such as it is, the six per cent. And in terms of the argument which people opposite have been making, let us take a look at that.

In 1967, the last year for which figures are available, 73 per cent of the direct investment from the United States went into mining, petroleum, natural gas and pulp and paper. These industries are not big employers of labour, Mr. Speaker; they are capital intensive industries. In October, 1970, there were only between 50,000 and 60,000 people employed in these industries in the province of Ontario.

Worse still, by letting capital in for the resource industries we are not really creating jobs, we are exporting them—because under Tory policy much of the money goes for the removal of unprocessed raw materials.

Mr. Lawlor: How about that? Exporting jobs!

Mr. Lewis: And in the manufacturing sector—

Mr. Randall: He will not accept a question so I cannot answer. He is afraid of questions.

Mr. Lewis: In the manufacturing sector the total investment was two per cent.

Now the second point which no one on those benches has yet answered, is that the net capital outflow from Canada in the decade of the 1960s was $2.5 billion by way of royalties, licence fees, management fees, dividends, and so on—$2.5 billion more out than we received. How can the government expect to exercise control over our economy with that kind of outflow of capital?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Easy. Those figures are not right.

Mr. Lewis: In the 1970s, Mr. Speaker, it will have mounted to $3 billion or more. Further, Mr. Speaker, what none of the members opposite has been able to understand or to refute is that in many significant manufacturing areas our very trade balance has been shifted to a negative factor by virtue of the capital outflow.

I will not go into the specific report. It is on the record before. It would indulge too much on the House's pleasure so I will not put that report on the record, but it is there for those who wish to see it. It is part of that analysis of 326 multi-national subsidiaries, a report which was handled by The Department of Trade and Commerce, federally, as I recall in the year 1969 or 1970.

Further, no one on that side of the House, indeed not even the present Attorney General who was the previous Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs, has been able to explain why such an absurd percentage of our unprocessed and semi-processed ores leaves the Province of Ontario—depriving us of jobs; denying an economic infra-structure to northern Ontario—to be smelted, refined and processed abroad.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: We are changing it.

Mr. Lewis: And why is the minister granting exemptions?

Mr. Martel: What happened at Falconbridge?

Mr. Lewis: Why is the government granting exemptions with such enthusiasm?

Mr. Martel: They are in Quebec, are they not?

Mr. Ferrier: It should have been in Temiskaming.

Mr. Lewis: In fact, the way in which these little documents emerge from our research department, before which even ministers opposite have bowed because of its expertise—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Is Quebec not still in Canada?

Mr. Martel: Do not give me that crap!

Mr. Lewis: In our research department, the little 1968 report on The Department of Mines was discovered, in which it indicated that over the previous year exports of nickel and of copper in unprocessed and semi-processed form had increased despite the white knight who charged into the department on his way to slightly better things.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lewis: Right. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that when one looks at all of these areas we know that we can control our economy because we are generating the money. And if we exercise, by way of regulation and by way of particular economic policy, some of those controls we do not need a conference to demonstrate the obvious; we just need some measures to reverse the trend. Abraham Rotstein in the Toronto Daily Star of March 31 put it rather well when he ended an article and said:

We have become addicted to foreign investment in this country as an apparently painless and costless solution to our economic problems. It is neither, and we must begin to confront our own problems by drawing increasingly on our own resources and skills.

So little do we now receive by way of net capital inflow that the argument my colleague made yesterday in the debate on unemployment, on the number of jobs that are lost by branch-plant shutdowns and layoffs, may indeed exceed at this point the number of jobs created by new capital inflow. I do not mean the number of jobs created by the recycling of Canadian money through branch plant subsidiaries. That is our own money, and the jobs would be there whether under this government or under an NDP government. The only difference is that we will have some control of investment capital for social purposes and for rather more useful ends. And to that end, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Randall: Now quote from Ramsay Cook.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a mindless simplicity about the member's errors.

Mr. Randall: Quote from Ramsay Cook.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Ramsay Cook and I canvassed in Winnipeg in 1959. I did agree with him then and I do not agree with him now.

Mr. Singer: There will be more and more in that party the member does not agree with.

Mr. Lewis: Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the way in which it will be achieved is the early implementation of an Ontario Development Corporation into which will be channelled by law—I put it on the record carefully—funds from the private sector, and from the loan and trust and financial institutions purchasing bonds, on which they will receive a return, a fair rate of return. The Ontario Development Corporation will then have a considerable revenue with which to develop the public sector as it sees fit in terms of public priorities; will join in private-public ventures; will purchase equity in secondary manufacturing in Ontario; will use some risk capital in areas which private enterprise will not touch.

In addition to that, Mr. Speaker, there will be a spinoff—a multiplier effect, which seems to be the phrase used in this Legislature latterly—of various Crown corporations; one in the mining industry; one in the pulp and paper industry; one in the automobile insurance area; one in the area of drug distribution, Crown corporations which will also be allied to the Ontario Development Corporation and for which there is immense public support in the Province of Ontario. There will be, as many have advocated for a considerable period of time, takeover review boards with the authority to prevent further acquisition of Canadian companies by foreign ownership.

And there will be a code of corporate behaviour—not one to genuflect before in that cavalier fashion which means nothing; so often have Tories opposite talked of codes of corporate behaviour—but a code which embodies in it complete financial disclosure, a code which embodies in it provisions for economic justification in the case of branch plant shutdown or layoff, retraining, and relocation for the workers involved.

In sum, the essential problem, I say to the Premier and those opposite, is that the government lacks faith in Ontario. We do not lack faith in this province. The difficulty is that after 28 years of power, faced now with insurmountable problems, the government turns to solutions which others have long ago discarded. But, on the question of economic nationalism, it is more than the immobilizing absence of policy or will, it is an absence of faith in the capacities of this province to order, independent of foreign control, our destiny. That is where we divide in emotional ways as well as pragmatic ways. Over there, there is no sense that there is the capacity of Ontario to order its own economic destiny.

And if we did exercise our own controls, Mr. Speaker, there would be no great economic upheavals in the process. Controls of foreign investment and the use of public investment are commonplace in almost every western nation. As a matter of fact, they tend to stabilize the economy, creating more jobs by not losing them to the branch plant. But in Canada, in Ontario, a dogmatic, doctrinaire ideology renders the government passive, subject to an increasingly client-state position, which we will then have to reverse. The government avoids the obvious economic realities. Its arguments fit the situation up to about 1956, but the last 15 years have changed all that. So the government is reduced to specious, not to say spurious, reasoning.

The evidence is on our side, Mr. Speaker. The documentation is on our side, Mr. Speaker. The record supporting our position mounts with every day that passes. The public is emotionally on our side. More and more the public has the knowledge and the substance to give weight to their emotional instincts. You ask for a rational and unemotional discussion. Time is running out, Mr.

Speaker, rational discussion for the Tories means waiting a decade.

We make no apologies for feeling emotion about the erosion of our economic sovereignty. We will debate with the government up and down Ontario in the next election on matters of economic independence and the public will be with us, as the government learned in its own leadership campaign. So, have conferences and little festivals of protocol and little pre-election rituals of public concern. They will serve the government not at all. That is the style of an old government, not a new one. The capacity to govern fails again.

If the Premier were here, Mr. Speaker, I would say to him, look to his flanks. For one week a government, supposedly novel, has been in office. It is actually the fourth year of the old regime. Its housing programme is discredited. Its unemployment policies are discredited. The Ontario Hospital school system looms yet again as a grim recollection of continuity with the old regime. The possibility of yet extra double billing in medical insurance raises its head. One of the regional governments is already in disarray: a sad augury for the rest. Nothing smacks of newness.

It is an ancient, failing, unimaginative, listless rump of a great party that once was and is now destined for defeat; and the Premier has accomplished it all in one week.

That is a considerable record. It might not have happened with the Attorney General had he achieved other office, but it has been a remarkable performance of failure in one week.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): The member said that four years ago.

Mr. Lewis: It would never have happened under the man for London North (Mr. Robarts). He would not have tolerated it. The Premier's whole Throne Speech showed that. Ah, had we only drafted that document, Mr. Speaker, what worlds there would have been to conquer. The whole welter of social and economic change which is in our programme would have been introduced, piece by piece, point by point, in a way which wins public admiration and support, as is demonstrable in the Province of Manitoba.

I want to tell you—across the rows over there—we face this election in good spirits. We are anxious for it. Never again in the foreseeable future will the Tories form a majority government in this province; probably not for the rest of this century.

My suggestion—and it is offered in good faith—is that they should call an election sooner than later, because with every day that passes they handicap themselves ever more grievously. We are not sanguine about elections, Mr. Speaker. We know how tough they are, how difficult a road it is—

Mr. Villeneuve: The member will find out.

Mr. Lawlor: We will teach the government a lesson.

Mr. Lewis: —how much muscle has to be brought to bear. But I may say that we have profound hopes of forming the single largest party in this province after this election, and when we do, Mr. Speaker, we will deliver the promises to which we pledged ourselves.

And on that note I want to read a sub-amendment to the amendment placed before the House: I move, seconded by the member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman) that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable, the Lieutenant Governor now before the House be amended—having accepted all the gestures in the Liberal amendment—by adding after the words “the rightful heritage of the people of Ontario” the following words—for obvious reasons:

9. the failure of the government to reassert Ontario's control over its own economy by refusing to:

(a) Establish or revamp the provincial development corporation actively to develop resources and secondary industry by planned channelling of a greater proportion of the capital available for investment in this province.

(b) Amend the corporation and securities laws to provide for full disclosure of the operations of foreign-controlled subsidiaries.

(c) Establish a takeover review board which would examine proposals for takeovers by foreign interests and work out methods for retaining Canadian control and protecting Canadian interests.

(d) Stop incentive grants to foreign-based corporations, giving them instead to Canadian enterprises in return for an equity interest so that the people share in any profits.

10. The failure of the government to spur in particular the processing of northern raw material and the development of secondary and tertiary industry in the north by refusing to:

(a) Establish a Crown corporation for mine exploration and development and to force the pace of expansion through public enterprise, and if appropriate, engaging in joint ventures with private enterprise already active in the mining sector.

(b) Establish a northern development fund purposefully to direct an equitable amount of investment to the region.

11. The failure of the government to establish a universal public automobile insurance programme at cost based on compensation regardless of fault.

12. The failure of the government to lower the eligible voting age to 18.

On those issues and on all others enumerated, we look forward to the hustings, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Moved by Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Pitman:

That the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech by the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor now before the House be amended by adding after the words "the righteous heritage of the people of Ontario" the following words:

9. The failure of the government to reassert Ontario's control over its own economy by refusing to:

(a) Establish a revamped provincial development corporation actively to develop resources in secondary industry by planned channelling of a greater proportion of the capital available for investment in this province;

(b) Amend the corporation and securities laws to provide for full disclosure of the operations of foreign-controlled subsidiaries;

(c) Establish a takeover review board which would examine proposals for takeovers by foreign interests and work out methods of retaining Canadian control and protecting Canadian interests;

(d) Stop incentive grants to foreign-based corporations, giving them instead to Canadian enterprises in return for an equity interest so that the people share in any profits.

10. The failure of the government to spur in particular the processing of northern raw materials and the development of secondary and tertiary industry in the north by refusing to:

(a) Establish a Crown corporation for mine exploration and development and to force the pace of expansion through public enterprise and, if appropriate, engaging in joint ventures with private enterprises already active in the mining sector;

(b) Establish a northern development fund purposefully to direct an equitable amount of investment to the region.

11. The failure of the government to establish a universal public auto insurance plan at cost based on compensation regardless of fault.

12. The failure of the government to lower the eligible voting age to 18.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence moves the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on that motion, could we ascertain just why the government has changed its mind, why the government cannot stick to an announced programme even through a period of 24 hours? I noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the next gentleman on the list, the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson), left the House in a great dudgeon—if he had had a gun, I suspect he might have shot the House leader—when suddenly the government in its great wisdom suddenly decided to change the order of the day.

Surely we can expect—not that it makes any difference to us because we can proceed with either the Throne debate or with the unemployment debate—but surely we have a right to expect that this brave new government is going to be so able to order its affairs that it knows at least 24 hours in advance what the order of business is going to be in this Legislature.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I think that comment calls for no comment in reply. The government directs the business of the House. As the hon. member for Downsview admits, it makes no difference to him whether we go to the debate on the unemployment motion or no, and in our wisdom we felt this was a good time to do it. So I would ask for the second order.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The second order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House expresses its great concern over the serious unemployment that is prevailing in Ontario and throughout Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): They have probably lost another whip. We will not see him around too often.

NOTICE OF MOTION I

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): Mr. Speaker, in this debate that is on-again, off-again, there is no particular amount of objection from me—we take the attitude on this side of the House, of course, that we are ready any time to do anything and if not, we will take our chances.

In any case, my compliments to the previous speaker on the other debate. It is a hard act to follow by a low-key member—

Mr. Singer: Not at all!

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Maybe we will hear some sense.

Mr. S. J. Randall (Don Mills): Ed Sullivan would bring in the dog act right now.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): He is honest. The rest of those Liberals are not.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not let them chastise you.

Mr. Farquhar: They probably did not hear what I said about appropriate emphasis on the word "act."

An hon. member: The hon. member for Don Mills is next.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin has the floor.

Mr. Farquhar: Mr. Speaker, this exercise that we are going through, this unemployment debate, has to be the most significant one in my experience here in the Legislature and one can only speculate on the reasons why the government would introduce a motion like this in an area in which it is so abysmally weak.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Farquhar: Whether strategy dictated the move in an effort to forestall, say, a want of confidence debate or motion or whether the cabinet ministers were prepared to suffer through a debate that might take the heat off or out from under the very serious problem, we will probably never know.

Mr. Nixon: It is supposed to be the beginning of the new wave.

Mr. Farquhar: In any case, it would seem to me that the turn of this debate would indicate that it will be some time before the government will put this Legislature in a position where all of their inadequacies with respect to unemployment policies can be trotted out and highlighted for the attention of the people of Ontario.

Mr. J. Morin (Ottawa East): Hear, hear!

Mr. Farquhar: One thing seems to be coming clear, and that is that the way for a new cabinet minister to make his mark and move up in the pecking order will entirely depend upon how loud he can shout at Ottawa. It is disturbing indeed that this government through its ministers seems to be taking a stance that is rapidly moving this province into a situation against the Dominion of Canada.

Let me highlight, if I can, two areas of government policy at both senior levels that are inadequate and, at the same time, offer a suggestion in each case as to a more positive approach to curing unemployment especially in the parts of the province where I have responsibility.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday there were, and there will be, many speakers who dwell on the situation created by high unemployment in urban centres, and the things that the three levels of government are or are not doing about it. I am concerned specifically, and it is my responsibility, to do something about the large number of unemployed in small communities, towns and villages and rural, semi-rural and northern municipalities in an area such as Manitoulin Island and along the north shore.

The direct and immediate results, of course, as has been said by other speakers, are the mushrooming costs of welfare and the many social and family disruptions. Anywhere we look today, of course, we can read about the approaches of the two senior levels of government in their several attacks on high unemployment and the shortcomings in the policies of these two levels with respect to this attack.

Most of what I have to say today, or have heard yesterday from the government benches, seems to be oriented to the problems in large urban centres. We hear elaborate statements from the provincial government regarding the infusion of funds into the building of government buildings, housing and related efforts to absorb unemployed people, and we read a lot these days about the federal government's approach to providing employment.

Some of us are even involved in the applications for the incentives available to potential industries. Both of these programmes no doubt have merit and, no doubt, in time will have the effect of reducing unemployment and making our metropolitan areas bigger and more affluent than ever, but neither one, unless real changes and real understanding take place, will have any effect on the rural or small community citizens with whom I am concerned.

The first area I want to speak about for the moment is the assistance being made, granted, or becoming available now to municipalities in the form of support for municipal public works in these small towns. In that regard, especially in areas like Algoma-Manitoulin, I have the feeling somehow that the senior levels of government have largely forgotten the third party in government in terms of efforts to reduce unemployment.

Oh, yes, I know about the subsidies branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs and their $1 per capita offer which in a town like Webbwood or Massey or Gore Bay, will provide $400 or $500 toward a capital assistance programme, but I am convinced that the elected municipal local governments, if given the proper support, are the only level of government which know the needs of their communities, which recognize the abuses and wastes creeping into welfare programmes, and which would very quickly take care of the unemployment in their midst.

It is my hope that through the new Minister of Economics (Mr. McKeough) and through the new Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales) that they would accept my suggestion and my opinion that this provincial government enter into a much more significant shared financial arrangement with the federal government which would offer to municipalities, with inadequate assessment bases, a much more lenient and a higher level of support in the way of per capita or additional or unconditional grants: a much higher percentage of every dollar the municipalities are prepared to put into approved municipal works, such as sewers, waterworks, streets and sidewalks, even housing.

Oh, I understand that the larger centres are going to get most of the bonanzas from both the federal and provincial governments, because of course that is where the votes are. It is my responsibility, however, to persuade this government and the federal government to look beyond those highly urban centres and look at the areas of what I consider real and important need.

The interesting part of this whole question, of course, is that most of the communities I have in mind have plans already formulated and cost studies on hand for various desired projects. I have even been instrumental in arranging that these studies be made at quite some significant administrative costs. But these studies have only proven that these municipalities cannot afford them and they will never get them without the kind of assistance I am suggesting. I am convinced that the municipal elected governments, under such a plan, would quickly and efficiently assume responsibility for the upgrading of services and the provision of amenities that semi-rural people are just as entitled to as urban dwellers.

I am convinced also that such projects would be administered by the municipalities in such a way as to decrease unemployment and curtail the welfare spending and with a positive result. Such a programme would supply the housing and other services without which small communities will never attract industry, but with which they would have a fighting chance for survival, perhaps even growth.

Those of us who are concerned with approaching industry and trying to attract industry and persuading industry and other entrepreneurs to move into these small areas—in other words trying to promote decentralization of the work force—have run into the situation many, many times where industries look at our low assessments but finally turn off their ambition and their enthusiasm because of the lack of services in these small areas.

It is indeed interesting to speculate on the advantages that would result from a higher level of co-operation with the municipalities by both levels of senior government. For instance, if there were guidelines attached in a more definite and more positive way to the spending of such funds, the municipalities would very quickly, as I have said, clean up the available work force in their midst.

They would be required, of course, to put to work local people as a priority on such projects. The citizens of these municipalities would be allowed to experience some of the pleasures and the advantages that are supposed to go with modern living. Those municipalities would be put in a position where they could attract industry and more employment. Last, but not least, every such project entered into would result in decreased pollution of our lakes and rivers. As I have suggested, the ideas stemming from the two senior levels of government seem to ignore the fact that the people who could do the job are not being allowed and assisted to do it and are not even considered in most of the programmes. The programmes that we read about and hear about are programmes that are imposed on municipalities, not offered to the municipalities.

Let me tell you how the municipalities in my riding feel by reading only two or three of the pertinent parts from letters from mayors and reeves on Manitoulin and along the north shore. One is from Mayor Donald McMillan of the town Webbwood to the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr).

In the town of Webbwood, the water and sewer project seems to have been completely engineered and from the standpoint of the municipality, ready to proceed. In correspondence, however, with the commission it seems that while the physical arrangements are complete, the Ontario Water Resources Commission is not prepared to proceed until 1972. It is my feeling that advancement of this project to 1971 would take care of some badly needed employment, as well as putting our town in a position where they could attract some interested industry.

It is our opinion that these projects are moving much too slow and are attacking the requested resolution of council.

Another one from the town of Gore Bay on Manitoulin Island; Mayor John Lane says—well, he details and I will not go through this. He details three projects that have priorities and they worked on them for years and finally concludes in this way:

The only way we could possibly do these projects is to receive unconditional grants or assistance from government departments. A per capita grant does not do much to alleviate the situation, because our total population in the town is less than 800 persons. However, we do supply goods and services for our farming populations of over 3,000 people in the surrounding countryside and so on. I am sure many small municipalities in northern Ontario are faced with much the same problem as we are here in Gore Bay.

Another one, again from the mayor of Gore Bay, and it is to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Davis) office:

I have read with interest your recent release from the department of the Prime Minister, regarding work programmes to relieve the unemployment situation, and of particular interest to towns for grants and low interest loans for employment stimulating capital projects. Our town is now faced with the cost of installing a sewage treatment plant and there is no way that it is possible for the taxpayers to bear the cost of such a project.

I think that most of the municipalities in my riding have been acquainted with some of the statements that have taken place recently and of course they are doing their best to get involved in those programmes.

Mr. Speaker, the other concern that I have, and of course, it is an extension of some of the remarks that our leader made with respect to this province's approach to the federal government. What he was saying, of course, reflects the fact that this government of Ontario seems to refer to the federal government as those Liberals in Ottawa, instead of thinking of them as the government of Canada.

What the cabinet of this government seems to forget is that there are those of us who have taken the trouble to inquire into federal efforts and available assistance in the form of incentives to industry and, in fact, deal with them every day. I personally have been doing it for a long time and I would expect to do it further. I am quite prepared and have taken a fairly independent critical approach to solve the shortcomings of the federal government, and incidentally, I make no apologies—echoing what the new Treasurer said the other day. I make no apologies either for the fact that I will go to Ottawa or Timbuktu, or anywhere else to get the kind of things for my people that I cannot get here, and as I say, I am doing it every day. It might be interesting for the members to know that during the last six months I have been involved in nine successful applications for incentives in the Algoma-Manitoulin and Algoma area.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Do not see the Tories nominating anybody up there.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: After years of representing it, one wonders.

Mr. Trotter: You are just jealous.

Mr. Farquhar: This is not to say that all of the efforts I have engaged in have been successful. I expect that there are many again that have not been successful, but certainly when you wander through all the levels of authority at 950 Yonge Street and you assist in providing the details necessary to complete applications for provincial and federal incentives, you become fairly familiar with the roadblocks that are placed in the way of an entrepreneur at both the federal and provincial levels, and through the process of working those applications through to finalization, at whichever level, some very interesting information comes to the front.

Some very interesting comparisons can be pointed up between the initiative and the ambition and the sincerity of the provincial programme as opposed to the federal one. And it is my suggestion to the Minister of Treasury and Economics and to the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman), that those gentlemen take a very close look at the operation at 950 Yonge Street and if either one of them needs any more information with respect to the inadequacies over there, all he has to do is ask me.

Mr. Nixon: I think the member would make a good minister in that department.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Do what Bourassa did and appoint him.

Mr. Farquhar: Well, I hope that this government is sincere and really means the words in the Speech from the Throne—

Mr. Trotter: No chance, not a chance.

Mr. Farquhar: —that have to do with the incentives available to industry and the intentions of the government to update their efforts in that regard.

Mr. Trotter: No way will they ever update it.

Mr. Farquhar: I quote, for instance, from the Speech from the Throne:

Existing regulations and standards of the Ontario Development Corporation and the Northern Ontario Development Corporation are being revised so that assistance will be more readily available to small Canadian-owned businesses and to certain segments of our service industries. A programme of immediate assistance has been launched to improve or relocate tourist establishments.

Well, there certainly have to be some changes there to make that programme significant, because at the moment the municipal people and most of the citizens in Algoma-Manitoulin understand and have knowledge of the lengthy delays and are very much aware of these shortcomings. And no amount of flamboyant publicity by the department concerned with NODC is going to promote anything at this point up there but derision.

Mr. Nixon: They should have turfed out the old dead wood, as the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) said.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would find this an appropriate point at which to break his remarks, or if he has only a minute or two he could continue.

Mr. Farquhar: If I could take another minute or two I would appreciate it.

I just want to mention that too many of the entrepreneurs concerned about doing something in the way of self-employment and hiring other people, have made approaches to that department and wound up in utter frustration. I could go into some deep detail with respect to specific applications to ODC and now NODC, and the terrible time lag and the terrible frustration that is felt.

I do not want to place on the record a lot of detail with respect to the interminable delays when applications are made, but I get the feeling that the delays are not because of lack of administrative efforts, or ambition or initiative at 950 Yonge; the delays are made necessary because of the inertia right here. I just do not believe—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Farquhar: I just do not believe that the minister responsible really understands that when a young fellow on a payroll decides to leave that payroll and become an entrepreneur and make an investment in some industry that would provide him and others employment, he cannot afford to wait six months for a decision to be made, which so often turns out to be negative. And what do you think he does during those six months except stay at home and lose his initiative and his ambition to proceed.

In that regard, at least the department people responsible for provincial incentives to industry could take a leaf out of the Regional Economic Expansion programme's book.

I have several times assisted an entrepreneur to make his application, sent it to the Regional Economic Expansion office, waited for a week, demanded an interview, made a trip to Ottawa and in one day a decision is made, yes or no. That is the way to do business and that is what this government does not understand.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): A designated area is different.

Mr. Farquhar: It has nothing to do with designation; it has nothing to do with it. These incentives we are talking about now have no reference to designation—I think maybe the hon. minister had better go over to 950 Younge Street to—

Mr. Singer: Issue a writ! That will show them. Issue a writ!

Mr. Farquhar: Approaches being taken now with respect to incentives in our part of the country have worked for me and they have worked for a lot of people in Algoma-Manitoulin. And I expect that will continue to. I would certainly be delighted to promote a greater use of incentives from the Province of Ontario if I had not had several sad experiences.

The people in my riding are prepared to make use of any programme that is offered in seriousness by this government, they are prepared to put their life savings into small industries that will provide employment but they cannot wait six months for a decision from this government.

The members opposite will be quick to say, of course, that the provincial Liberals are once again crawling into bed with the federal Liberals. But there are at least two cabinet ministers among the members opposite who know that my approaches to the federal government have been significant.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member, I notice, is picking up another page and we have gone several minutes past the adjournment hour.

Mr. Farquhar: Actually, I think this is a pretty good spot. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Farquhar moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, before moving adjournment of the House I would like to indicate that we will resume the debate on the reply to the Speech from the Throne tomorrow and possibly we will get into some second readings.

It is my understanding that all the bills on the order paper are now printed, so if we have an opportunity we will go to second reading.

Mr. MacDonald (York South): To any of them or all of them?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Possibly to all of them.

Mr. MacDonald: Can the minister give us any indication?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: They will all be ready; they are all printed.

An hon. member: Are any of them very serious? Nothing very—

Mr. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): A morning session or an afternoon session?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: There is no morning session.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:05 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 8, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.
The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I announce to this House the establishment of three new wild river parks.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Wild river parks?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I know the Leader of the Opposition will welcome the news.

These important additions to our provincial park system will provide opportunities for wilderness recreation experiences which are so important to a growing number of people in Ontario.

The Mississagi Wild River Park, located northeast of Sault Ste. Marie, is the largest of the three parks, comprising some 120 miles of the rugged Mississagi River and connecting waters. The park runs from near Biscotasing on the CPR main line to Rocky Island Lake, north of Thessalon.

The Chapleau-Nemegosenda Wild River Park includes 75 miles of the Chapleau and Nemegosenda rivers in the area between the town of Chapleau and Kapuskasing Lake, adjacent to the main line of the CNR. This wild river park offers the canoeist an opportunity for a most interesting circle route through landscapes of wide variety.

The Lady Evelyn Wild River Park is the third of the new parks and comprises a 35-mile section of this river which empties into beautiful Lady Evelyn Lake in the Temagami country.

These three wild river parks augment the two previously established parks in this class—the Winisk River flowing into Hudson Bay and a segment of the historic Mattawa River. With the exception of the remote Winisk River, all of these parks are readily accessible to the canoeist who welcomes the challenge of travelling untamed rivers.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Trade and Development.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, an editorial in the March 31, 1971, issue of The Globe and Mail—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): It is probably all true.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —questioned a loan granted a Quebec firm known as Bio-Research Laboratories by the Ontario Development Corporation. It asked the question, "Was this an Ontario raid on Quebec?"

Mr. Speaker, there has been no change in Ontario's policy toward attracting industry from other provinces in Canada. If Bio-Research had removed its existing operation from Quebec, the government of Ontario would not have provided it with any financial assistance. Our policy is very clear, and I would like to enunciate it for the benefit of the members.

If a company wishes to remove its entire operations from another province into Ontario, no financial assistance of any kind will be given to it by this government. If a company located in another province of Canada wishes to leave its existing operation in that province to establish a branch plant in Ontario, either to better supply the Ontario market or for other good business reasons, then financial assistance will be given for the establishment of a branch plant operation only.

In the case of Bio-Research, financial assistance was given by the Ontario Development Corporation to enable the company to increase both its physical facilities and employment in the Province of Ontario and to allow further expansion in Quebec at the same time. Construction of the new facilities in Quebec is already under way.

If the circumstances had contravened our existing policies, no financial aid would have been given. Bio-Research Laboratories has two establishments, one in Gloucester township near Ottawa and the other in Montreal. It is engaged in biological and allied research and is an expanding organization.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): No; that is not what Etchen said.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In drawing up its expansion plan the company decided that it would be more efficient for it to relocate its toxicology division alongside its animal breeding activities in Gloucester township. There were two major reasons for this decision: 1. To guard the animals against the possibility of contamination in intercity shipment and thus preserve their virus-free status—

Mr. Sargent: The hon. minister is out of order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —2. To make the space which this division was occupying in Montreal available for other expansion. Twenty-nine new staff will be employed in Gloucester township, of which about 10 will be coming from Quebec and 19 will be recruited in Ontario. The loss of these 10 from Quebec will be more than made up by the creation of about 20 new jobs in Montreal.

I am advised that the company is already engaged in expanding its other divisions in Quebec as follows: Pollution research division, pharmacology division, microbiology division and a chemistry division. Expansion of these facilities in Montreal is already under way; and as I mentioned earlier, relocating the toxicology premises in Montreal will provide the company with additional space in Quebec for this expansion.

At the present time the company is employing 75 people in Quebec. When the expansion of existing facilities, which are already under way, is completed and, after the transfer of the toxicology division to Gloucester township, the existing work force of 75 people will be increased to 90 people immediately, with further increases probable in future years.

By these arrangements and with the assistance of an ODC performance loan, all interested parties to this transaction will benefit. The company will be enabled to expand its facilities in both Ontario and Quebec in the most efficient manner and in the company's best interest. These arrangements would give the operations in both Ontario and Quebec the best chance to succeed. Ontario will gain a new toxicology division and 29 jobs. Quebec will achieve expansions to the pollution research division—

Mr. Sargent: Twenty-nine jobs!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —chemistry division, microbiology division and pharmacology division. In addition it will gain the space vacated by the toxicology division to accommodate part of this expansion. The existing work force in Montreal will grow from 75 to 90 immediately, with further increases in the future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Minister of Social and Family Services.

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, I am happy today to announce that the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services is officially recognizing June 20 to 26 as Ontario Senior Citizens' Week in this province, with the theme, "Lot to live; lot to give". Ontario senior citizens, Mr. Speaker, have indeed a lot to live for; they also have a lot to give to other members of the community. This is why the Ontario Department of Social and Family Services is officially recognizing Ontario Senior Citizens' Week.

We would wish, Mr. Speaker, that each and every community in this province would take part in this special tribute to our elderly. Although the promotion of a province-wide senior citizens' week is new, the idea as such is not. Many groups of senior citizens' clubs across Ontario have been endorsing the week, beginning with the third Sunday in June, each year, as Senior Citizens' Week.

The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Caruthers) has in previous years, as you know, Mr. Speaker, introduced into this Legislature a bill to proclaim such a week—and it has been endorsed by members of all political parties in this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I have set up an advisory committee for Ontario Senior Citizens' Week. This committee will be chaired by the member for Durham and will include representatives of senior citizens' associations in this province. I would, Mr. Speaker, encourage organizations and individuals to get involved in the planning and carrying out of this first province-wide Senior Citizens' Week.

During this time, we want to make as many people as possible aware of the contribution of the elderly, of the services for the elderly and what it means to grow old. Primary planning for the week will be at the local community level where—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): What about supplementing their income as a first start?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —municipal governments and voluntary associations are most involved with senior citizens' groups and elderly people in the area. Our department, Mr. Speaker, particularly the homes for the aged branch, will give support—

Mr. Lewis: Just give a little monthly supplement to the old age security. It will be a lot better than a special week.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —to all endeavours and will encourage other departments, commissions and agencies of the government of Ontario to co-operate with other private groups concerned.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): What about the Treasury Board?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, an information kit with ideas and suggestions as to activities which can be planned for Senior Citizens' Week is this week being sent to all municipal councils and social service departments in Ontario—

Mr. Deans: How about raising their income to the poverty level?

Hon. Mr. Wells: —all social planning councils, newspapers and all members of this House.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): The minister remembers who said, "Let them live on cake," eh?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member just does not have an interest in them.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Is the member for Scarborough West opposing it?

Mr. Lewis: No, no; but when he was Minister of Health he did not bring nursing homes under medical care insurance.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member has no interest.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

DESIGN FOR DEVELOPMENT

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier if he has assumed the responsibilities of chairman of the Design for Development cabinet committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have not assumed the responsibilities of chairman of the Design for Development committee.

Mr. Lewis: Somebody should!

Mr. Nixon: Since he is not chairman, I wonder if he can report to the House if there is any discussion at the cabinet level towards the application of the Toronto-centred region as it applies to Century City and the problems that have been brought forward, not only by those people who have purchased the lands, that is the developers—and I must say I am not so interested in their problems as the problems of the farmers who sold the land to the developers in the first place. Is the Premier aware that payments on these lands have in many cases been abandoned over many months since the Toronto-centred region was established? Is any action at the governmental level contemplated?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, all submissions relating to the Toronto-centred region have been transmitted, perhaps some are still in the process, to The Department of Treasury and Economics. The question of Century City, of course, is one of those areas under consideration. As further developments are determined with respect to the Toronto-centred region, the Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) and myself will fully inform the House. I am quite aware of the difficulty with respect to the landowners, or perhaps they really are mortgagees in this instance, who sold their lands to Century City.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Can the Premier state to the House whether or not any of his colleagues or former colleagues entered into an undertaking with the developers that the plan for Century City could be and would be approved?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge there is no undertaking by this government that Century City would be approved.

Mr. Nixon: The question had to do with his colleagues, that is particularly the former Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough).

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the former Minister of Municipal Affairs. As I say, there is no commitment to my knowledge from this government with respect to Century City.

SPEED LIMIT ON QEW

Mr. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Highways and Transportation.

Has he any plan to increase the speed limit on the Queen Elizabeth Way, where the six lanes have been completed, to 70 miles per hour?

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): Did the hon. member get caught this morning?

Mr. Nixon: If I get caught once more—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): Mr. Speaker, not quite in the categorical terms which constituted the question asked by the—

Mr. Nixon: It is urgent.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: To the hon. Leader of the Opposition I would say that the matter is under review. There is some merit in what he has proposed, the increase of those speed limits, but there are sections of the Queen Elizabeth Way where probably a lower speed limit should be retained.

Mr. Nixon: On the six-lane portion?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There are certain areas of the six-lane portion where the limitation of access has probably not as yet been completed.

Mr. Gisborn: It would be suicidal to raise the speed limit.

SECOND READING OF BILL 10

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Does he intend to present Bill 10 for second reading today?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Bill 10?

Mr. Nixon: That is The Farm Products Marketing Act, 1971.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, it is not my intention today, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Has the minister been in consultation with his friend, I presume, the Minister of Agriculture in the province of Quebec over the serious problems that would be raised by the passage of this bill—in fact, leading almost to inter-provincial farm products trade wars?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me that the question posed by the hon. member would be better delayed until the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Nixon: I cannot ask a question on second reading, I am sorry.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member cannot ask a question?

Mr. Nixon: No, I cannot ask a question on second reading.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. leader is anticipating something which may or may not happen, and normally those are not proper questions but—

Mr. Lewis: It is perfectly valid.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, if I may, on a point of order. Would you instruct me, sir, as to whether or not it would be within the rules, as you see them, for me to ask this question on second reading with expectation of an answer?

Mr. Speaker: Of course I am not sure how the hon. leader would propose to ask it in the debate on the second reading, but if he included it in his debate speech and the minister decided to answer it, then of course he could ask and the question could be answered.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact, if you will permit me, that the minister has said that the bill will not be under consideration today, can he inform the House as to what communications he has had with Ministers of Agriculture in other provinces pertaining to the growing and serious problem of the divisions among the provinces which tend to restrict trade in agricultural produce?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to answer that question. We have had considerable discussion with ministers across Canada and my position is well known regarding the Ontario position vis-à-vis the national marketing legislation proposed by the government of Canada. I frankly support that legislation publicly and privately. There is a public document covering my presentation on behalf of the province of Ontario on January 25 before the standing committee on agriculture for the government of Canada, who presented themselves in Ontario for any who wanted to appear before them; and I did just that. I took a very strong position supporting the legislation, with certain amendments, particularly the inclusion of appeal sections within the national marketing legislation.

Frankly, I feel that unless something like this is done on a national basis, whereby producers in various provinces can sit down and discuss these things—

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Do those Tories in Ottawa agree with the minister?

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—and work these things out—I think that we can resolve these issues. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, with regard to what my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition suggests as being a trade war between provinces—

Mr. Nixon: That is what is coming.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It may be interpreted that way, but let me point out that there is nothing new about restrictions of trade between provinces. The federal government of 1935 introduced and passed in the House of Commons The Canadian Wheat Board Act which very effectively precluded the possibility of trading within provinces on the matter of grain.

Mr. Nixon: We do not grow spring wheat down here.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh well, that is all right, but it precludes the sale of barley, of oats, of wheat, in the provinces of Canada. That has been in effect since 1935. What is so new about the egg producers of Quebec wishing to say to other egg producers in Canada, "We are willing to accept eggs from other provinces into our province but at prices at which our producers can afford to live"? What is so wrong with the province of British Columbia saying, "We will only accept broilers into this province to be sold in the province of British Columbia under a marketing permit so that the producers of broiler chickens in British Columbia can live"? This was the first province to introduce that type of legislation affecting broilers. Most other provinces did the same thing.

As a matter of fact, the provinces of British Columbia and New Brunswick have included in their marketing legislation the right to seize a product that is shipped in and marketed without a permit for the marketing of that product.

This is, essentially Mr. Speaker, the same type of legislation as we now have as far as margarine is concerned in the Province of Ontario. We can and do seize margarine that is shipped here under the margarine Act—The Oleomargarine Act—so that all I have done in the introduction of this amendment to The Farm Products Marketing Act, on behalf of the government which is now known as Bill 10, as I mentioned, is simply provide a commodity board with the right by the Farm Products Marketing Board to seize a commodity that is being marketed illegally according to the regulations of that particular commodity board.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Leader of the Opposition a supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: I do not know what he said that called for that. However, a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: To return to the question, Mr. Speaker: Will the Minister of Agriculture and Food tell the House what discussions he has had on this matter with the Minister of Agriculture in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the minister of Quebec speaks very little English and I speak no French. We cannot communicate well, but I will say this, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Will my hon. friends just wait a moment to hear the answer? My deputy minister has communicated with the deputy minister in Quebec and explained to him exactly what we had in mind.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): Explained or discussed?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Discussed with him what we have had in mind; and what we have told him is just essentially what I have told this House today. We have discussed on many occasions with the deputy and the minister of Quebec, here in Ontario and in Montreal and in Ottawa, these matters of mutual concern regarding poultry products.

We feel that there has to be a resolution to these things, quite frankly; and I can say that as far as I know there has been no thought on behalf of the government of Quebec of trying to violate the plan of any broiler board across Canada, but there may be individuals within the province who might attempt to violate those plans and this is why we introduced the legislation.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary, if you will permit, Mr. Speaker. Is the Minister of Agriculture and Food aware that the Quebec Minister of Agriculture is quoted as saying that Quebec will resort to reprisals if Ontario introduces further hindrances to entry of Quebec agricultural products into this province?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I am not aware of that. I would hope that the conversations that have been held with the deputy minister in Quebec would relieve his concern, if indeed he has expressed such concern, of which I am not aware. He has assured me that they are quite willing to continue to accept Ontario eggs, marketed legally through FEDCO, which is their egg marketing board. On behalf of the broiler board of Ontario I have assured him that we are quite willing to continue to accept into the Province of Ontario the normal shipment of broilers that had been going on for many months, but we cannot absorb into the Province of Ontario the incredible number of broilers that were poured in at a time when our broiler industry was definitely threatened. And by this I mean the normal production of broilers in Ontario is about 1.4 million a week—and we can market them fine and dandy. We were also marketing up to 250,300 broilers a week from outside of Ontario, but when that figure of imports reached 700,000 and 800,000 birds a week, we had a backup on the broiler production farms of this province of up to 900,000 birds. We just had to take some effective action. As a result we have been able to gradually work our way out of that incredible surplus and backup in this province.

By the same token, I pay tribute and express appreciation to the federal government for having introduced an export-subsidized programme to get broilers out of Canada. I believe that they have purchased a number from the Province of Quebec and have moved them out at some degree of subsidy—I am not sure at how much cost, but at least they are out of the country. That will help greatly to relieve the pressure that certainly was building up.

I think we have to recognize in these particular types of commodities that there has to be some degree of supply management, and I do not say that supply management should apply to all agricultural commodities by any means, but I think it should apply—

Mr. Lewis: Be careful; it sounds like planning!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —to those commodities that can be produced almost without limit.

Mr. Lewis: What about the freedom of the marketplace?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, in view of—

Mr. Speaker: I think this should be the last supplementary. There are other members who wish supplementaries.

Mr. Nixon: In view of the public threat of reprisals made by the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec, will this minister undertake further contact and negotiation with the Province of Quebec before proceeding with this bill?

Mr. Lewis: Does the minister have any senior civil servants who are advising him—

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. minister is addressed only by the Leader of the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would say that the deputy minister of—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! The hon. minister is answering the Leader of the Opposition, not the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am terribly sorry, sir. May I answer my hon. friend, the Leader of the—

Mr. Speaker: No, just the Leader of the Opposition or we lose control of the debate in this House unless the question is answered.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I assumed that the Leader of the Liberal Party was the hon. the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, I thought the minister was looking in the other direction.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, I will have to look at him?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does that mean, Mr. Speaker, that when they are looking up at the gallery—Oh, well, never mind!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of any threat of reprisals.

Mr. Nixon: I give the minister knowledge of it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well this is fine. That is his word for it. I can assure my hon. friend, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we have had discussions within the last 48 hours with the Deputy Minister of Agriculture of the Province of Quebec, through my deputy minister. The matter has been thoroughly explained and I would assume that there is no difficulty; but I have no hesitancy what—ever in discussing these matters with my friend the minister in Quebec through our deputies, who can converse quite easily and through whom we have to discuss because my deputy minister, Mr. Speaker, is fluently bilingual and he can do this.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South has a supplementary.

Mr. D. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, would the minister undertake to answer my enquiry of the ministry that stands as No. 11 on the bill prior to the second reading if Bill 10 in this House, which concerns this matter?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I will take that under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Middlesex South has a supplementary.

Mr. K. Bolton (Middlesex South): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question of the minister.

Mr. Speaker: This will be the last supplementary on this question.

Mr. Bolton: Will the minister indicate when this bill will be presented; and will he indicate at that time if he will give us the comparative figures of the export of farm products from Quebec; and will he, at the same time, assure us that the Balkanization that is threatened is not valid?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, when my hon. friend from Middlesex South refers to Balkanization of this province I can only assume that he is mouthing the concern of the New Democratic Party of Manitoba who are far more interested in uninhibited production than anything else.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And let me say that the New Democratic Party government of Manitoba, through their Minister of Agriculture has been the only Minister of Agriculture who has taken, to my knowledge, strong exception to the national marketing legislation which we hope will resolve the problem that we are discussing now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Perhaps the hon. member would complete his answer.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is a long way from Manitoba to Middlesex.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Indeed it is, but the same principle is being mouthed by these socialists over here.

Mr. J. Renwick: And there are no electors in Manitoba who—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: He might not have noticed it, but the question was asked of the minister: when would the bill be called for second reading?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think the hon. member should ask that of the House leader, Mr. Speaker. I am just the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Speaker: The supplementaries on this question have been completed.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Well, you allowed the hon. member from Scarborough to ask another supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No, the hon. member from Scarborough did not.

Mr. Singer: He certainly did.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Singer: He rose on a point of order and then turned it into a question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West was out of order, I think, but nevertheless he did not ask a supplementary. He was merely repeating a question that had previously been asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

OWNERSHIP AND SALE OF FORMER CROWN LANDS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Is he now able to table the report on the ownership and the sale of former Crown lands in the northern recreational areas of the province?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): I hope to be able to do so in the near future.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough West.

TEACHER UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education: Can the minister give us an idea of the number of teachers graduating this year—primary and secondary school teachers—who will be unemployed in the next academic year?

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think it is very early to produce these figures.

I am sure the hon. member recognizes during these weeks, and in fact any time up until the end of May, teachers can decide to change their place of employment. So it would be very difficult at this stage to give the hon. member an answer to this question that would in any way be accurate.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, how is it that the teachers' federation can project figures of between 2,000 and 3,000 with some degree of accuracy? Has the minister no evidence before him now of the likely figures?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the first part of that question should be directed to the teachers' federation.

As to the second part of the question, I am not able to give the member accurate information this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Scarborough East has a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Can the minister inform the House how many vacancies there will be in the primary school system and the secondary school system; how many people there will be graduating from the teachers' colleges and colleges of education; and how many teachers will be retiring—so we will know what crisis we are faced with?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, that question could be directed to the order paper—I hope without the editorial comment using the word "crisis."

Mr. Lewis: Oh!

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Sudbury East has a supplementary.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Yes, a similar question to last year: How many of the teachers who graduated last year are still unemployed?

An hon. member: Order paper!

Hon. Mr. Welch: I will take that as notice.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peterborough has a supplementary?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): A supplementary as to whether The Department of Education has indicated to The Department of University Affairs whether more places will be necessary at university level because of the fact that so many of those graduating will not have jobs and will thus go on to university to carry out the qualifications for an elementary teacher, which the minister announced as 1975.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Is that a speech or a statement?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Question or statement?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, that is a very reasonable question on the basis that those elementary school teachers graduating this year who—

Mr. W. Ferrer (Cochrane South): Unreasonable man!

Hon. Mr. Welch: —who may not be able to obtain employment may well be encouraged to take their qualifying year at university as part of their programme in keeping with the new academic requirements.

I must say I have not had discussions with my colleague the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White) as yet on this subject, but that is a very reasonable question and certainly one which I intend to follow through.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question.

Mr. Pitman: A further supplementary: Is the minister aware that the universities will have to know exactly how many places they will be expected to increase in terms of their first year input in order to take up the numbers of teachers who will be unemployed, and they must have this information, really within the next few weeks?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: With the looming problem of a surplus of trained teachers evident, is the minister going to continue with the original teachers' summer short course qualification this year?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes Mr. Speaker, the course, both at McArthur and the Lakehead, has been scheduled for some time. The course at McArthur though is restricted to those areas for which there was an apparent shortage by virtue of letters of permission which had been issued last year.

I cannot be held to the actual courses; they involve about five programme areas which will be the subject matter, and that is the mature students' course which is organized and ready at McArthur College, and then, of course, at the Lakehead as well.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: Would it be true to say that only those people who have applied for special permission of the minister and supported that application with a signed contract with the board, even though they are not qualified teachers, would be permitted to attend those courses?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, about a week ago, after I had a meeting with the executive of the OSSTF, we did send a bulletin to all boards reminding them about the procedures with respect to accepting or entering into contracts with unqualified people in this particular area, and reminding them of course of their obligation to hire qualified people first.

I repeat that the mature student course at McArthur is restricted to certain problem areas on the basis of our survey of the staff needs in those particular areas. As members know, the student submits a contract to the department as part of the procedure of application, and of course we are as concerned as the Leader of the Opposition would be to satisfy ourselves that boards are in fact giving first priority to qualified staff people for these positions.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister indicate whether a decision has been reached in regard to teachers teaching on a letter of permission to permit them to complete the summer school course even though they have not reached the age of 26?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, a good many programmes have a series of qualifications, there is really no difference between this and the problem faced by hundreds of parents whose children will not be five or six until the day after the qualifying date. In order to regulate this programme the mature student has to be 26. There are 1,200 people who will be 26 either a month after the closing date or two months after the closing date. It is difficult to make any exceptions in this programme for mature students.

Mr. Deans: One final supplementary: Does the minister not believe that people who were able to enter the programme prior to the introduction of the age 26 limit should be permitted to continue and complete it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the question is not worded correctly because the student—

Mr. Deans: I worded it and it is okay for me.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the people who are teaching on letters of permission at the moment are not necessarily in the summer programme. These are people who have been hired by boards to do a job on the basis of the regulations dealing with letters of permission. There is nothing to preclude a teacher now teaching on a letter of permission going to the fall course at one of the colleges of education, or seeking an opportunity to qualify at the Lakehead where the age requirement is not in effect, subject to the conditions of admission there.

Mr. Deans: I do not buy it.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West completed his questions?

SURPLUS OF TEACHERS

Mr. Lewis: I have not. I have what amounts to a supplementary. I will ask it as a new question.

Where did the planning go so completely askew that we are now faced with such a surplus of teachers in this given year? Where was the mistake made?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the question presumes a mistake and I think—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I suppose if one was to examine the supply of other professional people in this province, I am sure he would find there is a surplus—

Mr. Lewis: One would find a shortage of doctors!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Scarborough West would allow the minister to answer the question he asked.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: There may be an excessive supply of other professions. I think there are many factors. Perhaps when I have an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to see what the situation actually is, at that time, I could make some comments with respect to the full situation.

Mr. Lewis: The minister had projected a surplus of teachers at least five years ago.

Mr. Pitman: May I ask the minister a question? In his previous role as Provincial Secretary did he hand on the number of children born in the Province of Ontario to the Minister of Education?

Mr. Speaker: That is not a supplementary question.

The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Welch: It is public knowledge.

Mr. Pitman: It is public knowledge? The hon. minister did. He had all the figures.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

GASOLINE PRICE INCREASES

Mr. Lewis: I have a question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker.

Now that the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Minister of Financial Institutions in Quebec have both indicated they are going to ask for a justification of the gas price increases in their provinces, would the Premier reconsider the position of the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this government is not contemplating a reconsideration of the answer I gave yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, am I then to take from the Premier that his government simply accepts the price increases as imposed without any sense that where gasoline costs are concerned the public has a right to know the financial position of these companies?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it gets down to a very basic principle. I am as concerned as the hon. member opposite with respect to price increases, wage increases and all those matters which affect the increase in cost of living. I think, Mr. Speaker, to be completely consistent one must recognize that if we are going to investigate one area of price increase, it also relates to the principle of investigating other areas of price increase.

Mr. Lewis: So they are being investigated?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is not the policy of this government, at this moment, to investigate the question of price increases as it relates to the private sector.

Mr. J. Renwick: What is the policy of this government?

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The government is not going to do anything?

An hon. member: It is good for the stomach muscles anyway.

QUETICO PARK LOGGING BAN

Mr. Lewis: I have a question, Mr. Speaker, of the Minister of Lands and Forests. How is it that Ontario-Minnesota Pulp and Paper Company through their woods production manager, Mr. Bruno Sapala; apparently are not assured of the permanent moratorium on the volume agreement because they are now asking again, before the Quetico advisory committee, for the right to cut in those areas?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, about two months or so ago I announced a moratorium—a recommendation to the Quetico advisory committee that there would be a moratorium on cutting in the western end of Quetico Park, the area under volume agreement where there had been no cutting for at least 15 years. The advisory committee met yesterday at Thunder Bay and are meeting here next week on April 14 and 15. They are dealing with this matter and that puts it in very capable hands.

I do not think at this time that it is necessary to say more. They will be submitting their report to me within the next few months. We will act upon their recommendations as well as our own.

Mr. Lewis: I will not pursue it. Last question—I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: Yes. Pertaining to that moratorium, yesterday the minister said it was more or less a permanent moratorium. Surely there is something more definite that could be said, rather than the minister's statement today that he has nothing further to say. Is it a permanent moratorium or not?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Again I would repeat, this matter is being very actively considered and the report will be submitted to me within the next few months. We will make our views known shortly afterward. There is no cutting at the present time and there has not been any for at least 15 years.

Mr. Singer: More or less.

STUDENT UNREST AT LAKEHEAD

Mr. Lewis: May I ask a question of the Premier? In view of his previous post, has he been in contact with the current Minister of University Affairs to see if an avenue of appeal can be provided at Lakehead University on the apparent firing of three professors without tenure, which appeal has been requested by senate, by the students, by a group of academics, by the faculty association, but not agreed to by the president or board?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am in constant communication with the new Minister of University Affairs. The question of faculty firings—going back to my own involvement in that particular department—is one where, as a matter of general principle, the department of the government has not interfered. There was a single situation, as I recall it, of the member for Scarborough West encouraging the students to the barricades as they relate to a certain institution down the street from us, at which time, because of the dislocation to the institution—

Mr. Lewis: As I recall it, the Premier consented to their request. Does that mean he was on the barricades himself?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, not at all. Nor was I urging them to the barricades.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): The Premier was on the fence as usual.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Nor was I urging them to the barricades. I will save that dialogue for another occasion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all. I will save that for another occasion. I really did not want to be provocative.

Mr. Speaker, it does involve a very real question of principle as to whether or not the government should become involved in the matter of faculty firings. I will be delighted to discuss it with the new Minister of University Affairs and determine whether or not the government or his department should be involved.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary!

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask the Prime Minister whether he would be willing to ask the president to call a meeting of the board of governors so that this matter might be brought before the board of governors in view of the fact that the senate and the faculty association have agreed to his principle of an appeal board? Indeed, the young people are now in the buildings and may be locked in those buildings all during the Easter period until this matter is resolved.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this. I question whether you can, in fact, lock a group of young students in at the Lakehead University over the weekend if they do not desire to be locked in themselves.

As I said to the leader of that particular party, Mr. Speaker, I will discuss this with the Minister of University Affairs and any communication that might resolve I think, rather obviously, would be from him to the president at Lakehead.

Mr. Pitman: I have a final supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the fact that the Minister of University Affairs told them to go back and fight their own battles?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if I had been the Minister of University Affairs it would have been my inclination to endeavour to have them resolve it as best they can, which I think is quite consistent—

An hon. member: That is a dictatorial board.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —with the attitude and the philosophy expressed here on many occasions by the member for Peterborough himself, who more than any single member of this House has indicated to me time and time again—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say that if this is, in fact, what the Minister of University Affairs said, it probably was very good advice.

Mr. Pitman: Just call a meeting.

Mr. Lewis: Tell them to save it for dramatic moments.

Mr. Pitman: The senate has asked for a meeting of the board.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humber has risen on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I am sorry.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to listen to what the Premier had to say. Would he be kind enough to repeat that part of his statement which was drowned out by the applause beside me?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member really has no point of order.

Mr. Ben: No, I did not hear.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I was asked by the member for Scarborough West to have my colleagues here restrain their enthusiastic response to my answers until there were more dramatic moments, I would only point out to him that we in this party are not really involved in drama, nor do I pretend to be on the stage and this has not been my inclination—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —so that it is completely impossible for me to ask my colleagues to restrain their enthusiastic response.

Mr. J. Renwick: Tape it for his act in the theatre!

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now, where did I leave off?

For the benefit of the member for Humber, I was endeavouring to say, in answer to the question from the member for Peterborough, no member of this House has more clearly indicated to me from time to time the need to have the universities develop this autonomous approach as far as it relates to internal administration, and that if I had been the Minister of University Affairs I would have used every effort I could to see if this matter could not be resolved internally within the institution, which, I think, is highly desirable if it can be done.

Mr. Martel: That is what the member for Peterborough asked for.

Mr. Pitman: That is what I asked for; a meeting of the board of governors.

Mr. Speaker: Order. A supplementary question?

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question of the Premier: Would the Premier consider changing the legislation of The Lakehead University Act to incorporate a clause including the concept of "due process" in areas of dismissal which would ensure that there was at least an appeal system possible within the institution?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, an answer to this question would involve not only consideration of an amendment to the Act as it relates to due process for dismissal; it gets into the whole concept of tenure; what is involved in this aspect of it. With great respect I am not sure the member for Scarborough East wants to raise this particular question at this precise moment.

Mr. Lewis: That is right; that is exactly right.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would only say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that the question of internal administration as it relates to dismissal, hirings or firings, should be, and can be, accomplished within the bylaws of the institution without necessarily resorting to the statute.

Mr. Lewis: Not when you have a board like Lakehead.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This has been done by other institutions. With respect, I think it can be developed at Lakehead University without resorting to an amendment.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview has finally—

Interjections by hon. members.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I have a three-part question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Did the Minister of Agriculture and Food obtain a legal opinion from the law officers of the Crown prior to submitting Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act, in relation to its constitutionality, particularly in view of the recent unanimous decision of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba which said that similar legislation in the province was in fact, unconstitutional?

The second question is if there is such an opinion available will the minister table it?

The third question: Does the Province of Ontario intend to intervene in the appeal presently pending before the Supreme Court of Canada questioning the decision of the Supreme Court of Manitoba to which I just referred?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question, the answer is no. For the simple reason, as I explained earlier to a question from the Leader of the Opposition, we already have similar legislation in the Oleomargarine Act. It has been on the statutes for many, many years. It is there, and a known fact. We have not in any way ceased to permit entry to come into Ontario, in fact a product may come into the province but it cannot—

Mr. J. Renwick: It is ever challenged.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): That way it is valid.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —be sold in the province without a permit, from the broiler board in this particular case; so that I find it not unconstitutional in this regard.

My hon. friend refers in the second question to the unanimous opinion expressed by the Appeal Court of the Province of Manitoba. I would direct his attention to the unanimous opinion expressed by the Appeal Court of Quebec what found exactly opposite to the Appeal Court of Manitoba.

Mr. Singer: All the more reason why the minister should intervene.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Exactly opposite!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Does the minister not want to resolve it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I think my hon. friend is using this as an illustration to prove his point as far as the Manitoba Appeal Court is concerned.

Mr. R. S. Smith (Nipissing): Get the people in Ottawa to work.

Mr. Breithaupt: The minister has missed the whole point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: One could ask why we do not support the Appeal Court of the Province of Quebec which found exactly opposite, as I mentioned.

So to me the question is irrelevant. With regard to tabling of the report, I do not have such an answer and so I have not—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the minister did not answer the third part. Is the province going to intervene in the hearings presently pending before the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, Mr. Speaker, we have no intention to intervene.

Mr. Singer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: In view of the doubt about the constitutionality, would it not be worthwhile for the minister before he proceeds any further to obtain the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in Ontario and table that opinion?

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Give him your opinion.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, we have not any reason to believe that we are in violation whatever. I have discussed with other ministers, and in fact with the federal minister, the constitutionality of the action that was taken by other provinces, and in fact who have the legislation on the books that we seek to put on the books. It is there now; no one has questioned it.

Mr. Nixon: Does the minister agree with Quebec?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We agree with the situation that pertains in those other provinces. We are simply doing the same thing as they are doing.

Mr. Singer: The minister will not seek an opinion of the law?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We have an opinion now, because we already have the legislation. I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend seems to be more interested in the constitutionality of a particular question, and I expect that represents the thinking of his party.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister is not now answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It would seem to me that he is more interested in that than he is in doing something to protect the stability—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —of producer marketing in the Province of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

The minister has broken one of the rules of the House in attributing motives to me. My motives certainly are concerned with whether or not the government of the Province of Ontario acts in a legal and constitutional manner and the minister should be aware of that.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Just a moment. I think that the member for Downsview has no complaint because the minister was attributing motives—but they were not improper motives, they were merely motives. The member for York South has the floor.

Mr. Sargent: He certainly was.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food: In view of the conflict between the unanimous decision of the Quebec Supreme Court and the Manitoba Appeal Court on this issue, would the minister not agree that the initial action of the Manitoba government in trying to have this resolved by the highest court of the land was the appropriate way to do it?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, not necessarily at all. They chose to do it that way because, as I mentioned earlier, the NDP government of Manitoba wishes no restraints whatever on the movement of commodities between provinces; they want no restrictions on production. They want to produce all they can to snow under all other agricultural producers in Canada.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Order, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Lewis: It is so much nonsense.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Agriculture and Food is imputing motives to the Manitoba government which are completely erroneous.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If the minister wants to resolve this, get it resolved instead of dangling on.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary? The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question to the minister, would the minister not agree with the statement of—

Mr. Pilkey: Where are the free enterprise boys?

Mr. J. Renwick:—the Minister of Agriculture for the Province of Manitoba, where he stated, on appealing the Manitoba Court of Appeal's judgement, that

We are able to keep well within the legal bounds of precedence; all we seek is a judgement. Should the Supreme Court not uphold the Manitoba Court of Appeal's judgement then it will mean that we are free to take all counter-measures we deem necessary to protect our industry and our agriculture.

Mr. MacDonald: That is the constructive approach.

An hon. member: Oh no!

Mr. J. Renwick: Still quoting:

At least we will finally know exactly where we stand and be able to act accordingly.

Mr. Speaker, does the Minister of Agriculture and Food withdraw the remark which he made in reply to the supplementary question for the member for York South; and does he agree with the statement made by the Minister of Agriculture for Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How come the NDP members are always ready with that stuff from Manitoba? Are they apologists for Manitoba, apologists for the federal government, apologists for the NDP government? Why do they not stick up for Ontario?

Mr. Pilkey: The minister's colleague raised Manitoba. He raised it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Stick up for Ontario.

An hon. member: Who apologizes for the minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No one apologizes for me.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of Agriculture and Food gets into—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps in the minute remaining in the question period we will hear the minister's answer.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: A minute. I do not think I can answer that question in a minute, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. J. Renwick: Withdraw!

Mr. Lewis: Resign!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am afraid my friend over there will be resigning before I do.

Mr. MacDonald: Resign!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, might I suggest in reply to my friend's remark concerning the government of Manitoba, I find it interesting that the government of Manitoba is appealing to the Supreme Court on a matter pertaining to poultry products marketing, but the Manitoba government has not seen fit at any time to appeal the restrictions under The Wheat Board Act, which are identical with what we are doing in commodities other than grains.

Mr. J. Renwick: Does the minister agree with their statement or not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have not read the statement.

Mr. Speaker: This completes today's oral question period.

Mr. Lewis: What is wrong with the members back there?

Mr. Pitman: They figure the best way to make a noise—

Mr. MacDonald: It is therapeutic sound-making.

Mr. Pilkey: Trained seals.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. Meen, from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds the notices, as published in each case, sufficient:

The City of Brantford;
 Protestant Children's Homes;
 To incorporate the Thunder Bay Foundation;
 Huntington University;
 The Town of St. Marys;
 Reliable Plastering Limited;
 The Borough of Scarborough;
 Brock University;

The Society of Industrial Accountants of Ontario;

Zurich Life Insurance Company of Canada;

The Town of Mississauga;

The City of Ottawa;

Abbey Life Insurance Company of Canada;

To revive Kedar Mines Limited;

The City of Hamilton;

The City of Woodstock;

Timothy Investments Limited;

The City of Sudbury;

The City of Cornwall;

Hillbrook Investments Limited;

The City of Toronto.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot hear the report.

Mr. Speaker: I share the same disability as the member for Grey-Bruce and I would ask that the Clerk read the opening portion of that report so that Mr. Speaker, at least, can hear what is being put to the House.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Meen, from the standing procedural affairs committee, presented the committee's report, which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee has carefully examined the following applications for private Acts and finds notices as published in each case sufficient:

The City of Brantford—

Mr. Speaker: I think that will be sufficient as we now know what the motion is.

Clerk of the House: I did not finish reading the report originally.

Mr. Speaker: Oh, I am sorry.

Clerk of the House: It concludes:

Your committee recommends that copies of the "Canadian Parliamentary Guide" be purchased for distribution to the members of the assembly and that stationery and publications allowance to members for the current session of the assembly be fixed at $400.

Your committee recommends that until further order, the House will not sit on Wednesdays in order to provide a full day each week for committee meetings.

Mr. Speaker: We now have the second portion of the report so perhaps we can consider the report in total; first, the private bills; second, the stationery allowance; third, the recommendation with respect to Wednesdays.

Is there any discussion?

Mr. Nixon: Just to make a comment on the Wednesday committee day. I recall when this experiment was attempted on a previous occasion it was an unmitigated flop because it was just considered a "weekend" in the middle of the week. Even the hon. Minister of Justice, who was then a private member, was notable by his lack of support.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): That is not true.

Mr. Nixon: We, on this side—and, I trust, all members—hope that this attempt will be more successful.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I just want to add a brief comment or two. Following through on my plea for greater flexibility and interchange of members between those four major committees, plus the estimates committee, the Prime Minister interjected and said that "the government members would be there." That, we could be assured of. He was worried about the opposition members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not say I was worried.

Mr. MacDonald: Since the government members were going to be there, implied in your statement was a worry that the opposition members would not be there.

Mr. Nixon: But he is not worried about that.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not want to heat this issue up—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: But.

Mr. MacDonald: —but we are going to examine attendance records very, very carefully, because Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Nixon: We might as well have an election now.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, and on the basis of the past record we have the best record, the official opposition has the second best and the government has the worst.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Oh come off it. That is not true and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. MacDonald: On the basis of past experience—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The NDP only troop in when the roll call is made. Just hold up a mirror, that is all we ask.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Nixon: The fellows opposite have the worst record.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Minister of Justice want the floor?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, but do not forget to hold up a mirror.

Mr. MacDonald: No, okay.

On the basis of past experience the Leader of the Opposition is correct that it was a flop. There was so little attendance that in effect midweek became a weekend. If everybody is going to be there the Premier will have no problems.

But I come back to a brief reiteration of my earlier plea. I think everybody will be there if he is certain that each committee is dealing with something that he personally is interested in because of his riding's concern. That is where flexibility comes in to assist in having the kind of attendance the Prime Minister feels confident he is going to have.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisbom: Of course, the committee's decision was unanimous and I fail to recognize the lack of communication in the Liberal caucus, because the three Liberal members were independent and did not oppose the committee's decision—

Mr. Nixon: We are not opposing it, smarten up! Look, will the hon. member let the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) speak for that row?

Mr. Gisbom: —to have Wednesday set aside for committee business.

Second, we all realize that this is a new thing. The committee structure has been changed. The committee felt thoroughly that we can make it more effective in carrying on the business of the House and, as the notice reads, it will be until further notice a recommendation from the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Any further discussion?

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

TOWN OF MISSISSAUGA

Mr. Kennedy moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act respecting the Town of Mississauga.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. R. D. Kennedy (Peel South): Mr. Speaker, I—

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice and Attorney General): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of my brief remarks, sir, I would extend once again my congratulations to you on the manner in which you continue to discharge your duties to this House.

Your task may be particularly onerous at this time, since we are entering the season when partisanship will be in full bloom as hon. members opposite begin their election campaigns. Like them, however, I have no special knowledge of either the date, the season, or the year, for such an eventuality, but I want to say, sir, that until that time, I am sure you will continue to command the respect and goodwill of all the members of the House, on both sides of the House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Tell us about the deadwood.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I do want to congratulate the mover and seconder for their contribution to the address in reply. Their remarks fully justify the honour accorded them. My hon. friend, the member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly)—

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): That is a forecast of things to come.

Mr. Nixon: Right. The Premier is going back to the law practice.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): The member for Humber (Mr. Ben) is now sitting behind the minister. This is the first stage of the coalition.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): The hon. member for Humber is going to be the enlightened one. He will never receive a compliment again.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In any event, sir—it is easy to see there is a long weekend coming up—I do want to congratulate the mover and the seconder. Their remarks fully justified the honour accorded them by the Prime Minister. My hon. friend, the member for Eglinton, who is my constituency neighbour as well as a friend of all of us here, is a man whose views on taxation are shared by many on both sides, if not by all of the House. Similarly, may I commend the seconder, the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Henderson), on his remarks.

Mr. Nixon: He is not here either.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Now sir, I hope hon. members will allow me some remarks of a rather personal nature in regard to recent events which were admittedly political—

Mr. J. Renwick: Going to paper the cracks now, eh?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —and certainly personal—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not be so self-conscious.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —but which were of widespread interest and significance to the people of Ontario, and even to my hon. friends opposite, because as a result of those events, there have been substantial changes on this side of the House—

Mr. Lewis: Indeed, there was.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —especially in the area where I am now standing—

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Musical chairs.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —and some of us, as a matter of fact many of us, have been called upon to assume new responsibilities.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): I would not always say the change is for the better.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I might say this was forcibly impressed upon me, when I first entered the boardroom of the Attorney General and Minister of Justice and saw on the wall of one of the rooms the photographs of my distinguished predecessors, including such luminaries, sir, as Mowat, as Roebuck, as Blackwell, as Porter, as Roberts and of course, sir, Mr. Speaker Cass.

Mr. Nixon: What is the sign on Queen Victoria's bust? Is it true that there is a "Vote Lawrence" sign on Queen Victoria?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Those are very substantial shoes to fill, sir, and I would not want to omit from such consideration my immediate predecessor, the hon. minister from Sault Ste. Marie whose task it has been to serve in that office in these times when its scope has come to encompass a vast and still growing range of social problems in which law enforcement and proceedings are vitally involved.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): The minister will make it grow even bigger.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: However long I might be here, sir—and that is surely a matter of both my leader's discretion and other opinion—I will hope that my tenure will be found to be suitable to the exemplary legacy and tradition of those who preceded me. I know that my hon. friends opposite will do their utmost to spur me on in that regard, and I invite them to do so.

But as we all would admit, Mr. Speaker, with all of the changes that we have seen, none of us has assumed a greater burden of responsibility than my broad-shouldered friend, the new Prime Minister of Ontario.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): He is broad all the way down.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Our political parties have the responsibility, which is rather unique, to select our leaders, as does the electorate to choose among them to determine which shall govern. Leadership races, as they are called—and I for one do not believe that is too strenuous a description of the process—create natural stresses and natural strains. There are, sir, more than just a few hon. gentlemen opposite who know about that, as they know how difficult they are to correct and to heal after the event.

Mr. T. Reid: Heel!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In that matter, sir, my leader, I believe, will be an example to all in the matter of restoring cohesion, in restoring harmony and unity within the ranks of his government and his party. His tolerance and understanding of the feelings of those who become deeply involved in the political processes might well be the model for party leaders, present and future.

The experience of those of us who had the privilege—

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is flushed with pride.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —of being candidates for the leadership of this party have, as a result of that experience, a far greater understanding and a far better appreciation of the validity of our political processes which we so often take for granted and sometimes come to doubt.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): They never even made their meetings open to the public. They are just for Tories.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: But more than that, sir, we are given an insight into the attitudes and the aspirations of our fellow-citizens, our constituents and those whom we seek to lead.

Certainly anyone with any experience in politics, becoming involved in such a contest as that, will realize that there can be only one winner. But, in fact, I think I can speak for all those involved in that campaign by saying that such an experience broadened our understanding of people, our knowledge of Ontario and our very deep respect for all of our colleagues.

Mr. MacDonald: There is no evidence as yet in the government's programme.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am not going to give to you, sir, or to the House this afternoon a recitation of the joys of coming in second. After all, one obviously would rather win than lose, but faced with the reality of that situation in the final cliffhanging moment, while wishing that somehow another 40 or 50 Conservatives might have been as persuaded as some others as to my qualifications—

Mr. Nixon: It would have taken only 23.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —I recognized, as did the entire convention, that the government of Ontario and the Conservative Party of Ontario were in good hands, the hands of a gentleman whose abilities and experience and vigour uniquely qualified him for his task.

Mr. T. Reid: Did the minister say "weakly"?

Mr. MacDonald: Is this all really necessary?

Mr. Lewis: Did the minister say "obliquely" or "uniquely"?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The hon. members opposite often speak of change as though it were their discovery when in fact change is the essence of politics, and indeed the essence of life itself, sir. On this fine spring day, we all sense the presence of renewal, and in this Legislature we are aware of the presence of a new government and a new leader. For it is a new government, and one which I believe, as do my colleagues and our supporters, will be one to meet the exacting standards of the people of this province.

Mr. Lewis: There are 12 of them in the House now.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The fact that this is a new government is borne out in the Throne Speech. If I may echo a phrase which may be familiar to some of you, it is only the beginning, for we shall continue in the process of developing new processes, new responses and new policies to meet the challenge and the demands of what is, after all, a very new society.

In that regard, sir, none of us on this side of the House, nor any substantial opinion outside, would be reluctant, I hope, to admit to the very substantial accomplishments by the government led by the former Premier (Mr. Robarts) in the 1960s. It is a proud record and every one of us here on this side is proud of our association with it, but no one knows better than I, or better than my hon. friend the Prime Minister, that we need to surpass those achievements if we are to master the challenges of the 1970s. For a new decade, sir, there must be new policies. These new policies will come from this new government and its new leadership.

I would direct the attention of the hon. members to the passage in the Throne Speech which indicates the very clear intention of this government to be more responsive to the needs of its constituents.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: We are not talking here about material needs alone. After eight intensive weeks of campaigning in this province, I know something of what people expect of their new government and of this Legislature, and of those on both sides of the House, whom they elect to serve them.

Mr. Speaker, it is a truism to say it but we need to tell ourselves that the larger governments become and the greater their involvement in the daily lives of their people, the more distant they feel they are from them. Many of them sense that their elected representatives—not of this party alone, but of all parties, and certainly not of this government alone but of all governments—are either not listening or not able to hear.

Ways must be found, and ways will be found, for us to bridge the gulf between people who have a lively concern and interest in public policies and those who are responsible for devising and implementing them. They want more than rhetoric, more than a mere shallow commitment; they want to become a meaningful part of the process of consultation.

I have found in those travels and in other travels a far greater measure of interest and a far greater concern over what we do here than many of us might believe or want to believe. While people expect the government to be a necessary factor in their lives, I believe, sir, most sincerely, that they want a government which creates avenues of opportunity along which they can go and chart the way themselves.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Like regional government.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: They do not expect the government to be a vehicle of opportunity which carts them along the way. They would like a government which, while a partner in a number of endeavours, is nevertheless a partner in the full sense of that word. They want to be led, they do not want to be driven. They want a society in which they can fulfil themselves, and enjoy the profit of their own initiative and energies. Just as they want a government they can respect, and a Legislature they can respect, they want to be governed by those who respect them.

That, sir, is why I believe the people of Ontario will continue to place their confidence in this new government and in this party because we in this party welcome and encourage their involvement.

Now while we value tradition, while we respect our institutions, and while we are very deservedly proud of our party's record, we are determined to make our own way to welcome this new era of the Seventies and to offer the people of Ontario a working partnership in our mutual endeavour to make this province an example in social justice and an opportunity to all in Canada.

I believe the new leader of this government and of my party is a man who holds these views as firmly and as sincerely and as strongly as I do. I know this same spirit is shared by my colleagues, and that, sir, is one reason among many why I am proud to be part of this new administration.

In regard to the Throne Speech I might mention one or two of its proposals in passing and say that they reflect my own views as these were expressed in that recent leadership campaign. It is more than gratifying to know that such policy will soon be implemented.

Special consideration is given, and is being given, to the real needs of the people of northern Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Anyone who knows that area will realize the special virtues, the special problems and the special values of life in that part of our province. Nevertheless, we as a government must do more to offset the very real disadvantages inherent in the economic circumstances of life in our North. Not everyone can live in the centre; not everyone can live in the major cities or in the south, and I must add—

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): The government would certainly have it that way.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —and I must add that certainly not everyone wants to do so. But it is clearly in the provincial interest, as well as in the national interest, that we do more to establish a greater equality of living standards and government services if we are to encourage development and the continued growth and the prosperity of that very vital region of our province.

Mr. Martel: This government has had 28 years to do that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I know that many people in Ontario fully share our concern with regard to the preservation and conservation of Crown land, and I think they will welcome the intention of this new government that these lands will be employed first of all for the recreation purposes of Canadians who must have first claim upon their use.

Mr. Sargent: That was the Leader of the Opposition's idea.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, the Throne Speech represents a getting-under-way of a new administration, in a new era, with a new team. It represents a number of very substantial commitments—

Mr. Lawlor: Why can the minister not find a new word?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —re-allocation of priorities, a number of new directions; but, as I have said, it is only the beginning. It is our task to lead and inspire the people of this province to reach new levels of productivity and prosperity in this decade. I believe we have the will to do it. We have the leadership and we have the way. I am confident the people of Ontario will, when the occasion rises, give us their mandate to proceed.

Mr. Sargent: No, never!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: As well, sir, one of the many matters that I feel strongly about—and I am happy to follow along the tradition of a man like the member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Wishart)—is the question of civil rights and civil liberties in this province. This Legislature as well has indicated a very full understanding of the rights of the individual within our society in the various legislative programmes over the past few years. The former government demonstrated its ability to develop and institute programmes for the continuing preservation of these human rights which are so important in our complicated society.

Mr. Lawlor: Take a look at Bill 10, for instance.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The report of Mr. Justice McRuer on civil rights in Ontario has of course been reviewed by all of the hon. members, I hope, and the principles inherent in that report have provided the guidelines for many of the programmes.

Mr. Justice McRuer's first report contained approximately 559 recommendations that touched upon virtually all areas of the administration of justice and the legislative practices reflected in our body of statutory law. The administrative practices related to these areas were also analyzed in substantial detail by the thrust of these recommendations.

Since the publication of the report early in 1968, the former government introduced legislation which has been acted upon by this Legislature, with the net result that legislative and administrative actions have implemented almost 300 of those recommendations.

It must be recognized upon reflection that a very substantial number of the recommendations that have been made were not capable of any immediate legislative or administrative action, but rather were of a directory nature that provided an approach for the consideration of all persons who must deal in the area of legislative and administrative action in their application to the sensitive area of human rights.

These recommendations have been of immeasurable assistance to those who must administer to many programmes of government, and I know that these principles have been of very recognized value to all members of the Legislature in the development of the proposals which they have brought forward for consideration.

It has been indicated in the Speech from the Throne that this Legislature will be asked by this government to consider new proposals which will be directed toward not only the creation of some civil rights, but also the further recognition and preservation of many of these rights as they relate to the administrative processes of those areas coming within the jurisdiction of this House, sir. Already much has been accomplished in the area of expropriation; already much has been accomplished in the question of compensation to victims of crime, the administration of justice and even to the constitution of a committee of this House to consider subordinate legislation in all its forms.

I now look forward to bringing before this Legislature a series of bills that will provide for the equitable and orderly process before administrative tribunals throughout the whole province. The Statutory Powers Procedure Act, which was introduced for discussion purposes on an earlier occasion, will provide for the rights of individuals whose affairs bring them before these administrative tribunals, while the same statute will provide the framework for an administrative law process that will be the first of its kind in Canada.

The Judicial Review Act, which has also been published for discussion purposes in first reading, sir, will be a companion proposal that will materially improve the process of judicial review as it relates to the administrative law in Ontario.

While it would not be appropriate for me to go into the details of these proposals at this time, they will be brought before this House for consideration in due course.

The essential feature which this government considers to be most important in this whole area is that this legislative programme is designed to ensure that the individual has all the benefits that we make available to him for the protection of his interests at the earliest stage possible in his contact with the process, so that the preservation of these rights will not be dependent upon pursuing the matter through a series of courts, with all of the delay and all of the expense attendant upon expensive judicial review.

Our purpose is directed toward the very clear expression of these rules for the purposes of all those who administer our laws, so that the rights will be extended and recognized at the very initial stages of the process without the necessity of review at the higher judicial level except, of course, sir, those remedies that will be available to ensure the adequate enforcement of all these procedures.

At the same time, we hope to have available for the consideration of the House a completely revised statute to deal with public inquiries in a manner consistent with the principles we have recognized in these recent legislative programmes.

The legislation in this area, which will be utilized by cross-reference in many other statutes, will provide practical and pragmatic protection for the rights of the individual from his very earliest involvement with the processes of administrative law. In the same vein, a substantial bill is under consideration which will provide for the revision of a great number of statutes, so they will be in general accord with the whole approach to the administrative process contemplated by the government in developing this extensive programme for individual rights in this province.

All of these programmes will be brought forward with full recognition that there will always be more work to be done in this area, and perhaps to the bills themselves, and in our continuing contemplation of that which we must provide to the citizens we are here to serve.

I cannot leave this particular subject, sir, without drawing to the attention of the hon. members that there are many recommendations which we have had, not only from Dr. McRuer but from others, that relate to areas presently under consideration.

In some of these areas we are not yet convinced as to the proper solution and consequently we have established various processes by which we may get further public participation as well as further constructive comments. In the matter of bail reform, we are awaiting the implementation of the legislation which is being enacted by Parliament and this, of course, will deal with many areas in which we share a responsibility with the Parliament of Canada.

Several areas dealt with by the McRuer report, such as the function of juries within our system, the court reporting facilities and the area of responsibility for coroners, are still before us, and may be recognized in the continuing work which is being done at our direction by the Ontario Law Reform Commission as well as by a committee made up of the judiciary, the bar, and my department, with court reporting facilities as its prime consideration. Approximately 80 recommendations fall within the purview of this type of consideration and these are being pursued with all of the advice that can be made available to refine the proposals into effective solutions which, if necessary, will be dealt with by this Legislature in the future.

If the objectives of this government are achieved with the full application and the full understanding of this Legislature, I think we will all share in the ultimate achievement of over 450 of the recommendations which have been put forward by Dr. McRuer, although, sir, as I have indicated, the form may have been adapted to the particular needs as we have seen them in the passage of the proposals through this House.

In conclusion, sir, I merely do want to emphasize once more the purposeful thrust of this government, the unity in the leadership of this party and the very real emphasis that this government will be placing and has placed in the past on the civil liberties and the civil rights of the citizens of this province.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, before I launch into the main burden of my remarks, let me comment briefly on a matter that arose this afternoon in relation to the questions addressed by various members of this House, initiated by my leader, to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart).

We were concerned and still are concerned about the provisions of Bill 10, which the Minister of Agriculture brought before this House a few days ago. Let me say at the beginning of this portion of my remarks, certainly my colleagues and I have no greater concern than anyone else in the Province of Ontario. In fact, we are more concerned about the future welfare of the farmers in the Province of Ontario and the maintenance of that important industry.

We are concerned, Mr. Speaker—a concern that certainly takes no second place to that of the Minister of Agriculture or anyone else—about whether or not the gentlemen who are engaged in the chicken industry, in the broiler industry, in producing eggs, in producing bacon and other products, are able to earn a reasonable living and get ample compensation for their hard labour.

I say, however, sir, that there certainly must lie with any minister of this House a most serious and important responsibility, that notwithstanding his desire to put on a good show for the rural constituents, he must equally accept the responsibility of bringing before this House bills which he has reason to believe are valid bills; bills which he has reason to believe are in accordance with the provisions of the constitution of Canada; bills which he has reason to believe will be upheld by the courts. Surely no minister has any lesser duty than that?

The Minister of Agriculture today suggested, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding the fact that there was one unanimous decision of the court of appeal of one of the provinces of Canada which said similar legislation enacted by another province was unconstitutional—the minister refused earlier and refused again today to take the preliminary precaution of seeking out at least an opinion of the law officers of the Crown of the Province of Ontario.

I suggest to you, sir, that this is absolutely inexcusable. Because if this legislation is going to be helpful to the farmers of the Province of Ontario surely the government of Ontario would take every step and every precaution before it is introduced to seek out the best legal opinions available. When the minister had to admit this afternoon he has never asked the law officers of the Crown, nor ever even thought about asking them nor will he now ask them, then I say he has acted in substantial derogation of his duty to all of the people of Ontario, and especially to the farmers, whom we all want to protect.

Now then sir, let me turn to the main thrust of my remarks in this debate.

We have watched with great interest and rapt attention the activities that began to take place in this province after the night of the long vote. Something apparently happened that night, Mr. Speaker. Certain ladies and gentlemen gathered in convention made a certain decision; it ran through a great, great number of hours until they could make up their minds.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): No difficulty in making the decision.

Mr. Singer: They had some machinery that did not seem to work very well and they learned at least one thing, Mr. Speaker. I noticed in the Speech from the Throne that the government is going to allow Ryerson degree-granting privileges. Now I have been investigating that and I have been told, sir, that there is one new degree that this particularly is directed at—the BVP. That means bachelor of voting procedures. That degree is about to be granted by Ryerson and I understand, Mr. Speaker, further, that there is great competition among the pages in this House as to which one is going to be appointed as head of the course. It has been ascertained very quickly that a youngster can easily figure out how to make voting machines work even though it was somewhat beyond the competence of the people who are now running the government of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member knows who will get the first one?

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, as we watched that night, into the long hours of the morning to see what was going to happen, one began to wonder—the symbol was a new wave. Now what does a new wave indicate? The new wave, I suppose, was designed to indicate something along the lines that the hon. Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) was introducing into his speech this afternoon, something new and vibrant and different, competent, exciting and so on; and in face of what happened with the voting machines one had to begin to question whether the start was most auspicious.

Then, as we have watched a little further, Mr. Speaker, we have begun to wonder. We knew what the old government was like; it was quiet, it was cautious, it was conservative, it was directed, it was careful, it knew where it was going and it went very slowly, but at least when its leader and its various ministers got up in the House to speak they knew which direction they wanted to move into; they knew what kind of a plan they were putting forward, they knew what kind of a programme they were going to espouse. Whether we agreed or not that government seemed to have a direction.

As we watched since the night of the long vote what has happened here, we have begun to wonder whether the manoeuvres have been very cleverly imagined; whether they are suave and sophisticated; whether they are the very competent political manoeuvres moving in some direction. But I think, Mr. Speaker, all we can conclude out of what the various activities are is that this government is probably the most incompetent that the Province of Ontario has seen in 40 years. Incompetent, Mr. Speaker, in such a long and broad variety of ways that it almost surpasses the imagination. Incompetent to the extent that all of the news media in Ontario have begun to have a go at them—every one.

The Globe and Mail the other morning had this to say about the housing programme as espoused by the hon. Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman):

The entire programme has turned into a public relations disaster for Mr. Davis' new government. This programme confused the public and alienated those reporters at Queen's Park who took Tuesday's Throne Speech at face value and wrote headline stories about the housing programme.

Well, that was one of the indications of incompetence. The Globe the other day had an editorial talking about some of the new performances of the new Minister of Education (Mr. Welch). I suppose in keeping with some of the pronouncements of the Attorney General some time ago when he told us we had no right to know, the Minister of Education told my colleague from Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid), in effect, who does he think he is—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): The hon. member is back on that quote!

Mr. Singer: —who does he think he is to try and find out about educational expenses. The people only sent him here to inquire about those once a year. Incompetence—there could not be a better example.

The Toronto Daily Star, Mr. Speaker, had this to say in an editorial headed, "Say when, Bert"—Bert, I think, is another one of the ministers who inhabits the front benches there. The concluding paragraph says, relating a great deal of history of what Bert has done, and Bert is one of their better people:

This will not do. The need has been proven long ago, the insurance machinery exists, coverage must be provided, whatever Ottawa says. Ontario is not bankrupt, but if it cannot provide protection to those who are most in need its priorities are badly twisted. When Mr. Lawrence and his colleagues have got that straight, when they have put an early date on the start of extended coverage—that is for nursing care protection—then we will all have something to cheer about.

Well again, Mr. Speaker, where is the brave new way? Where is the competence? Where is the efficiency? It is just missing. Even The Toronto Telegram, Mr. Speaker, even The Toronto Telegram—

Mr. R. F. Nixon: (Leader of the Opposition): Even The Toronto Telegram?

Mr. Singer: —the great friend of the government of Ontario, had something to say about lowering taxes.

We have had a very fascinating few days in the Legislature—disastrous days for the government; never a more disastrous period of eight days has been seen, certainly in the time that I have been here; disastrous days for the government.

They start off with a Throne debate full of sound and fury that has a housing programme that collapses, that talks about all the grand things they are going to do without one solid bit of progressive legislation indicated in it. Shortly after that, they switch gears and let us have a debate on unemployment. And in the middle of that—that debate is not going so well—the provincial Treasurer (Mr. McKeough)—

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not going so well for the Liberals in Ottawa.

Mr. Singer: The provincial Treasurer has messed it all up; so he gets up, having had his hour in the debate and having fallen very flat—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now do not talk about people falling flat.

Mr. Singer: He then gets up and reads in a long statement about taxation improvements and new taxation methods.

Interestingly enough—and I am glad the Prime Minister has risen to this; I listened during the campaign to one of his remarks, and it reflects on the whole position of this government—if something is not going well in Ontario, it is all the fault of those guys up in Ottawa. One of the terrible things that has been happening, according to the Prime Minister and according to his inept parrots, is that we cannot control levels of taxation, and everything would be just fine if those guys up in Ottawa would do something.

Not a word in the Throne debate from the Prime Minister, not a word from the provincial Treasurer about what they are going to do. This was too much even for The Toronto Telegram, which in an editorial the other day which said:

While Mr. McKeough cannot do anything to change the monetary policy other than to persuade Ottawa to ease it, there are a number of things that he and his government can do.

And they talk about the immediate removal of the five per cent sales tax on building materials; they talk about the reform of the tax on tax, since the cost of these is already included in the federal tax of 11 per cent on building materials and how substantial an effect that might be able to have.

They talk about the removal of the portion which Queens' Park has the authority to abolish—that it would not only reduce the very high cost of housing to needy purchasers but would also reduce raw material costs to industries involved in homeowning.

They go on to suggest that the Treasurer should consider remitting all, or a large portion, of the province's very high share of corporation tax. "The two tax reductions together could represent the kind of fiscal relief that the people of Ontario urgently need."

There we have a not quite impartial observer who bothers to comment in this line and who obviously asks why the government, somewhere along the line, has not indicated that it is going to take this kind of a step. The sphinx, Mr. Speaker, is the hon. gentleman who sits opposite. He sits, he smiles and he says nothing.

I think it is remarkable to note that to date he has not taken part in any of the major debates that have proceeded in the Legislature up to the present time. This again moved a columnist in the Telegram today to write a very interesting column—I found it interesting, at least—and it appears at the bottom of the editorial page. It is headed, "Bill Davis, Master of the If, But or Maybe." Well, that is the government. The Prime Minister is the master of the "if," "but" or "maybe," and that attitude reflects throughout his incompetent, unlearned and inefficient front bench.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): He is the Prime Minister!

Mr. Singer: And it is sad, Mr. Speaker, that the great Tory party has fallen to this, because one would have expected that in keeping with the symbol of the new wave there would have been something that is new and something that is different. But in fact we have had nothing. We have had no indication of any concrete and viable proposals that would be enacted into legislation on behalf of the people that will make Ontario a place where you want to stay.

This is the sort of thing, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member contemplating moving?

Mr. Singer: We will have to put up with this government for a short time yet. Whenever it wants to call the election, we are going to solve that problem. So we will put up with it for a little time yet—two months.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I had particularly looked for some kind of reference to municipal tax reform. We have heard an awful lot in recent months and years about the problems of the urban municipalities. There have been all sorts of studies, plans, pictures, maps and schemes announced, and everyone says it is a great thing, that there has to be something done for the urban municipalities—everyone, that is, Mr. Speaker, apparently but the government of the Province of Ontario, who seem to take hope that the problems in the large urban municipalities are going to go away.

The most recent and, I think, authoritative and well-researched document that has been produced along this line is a report called "Urban Canada, Problems and Prospects," prepared by Professor M. H. Lithwick, for the hon. R. K. Andras. It was tabled in the House of Commons a few weeks ago, and has been available to this government and to anyone else who is interested, as I say, for a period of several weeks. It has been commented on, Mr. Speaker, in the press very favourably and at substantial length.

Mr. Lithwick comes up with a major conclusion that really is not new. It is significant, I suppose, to the effect that he corners in on this major conclusion. That is, that the pattern of urban life can no longer be allowed to develop solely on the base of urban financial resources. There has to be within our urban municipalities—because more and more of our people are moving into urban municipalities—there has to be a provincial and a federal presence.

For far too long have we had an assessment-oriented municipal system of administration. For far too long has a municipal council had to determine its course of action only on the basis of what kind of assessment new development is going to bring.

For far too long, Mr. Speaker, have municipalities been unable to embark on a system of providing homes for people of lower income; adequate park systems; adequate road systems; adequate transport systems. They have had to insist on items that will provide higher assessment and higher taxes. Higher buildings—less people on less area, less services to run, more taxes; better for the municipality.

The financial inability of municipalities to think in the broad social sense has begun so seriously to affect the character of our urban life that one would have thought that the great new wave would have had some idea, or inclination, or thought, or plan which would begin to deal with this matter. The problem that has presently raised its head in the borough of North York is not untypical of the kind of problem that is almost beyond the municipal ability to solve. That problem relates to a golf course called the York Downs golf course.

On North Bathurst Street, in the riding represented by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Carton) in the riding of Armourdale, just across the road from the riding of Downsview—

Mr. Nixon: He will not last there.

Mr. Singer: —are 163 acres of golf-course land. The shareholders of the golf course, a few months ago, sold this land for a price that, I understand, exceeds some $6 million, and they sold it to a developer. The developer, I would imagine, laid out that large sum of money because he believed that, in keeping with the unplanned and unrealistic and unimaginative programme of the present government, there was no way that anybody was going to interfere with his plan to build a multiplicity of high-rise apartments on that land, and to turn what heretofore had been a 163-acre park area into another jungle of highrise apartments.

I do not blame the developer, particularly. He was going by the ground rules as they existed. It had happened in all other areas. There had been St. Andrews golf course in North York several years ago. Some of us tried to stop that being turned into a housing development. We were unsuccessful; we ran out of money; nobody would help us in buying that kind of land to maintain it as a green area and eventually, houses and apartments were built on it. It is a very attractive residential area, very highly populated, very densely occupied. It serves a useful purpose, certainly, but it has resulted in the disappearance, Mr. Speaker, of the acres that were formerly that golf course and the turning of them into a residential area.

The 163 acres that involved the York Downs golf course consist of approximately 95 acres of table land, and 63 acres of valley land. There is no question that the 63 acres of valley land will, in course of time, devolve on to the ownership of the conservation authority, probably the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Conservation Authority, and/or some other public body. Whether or not it comes into the ownership of Metropolitan Toronto really does not matter, but by reason of the provisions to The Conservation Authorities Act there is not much doubt those 63 acres—or 65 acres—cannot be built on. There are plans available which will result in the acquisition of those acres, the valley acres, by public ownership. But it is the other 95 acres, the table land Mr. Speaker. What is going to happen to that?

The other evening I was present at a meeting at Adath Israel synagogue in the borough of North York in the riding of my hon. friend from Armourdale. There were some 600 people there who had come to protest against the proposed plans of the developer to get a rezoning which would allow him to begin the construction of highrise apartments.

Fascinatingly enough the objecting residents were represented by a gentleman who many of us know and many of us have been able to watch perform over the years—one Robert Macaulay. Robert Macaulay was at his inimitable best that evening as he presented 100 different reasons as to why this land should not be allowed to be turned into an apartment development.

Macaulay at his best is very good and he certainly told a convincing story that night. Well, Macaulay is a lawyer and he has accepted a brief and he is going to do, I am certain, a very good job on this. What Macaulay's philosophy is, insofar as preserving parkland is concerned, I do not know and is really not an issue. But significantly, Mr. Speaker, more than 600 people came there to protest this rape of open land in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. The objecting ratepayers have been able to convince now the councillors and the council of the borough of North York that this land should not be used for any purpose other than public open space.

They have equally been able to convince the parks committee of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. However, the difficulty, Mr. Speaker, is where does the money come from, because it is impossible under the present state of our laws to say that land which was previously golf course must continue to be golf course.

Our assistance to municipal planners and municipal government on this line is to have a bunch of people in the office of the Minister of Municipal Affairs who shuffle around pieces of paper and who determine if an official plan is drawn in the correct language; and if the lines run in the right direction; and then if a zoning bylaw later complies with the official plan. As paper shufflers, they are beyond compare. As original thinkers, as guiders of development, as people who are dedicated to preserving public open space in our urban areas—it does not even enter their minds, Mr. Speaker.

So where can we look for help? One of the people who spoke at that meeting was a gentleman called Tommy Thompson, and Tommy Thompson is the parks commissioner for Metropolitan Toronto. He is a most competent man—one of the most highly qualified civil servants in his field that I know of in the Province of Ontario. Certainly his record of achievement since he assumed that job at the commencement of the operations of the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto has been outstanding. As you look at the park system within Metropolitan Toronto, you can recognize where Tommy Thompson has had his hand and the things that he has been able to achieve and I am not going to delineate the various park systems.

Whatever they are, they are not enough and whatever particular criteria, Mr. Speaker, are applied insofar as relating areas of open space to numbers of people, Metropolitan Toronto, North York and particularly this most crowded area of North York in the general vicinity of Bathurst and Wilson Avenue, is away down below anything that could be imagined as reasonable park or open space area.

What happens, Mr. Speaker? The council of North York is valiantly trying to wrestle with this problem. They say, "We do not want any development." I notice their planning board met yesterday and they were trying to work out some compromises. The developer only wants three apartment buildings at the moment and they are only going to have 900 suites in them. Fascinatingly, there is a 300-foot strip in front of them and on the 2,100 feet of Bathurst Street frontage, which has no immediate plan. And one would think that in the normal course of events when the three behind are built, there will be another six built in front and the process will go on.

And what will happen Mr. Speaker if no one is prepared to step in and no one is able to step in? Within a year, or two years, or five years, York Downs Golf Course is going to be a thing of the past and we will have another concentrated apartment development which will take away from urban living the kind of benefit that the government has to concern itself with providing for the people who live in the urban centres of this province.

Mr. Speaker, surely there can be no better or more obvious case. I do not need to bring to the attention of the government Mr. Lithwick's report. Surely the government, the "new wave," has to turn its mind to improving the quality of urban living? Surely the government is not going to sit idly by and let this 165 acres of York Downs disappear into another apartment development? And to do that, Mr. Speaker, there is going to have to be the presence of the government of Ontario in assisting municipalities when this sort of problem arises.

Tommy Thompson said, and his words are just so obvious, "The decision has to be made now." It is not a question of whether or not there is going to be a compromise. Either the people in command—the politicians—are going to be able to say, "This will be preserved as open land for the people of North York, Metropolitan Toronto and Ontario as a park," or else they are going to give up.

The arguments about density and how high an apartment should be; how many people are going to live in a unit; and whether or not there will be a couple of low-rise buildings; or whether or not there will be semi-detached or rowhousing to sort of offset it; whether or not there will be nice gardening surrounding it; whether or not there will be some facilities like a swimming pool or sauna bath within the apartments to let the new apartment-dwellers enjoy a little luxury in a better fashion—these are not the issue. The issue is simply: Are the municipal councillors in North York, the people who represent Metropolitan Toronto and the government of Ontario, going to sit idly by and let this land go?

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): They will. They will do nothing.

Mr. Singer: The counter argument, Mr. Speaker, is that if we do something for North York; if we concern ourselves about the problems of York Downs which, after all, is a municipal problem, we will put it back to the paper-pushers in The Department of Municipal Affairs. They will shuffle their pieces of paper around. They will make sure that the lines are correctly lined up on the maps.

Mr. Trotter: They are good at that.

Mr. Singer: In due course the bylaws will be passed and the arguments will be over. If we do it for North York—and we should not, because after all it is a municipal problem—think of how many other problems of similar magnitude and importance we are going to have to face. Why not, Mr. Speaker, why not?

Mr. Nixon: What does the Minister of Labour say about that?

Mr. Singer: Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is what governments are for, to face problems. Surely, Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario has to begin to consider whether or not it is important to have the provincial presence in urban development. Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is of the utmost importance that at this time, the brave new wave seizes the initiative and inserts itself into the problem of keeping York Downs dry and York Downs golf course green.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): And dry?

Mr. Singer: I am wearing a badge—The hon. minister of Labour is wearing a similar badge. I sent one over to the Prime Minister; he has it in his pocket.

Hon. Mr. Davis: For good luck.

Mr. Singer: I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this matter will receive the utmost and immediate attention of the government.

Mr. Nixon: They have not got anything else to think about.

Mr. Singer: This is a chance to see whether or not the idle speeches, apparently idle, that we heard during pre-convention time and after convention, and the remarks in the Speech from The Throne in fact, mean anything at all. This is a chance to see, Mr. Speaker, whether or not the government of Ontario is concerned about the character of urban life.

An hon. member: What about chances?

Mr. Singer: This is a chance to see whether or not the government is going to enter into this problem. Now how do they enter into it?

Somewhere along the line there must be a way, whether by bargaining, by gift, by loan, by grant, that North York, Metropolitan Toronto and the Province of Ontario, in some form of partnership, acquire this land and let it continue in public ownership for ever. That is the problem.

I am certain that the people who are in charge of spending money over there could do nothing better than to immediately enter into this kind of an inquiry—not wait until they are going to get new plans—not wait until the paper-pushers in The Department of Municipal Affairs begin to shuffle their papers around to determine whether a particular kind of a bylaw is a good one or bad one. But right now, to enter into a series of discussions with the owners of the property and with the two municipal authorities, North York and Metropolitan Toronto, to acquire this land now and to put it in public ownership now and forever so that it can be used by all of the people of Ontario.

In saying this, Mr. Speaker, I am satisfied that I have the support of all of the members of this House who come from the borough of North York.

The hon. Minister of Labour, in whose riding this park area exists, was present at the meeting. While I am certain he would not want to break any cabinet confidence, I would think the fact that he came here, and greeted 500 or 600 of his constituents, indicated that he is in support of keeping York Downs golf course green. That is why he is wearing the badge.

Mr. Nixon: We will see what he does about it in the meantime.

Mr. Singer: I would think that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Bales), who represents the riding of York Mills, feels exactly the same. In fact, I have had conversations with him and again I would not want him to tell me anything that would breach his oath of secrecy insofar as cabinet matters are concerned but I have satisfied myself, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs feels exactly the same.

I have not been able to catch up with the hon member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall). I would think he would agree.

Let us go over to the other side. The hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young)—he and I have talked this over and he is in absolute and complete agreement with me.

So here we are. All the members from North York think this is a great idea. All the people who represent Metropolitan Toronto, I would think, would think this is a great idea.

People who are concerned about the preservation of a reasonable standard of urban living want and require a provincial presence in making this decision as quickly as possible. And the provincial presence simply means that the province has to come with its check-book and make this possible. What the details are, I do not know, but I am sure they can be worked out.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, as I recite the list of people in support, I find it almost unexplainable that a story in the North York Mirror—it came out on a Wednesday—containing a few comments about my approach to this, quotes a fellow named Chusid. Chusid, I think, is the NDP candidate who is opposing me now. He opposed me in the last election.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): He is the next member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Only Chusid, out of that whole group, says Mr. Speaker, that he believes the thought of asking the government of Ontario for assistance in this matter is unrealistic.

Mr. Peacock: Right!

Mr. Singer: He thinks the matter of asking the government of Ontario for provincial assistance in a matter of this importance is unrealistic.

It is unfortunate that he did not bring along with him the member for Yorkview. The member for Yorkview has more sense and the member for Yorkview, I know, joins with me in the plea that I am now making to the Prime Minister to get this participation.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The Premier had better listen to him. It is the member's swan song.

Mr. Singer: I would say this, sir—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did the member for Downsview hear what they said? He does not believe that, does he?

An hon. member: Chusid had 60 out to his nomination.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did they quote the member for Downsview accurately in that article?

Mr. Singer: Yes, they did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did they? I did not think the member would mention it otherwise.

Mr. Nixon: Perhaps the hon. member should read the headlines.

Mr. Singer: All right. Perhaps I should read the headline, my leader suggests: "Provincial Park Plan for York Downs: Vernon Singer to Ask Ontario for Finances." That is exactly what it says.

Mr. Nixon: Action.

Mr. Singer: And underneath it, it says: "But Chusid Says the Proposal is Unrealistic."

There you are. There is what the NDP in the area of North York thinks about the reasonableness of it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that while they are so worried about disposing of Steven Penner who had to go—oh, the member from Beaches is with us, is that not nice? Where has he been? I thought he had quit. That is nice. I am glad he is here.

Mr. J. L. Brown (Beaches-Woodbine): I am with the hon. member when I am not even here.

Mr. Singer: It is very interesting that the candidate they proposed—this fellow Penner—has run on through three nomination meetings. They have not been able to get a nomination meeting for him yet; he does not seem to quite be able to agree with many of the things that are said there.

I suspect that his persistence will pay off and that he and Stephen Lewis will be able to agree on all of the new policies—Do we nationalize more industries? Do we spend more money without collecting more money?—all these things are very, very important. It is going to be fascinating to watch.

At least, Mr. Speaker, one can see from the public and angry and foolish remarks of the candidate nominated by the NDP in Downsview that they do not know what they are talking about and that really their desire is not to preserve a park area for public purposes. Their desire is only to try and gain some apparent political advantage out of an issue that they do not properly understand.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me turn to the second point and I am sorry that my friend, the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) is not here.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is coming back shortly.

Mr. Singer: Is he coming back?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Shortly.

Mr. Singer: That is good.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the hon. member want to go on to his other point first?

Mr. Singer: No, I wanted the Attorney General here for both of them actually so I will start without him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the hon. member going to start on Dow?

Mr. Singer: No, Dow is the third one.

Mr. Speaker: I sent to the Attorney General yesterday an outline of the three points I was going to make—the first one dealing with York Downs park; the second one dealing with the Attorney General and some of his particular relationship to the disciplinary proceedings that are now being taken against certain senior Ontario Provincial Police officers; and the third one will be Dow. We may get to Dow later today or if not we will get to it on another day.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Justice did not sleep last night.

Mr. Singer: Let us start to talk about the new Attorney General, part of the brave new wave. He is the fellow you remember, Mr. Speaker, who told the delegates at a meeting: "If these unemployed would only get off their butts and stop drawing welfare, things in the province would be better." That certainly is representative of the brave new wave.

He is the fellow who stood in his place, Mr. Speaker, not too many months ago and told us that we had no right to know what kind of considerations came in the budget reduction. We had no right to know. It was none of our business.

He is the fellow, Mr. Speaker, who very recently has described himself as "the enforcer." Are you familiar, Mr. Speaker, with the recent very popular novel called "The Grandfather"?

An hon. member: "The Godfather."

Mr. Singer: "The Godfather"! It is a very fascinating story; a novel about organized crime. There are certain characters who are described and entitled "enforcers." They go around doing all sorts of nasty things like shooting other people, beating them up and this sort of thing and the word "enforcer" seems to have—to me at least, and I would think to most people in the province—that kind of a connotation. There was a gentleman—the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) has referred to him once or twice—well known in this province not necessarily for his good deeds, who comes from Hamilton, who has been described as Johnny, the Enforcer and with his last name coming later.

This gentleman has come into public prominence in this province over a number of years because of his apparent responsibility to enforce some kind of illegal activity. On one occasion, at least, he was convicted by the courts for beating up a man, almost killing him, in a pub here in the city of Toronto.

That is the connotation that "enforcer" has to me and if that is the understanding that the new Attorney General has about his job then I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the smiling and happy Premier of Ontario look for someone who has a better understanding of what the problem of administration of justice is all about. Because surely the last thing we need in this province of Ontario, Mr. Speaker, is an enforcer.

What does enforcing mean? Is that his job? The provinces are charged with the problem of administration of justice and that does not mean enforcing. But good old Al, when he got the appointment—he did not get the number one job—he quickly announced he is certainly second in command (the seating arrangements do not quite indicate that but he is certainly second in command). He envisaged himself, Mr. Speaker, as one of the sheriffs who used to parade across the west; you know, gun on each hip, two guns, quick draw, shoot from the hip. I think that Al Lawrence can be best described not only as the enforcer but "shoot-from-the-mouth" Al Lawrence.

Because that is what he does. He shoots from the mouth without knowing, without thinking, and without having any real understanding, Mr. Speaker, about what his responsibilities are in connection with one of the most important jobs in the Province of Ontario; being the chief law officer of the Crown and the administrator of justice. He is not an enforcer.

When challenged with the story that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star on April 1, 1971, he said: Oh, well, I guess—I do not know why that should in fact be in the paper because it was an informal gathering." It was an informal gathering of 300 or 400 people who had gathered to help the campaign of one of their struggling cabinet ministers. He said: "I was asked to make a few remarks and informally I got up and did it." Informally, there were reporters there, and informally in public, the Attorney General of Ontario gets up and says, "I am the enforcer." Good old "shoot-from-the-mouth" Al, he is the enforcer. Then he says—and it was very interesting too—he has concern about the enforcement of our drug laws.

We asked him in the House, "What are you going to do, Mr. Attorney General? Are you suggesting that the Metropolitan Toronto police or the provincial police or the RCMP are not doing something that the law prescribes that they should do?"

He gets up and he says, "The Metropolitan Toronto police are all right and, certainly, I am not critical about the RCMP." And, at that point, he stops.

It was a most significant stop, Mr. Speaker, because one would have to imply that he is very critical of the OPP. I do not know if it is anything more than rumour that some years ago he and the present commissioner of the OPP had a serious falling-out, but I would think it is incumbent on the Attorney General, since, in answering that series of questions he deliberately left out in the minds of the people of Ontario a comment as to the efficiency of the Ontario Provincial Police force, that he has a responsibility to come into this House and say why he has that doubt and what he is, in fact, going to do about it.

Now he has not done that. I think it was most fortuitous that he had the occasion to speak this afternoon in this debate and that his remarks, in fact, preceded mine. I was listening very carefully to see if he was going to do anything more than make a motherhood speech, and that is all he did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They made much more sense.

Mr. Singer: He is in favour of all things that are good and against all things that are bad.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Including the Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right.

Mr. Singer: But insofar as his remarks indicating that he has acquired since his appointment any real grasp of the responsibilities of that office, his speech was entirely lacking. There was no indication from him as to a follow-up about his concern about the course of administration of justice insofar as looking after our narcotic laws are concerned.

If he has a plan, if he feels that a crack-down is necessary, I wish he would tell us how he is going to do it.

The heading on this story is Lawrence Promises Crackdown on Drug Traffic. Well, what is it? Where is it and how is he going to do it?

The other significant thing in connection with the particular story, Mr. Speaker, is this: When questioned in the House, the Attorney General said, "I have some doubt in my mind as to whether or not I can tell the police what to do." Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, for a member who has sat in this House for 12 or 14 years, that he has still some doubt in his mind? The man who has now achieved the great height of becoming the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice has some doubt in his mind as to who controls police forces? Can you really imagine that, Mr. Speaker?

The man who is the Attorney General and Minister of Justice has doubt in his mind, notwithstanding the times that we have debated this, the old Bill 99, and the arguments that have gone on in here until 4 o'clock in the morning to assert elected control over police forces. The Attorney General of Ontario, the member of the new wave in 1971, stands in this House and says, "I have doubt in my mind as to who controls the police forces." Here comes the former Attorney General into the House. I am sorry that he did not have the opportunity to take his successor out into the woodshed and tell him a few facts of life. I am sorry he did not tell him such basics as who controls police forces.

Mr. MacDonald: He is a gentleman.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie was not able to get the message to the hon. member for St. George, that even as recently as public opinion and opposition forced something into the legislation about control of Mace and other weapons, that after great argument that went on hour after hour, and even had resistance from the former Attorney General, the words at the top of that section are, "with the approval of the Attorney General, such and such shall happen." Again there was the assertion of elected control over police forces. And the present Attorney General of Ontario does not even know that, Mr. Speaker. I think it is just ludicrous that that man can be in that position and be unknowledgeable about the things that are going on.

An hon. member: He almost became the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The only control that went in was with regard to weaponry.

An hon. member: Think of what he would not know in that job!

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal for a few moments with some questions that arise from the investigations done by the committee that dealt with the Attorney General's estimates last June and the subsequent investigation done by the hon. Mr. Justice

Campbell Grant. Certainly there were many obvious things that came forward as a result of both of those activities. The estimates debate in committee on the Attorney General's estimates was long and arduous. It produced a lot of glaring errors in government system, and by progression many things have followed from that. Just one of them was the commission of inquiry re the Ontario Provincial Police carried out by the hon. Mr. Justice Campbell Grant.

One thing I was expecting, and I would have hoped this afternoon we could have heard a little about, would have been some details as to central purchasing by the OPP, because all of the trouble that was complained about insofar as the Duke affair was concerned related apparently to the purchasing of 12 lawnmowers over a period of five years and the expenditure of maybe $10,000, and the visits of many, many policemen to a certain place where there was some doubt as to whether or not they should have been present.

One would have thought that one of the most obvious results of all of these discussions and all of this debate would have been that the new Attorney General, first crack out of the gun, would have said, "We have decided to regularize the purchasing procedures of the Ontario Provincial Police. We have decided if it is necessary that the Ontario Provincial Police have lawnmowers that they go to a central purchasing agency of the government of Ontario and they buy their lawnmowers." Even as obvious a step as that, Mr. Speaker, was not taken.

Somebody asked the Attorney General what steps he was going to take insofar as the recommendations were concerned, or so far as the comments were concerned, and he said, "Well, it is a long and complicated matter," and in keeping with the comments of his leader, "We are looking into it and we will think about it and in due course we will make some announcement." Well, when did the announcement come forward?

I wanted to talk particularly about the unusual method of disciplining police officers and the inequities that exist in that system throughout the Province of Ontario. As a result of the inquiries made by the committee examining the Attorney General's estimates for last June, charges were laid against two senior Ontario Provincial Police officers in relation to various disciplinary matters. Those charges against at least one of those officers are being heard presently by His Honour Judge Steen, a judge of the county court of the county of York, and the charges against the other officer are going to come up at a later time.

Fascinatingly, Mr. Speaker, in his report, Mr. Justice Grant referred to one or possibly two other senior police officers and referred to them in a manner which, at least in my opinion, indicated that he believed they had committed equally serious misdemeanors, breaches of provincial police discipline, failure to carry out orders and that sort of thing, and interestingly enough the Attorney General said, "We are not going to lay any new charges because we don't believe there are enough facts available."

I asked the Attorney General whether he was concerned at all about the question of the limitation period and he said, "Oh, the limitation period has nothing to do with it." Well, I wonder—and he has had several days to think about it—I wonder now whether the Attorney General has informed himself about limitation periods, whether in fact he is at all aware of the provisions of The Public Authorities Protection Act and particularly section 11 of that Act, which says that:

No action, prosecution or other proceeding lies or shall be instituted against any person for an act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution, of any statutory or other public duty or authority, or in respect of any neglect or default in the execution of any such duty or authority, unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect or default complained of, or in the case of continuance of injury or damage, within six months within the ceasing thereof.

Now that would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, to provide a limitation period of six months for proceeding against police officers, both in criminal matters and in civil matters, and in disciplinary matters. In fact, there is a recent decision given by Mr. Justice Osler, in the Supreme Court of Ontario, which said that a disciplinary charge brought against a particular constable of the Metropolitan Toronto police force more than six months after the event in fact took place was a bad charge, and he granted the appropriate order which stopped the hearing of that charge.

Now I also accept the fact, Mr. Speaker, that there is certain law in connection with the interpretation of this section, and so that the Attorney General will not be caught unawares I will read into the record the citation of the two cases which seem to be the leading cases.

One is a case of Scammell and Nephew Limited vs. Hurley and others, which is an English case reported in 1929, King's Bench Division, volume one, at page 419. In that case, and in relation to a similar limitation section in an English statute, the Court of Appeal in England decided that there were certain cases in which the limitation period would not, in fact, apply, and there was a somewhat similar decision, Mr. Speaker, given in Ontario in the case of Kennedy and Tomlinson by Mr. Justice Ferguson of the Supreme Court, and that case is reported in volume 13, Dominion Law Reports 2, at page 734.

So it may be that in certain circumstances the limitation period would not apply. It is interesting to note about the English case and the Ontario case that the case decided by Mr. Justice Ferguson related to criminal and civil actions against a police officer, not the disciplinary ones; and the case that Mr. Justice Osler decided, in fact, related to a disciplinary matter. I do not know whether or not the cases presently before His Honour Judge Steen would be decided in the same manner as Mr. Justice Osler decided. I would think they would. That remains yet for judicial interpretation.

But the fact remains, Mr. Speaker, that there is such substantial doubt about the state of the law, which is dependent upon the interpretation of section 11 of The Public Authorities Protection Act, that one would have thought—and I am glad to see he is here now—that the Attorney General would have bothered, as the result of the questioning, to have informed himself of these problems and to have told us, frankly and clearly, what the position of the law officers of the Crown were in connection with these limitation period problems; and whether or not Rodger and Wilson, in fact, were protected by the limitation section; and whether or not the other gentlemen who were mentioned in Mr. Justice Grant's report were protected by the limitation section; and whether or not, in fact, Mr. Speaker, the decision not to proceed against the other two gentlemen mentioned by Mr. Justice Grant had a great deal to do with the doubt about the validity or the application of disciplinary charges at this stage in time.

Because, let us go back to what happened insofar as Wilson and Rodger were concerned. They are charged with committing offences some time in the year 1968. Charges were laid against them in June, 1970, clearly beyond the six months period. The delay in the proceedings again is something I am going to come back to, something almost inexcusable, but it has two parts to it. By the time you get down to April, 1971, then certainly in light of the limitation section I just wonder if the Attorney General was being either something less than frank with us or something less than understanding about the problem when he said no consideration of the limitations period went into the decision not to lay disciplinary charges against the other two gentlemen who are mentioned in the report by Mr. Justice Grant. If it did not, then it should have.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I never said that.

Mr. Singer: And I say, Mr. Speaker, that the Attorney General just never bothered to inform himself about this.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I never said that.

Mr. Singer: Never said what? Never said that the limitations period did not apply?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I never said that no consideration—

Mr. Singer: That is exactly what the Attorney General said. He said it had no relationship to it—and it is there and it is in Hansard. If he wants the exact quotation, I will find it for him.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Please do.

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker, there are many other unusual and peculiar things that arise out of this series of events. Heretofore, disciplinary proceedings—

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Ignore him.

Mr. Singer: —laid against a policeman—

Mr. Brown: The member should do his homework!

Mr. Singer: —would be dealt with by a senior officer of the police force concerned, subsequently by the—I think there were three stages—the senior officer, the head of the particular police force, local police commission if one existed, and then was appealed on through the Ontario Police Commission. This was the established procedure. Charges, again remember, against Wilson and Rodger were delayed, and I think the former Attorney General was quite right in saying he was not going to allow the charges to be proceeded with until Mr. Justice Grant had finished his deliberation and had brought in his report. So those charges sat until—well, December 15 was the date of the report, but nothing was done about them really in fact until April.

Then, some time in January, the government decided to change the rules—and maybe again with some reason. A new regulation, order-in-council 38/71, was passed on November 30—I thought it was much later than that; oh, I am sorry, it was dated November 30 and His Honour, the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council approved of this on December 23—and they inaugurated it into the system whereby, at the instigation of a number of people including the Attorney General, a matter such as this could be referred to a county court or district court judge.

In due course, His Honour Judge Steen had the matter referred to him. I wonder if the depth to which this whole question of consideration of these matters by someone other than senior police officials was in fact thoroughly brought out. My friend the Attorney General was patting himself on the back and saying, "My what a good government are we. We have implemented 979 recommendations by Mr. Justice McRuer."

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Nine hundred and eighty.

Mr Singer: I wonder if he recalls the one which deals with questions of police discipline and the manner of hearing these cases? I wonder if he recalls the shock with which Mr. Justice McRuer commented upon the ability of a police officer to get impartial judgement, and whether or not the built-in appeals system merely meant an appeal from Caesar to Caesar? If my friend the Attorney General will look at the report of Mr. Justice McRuer, he will find those sections there.

However, in this particular case, they did bring in the regulations and they allowed the appointment of the county court judge but they neglected to provide equal ability, not only to the Attorney General, but to an accused police officer to remove himself from the police stream of discipline and let the police officer who was charged with a disciplinary offence himself ask for adjudication by a county court judge.

One would have thought that if they were concerned about equal administration of justice, the order-in-council to which I have referred would have given equal opportunities not only to the authorities, not only to the enforcer, but would have given equal authority to a person accused to seek private and independent adjudication by a county court judge. But they did not bother to make that provision. All right; be that as it may.

The procedure fascinatingly still continues and His Honour, Judge Steen is hearing these charges and in due course he will give his decision. After he has given his decision, the fascinating anomaly continues, that an appeal from his decision can go to the Ontario Police Commission. So there we have a situation where a police officer is going to be charged, and the charge is going to be heard in this case by His Honour, Judge Steen. If someone disagrees with the decision of His Honour, Judge Steen, from there they can go to that august body, the Ontario Police Commission, which will in fact sit in review of the decision of the county court judge.

My conclusion is obvious, Mr. Speaker. If the Attorney General's Department—and I do not know whether it was the member for Sault Ste. Marie or the member for St. George who made these particular decisions. Whichever one of them it was, surely he should have sat down and thought the whole matter through.

First, there was nothing wrong with saying, "Let the matter go before a county court judge." But having made that decision, surely they should have made an equitable provision to allow an accused officer to have his choice if he wanted to.

Second, having allowed the insertion of a county court judge into the picture, surely it is the height of idiocy to allow an appeal in the matter of this sort to proceed from a person like a county court judge or district court judge to that august body, the Ontario Police Commission. Who makes up the Ontario Police Commission? The Ontario Police Commission consists of a retired general, a former member of this House with no legal training at all, and one lawyer. Those gentlemen are expected by the law, as the law presently stands, to be able to sit in review of the decision that now can be made by a county court judge. What I say, Mr. Speaker, is that the brave new wave, when faced with a problem of updating ancient and useless legislation and bringing it into focus with present-day problems, just has not the faintest idea as to how to proceed. It just has not the first concern about providing for matters of equity. Let me deal with another phase of this whole series of charges against police officers.

Why did it take so long? Why did it take so long to have these charges dealt with? All right. The former Attorney General, the member for Sault Ste. Marie, says it would not have been proper to bring them on while Mr. Justice Grant was inquiring. Perhaps that is a point. But that inquiry ended and the report was tabled on December 15 and it is now April 8. Why did it take so long to get those charges on? Why did it take so long to readjust the machinery?

Finally, Mr. Speaker, when they were re-drafting all these regulations and setting up a whole new ball game, why were they in such doubt as to whether or not these hearings should be in public or private? We asked the Attorney General two, three, four times as to whether or not the hearings would be in public or the hearings would be in private. He did not have the faintest idea. Finally, he said he thought they would be in public, but it would depend on the decision of the county court judge who was hearing them, and then when we asked him what criteria the county court judge would use, the Attorney General had to throw up his hands and say he did not know.

One would have thought the people who drafted the regulation would have had these matters in mind. One would have thought they would have looked at the pertinent sections of the Criminal Code that deal as a matter of law with when hearings can be made private and when, by and large, they should be public. One would have thought that an alert Attorney General would have recognized that this was a problem and would have had an opinion about it. But he is so busy being an enforcer that he has not had time to sit down and study the law in relation to matters which are presently of the utmost importance.

There is a further point, Mr. Speaker, in relation to this whole question of dealing with police officers that there seem to be two systems. These gentlemen, Rodger and Wilson, during the course of their suspension, which occurred last June and continues up to the present time, I would presume have not been required to report to work, but on the other hand I am advised by the Attorney General, they have been receiving their full pay. An unusual situation. Perhaps they should receive that pay. I do not know.

But the point that bothers me, Mr. Speaker, is the inconsistency of the system as it is applied to police officers throughout the Province of Ontario. There are cases—two have come to my particular attention—involving constables in the Metropolitan Toronto police force who were charged with disciplinary offences, found guilty and then embarked on the appeal procedure. From the time of their first suspension until their trial—this happened reasonably quickly afterward—they did receive their pay.

During the time of the pending of the appeal procedure—and it goes very, very slowly; another problem about the Ontario Police Commission—it took them nine months, on one occasion to deal with an appeal to them—during that time, Mr. Speaker, these two constables were denied their pay.

In a case that happened recently—indicative of their competence—where the Ontario Police Commission reversed the decisions of the earlier people adjudicating, the commission came to the conclusion that the constable, who was a second-class constable, should be reduced in rank to a second-class constable. That is how efficient they are in proceeding to hear these appeals. They started with a second-class constable. They said, "We are going to punish you terribly. We are going to reduce you in rank to a second-class constable." That is some indication, perhaps, of their efficiency.

Nevertheless, during the course of the time that had to pass pending the appeal, this particular constable did not get any money. And his lawyer took it to the court of appeals—and I have the decisions here if the Attorney General wants to see them. He does not think these remarks are important enough to sit here, but hopefully he will read them in Hansard. I have the decisions here and I can refer to them. The court of appeals said, "That is too bad. There is no need to pay them."

Why? Is there a different rule for a police constable in Metropolitan Toronto who is being dealt with in a disciplinary procedure and a senior official of the Ontario Provincial Police?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: New regulations were passed.

Mr. Singer: Is there a different rule? Oh, there is a new regulation. These cases were decided quite recently.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Under the new regulations.

Mr. Singer: All right. Why should Wilson and Rodger be in a different position than these two constables in the Metropolitan Toronto police situation? Why should these two fellows—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Present regulations.

Mr. Singer: Yes, because of regulations. What kind of an excuse is that? What kind of an excuse is that? Do the regulations allow the system of justice in the Province of Ontario to discriminate against one police officer and in favour of another one? Two constables were treated in this way and two senior officers of the OPP are treated in another way. That is the point, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Can the hon. member not realize that regulations have been changed; that new regulations have been passed since the first instance that the hon. member is talking about? They have been changed.

Mr. Singer: What are the present provisions?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The ones under which Wilson and Rodger are being dealt with.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the former Attorney General, in fact, is not aware of these cases.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Oh yes I am.

Mr. Singer: Oh, is the hon. minister? And he is not aware of the decision of the court of appeal?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Very much aware.

Mr. Singer: And is not aware of the fact that the court of appeal—and including, fascinatingly, Mr. Justice Grant somewhere along the line—on the lower level said it was fine, it was fine, and he said, "If those constables want to get their money back, let them go and sue for it," even though the judicial procedures had not, in fact, been exhausted?

In fact, Mr. Speaker, when a person loses his licence because of having been convicted either of a driving offence under the Criminal Code or The Highway Traffic Act and his licence is suspended as a result of that kind of a conviction, if he enters an appeal the pertinent legislation allows for the reinstatement of his licence pending the determination of the appeal.

That is there and that is part of the law insofar as it concerned the handling of driving licences. It is not there and it is not part of the law insofar as it concerned those two constables who went beyond the original conviction stage and up to the appeal stage. They were told, quite bluntly, "If you want some more money, go and sue for it." It makes no sense.

My point simply is this, Mr. Speaker, that having gotten into this, one would have thought that the new Attorney General would have bothered to look at the law books, would have bothered to begin to question and to examine some of these problems having concerned himself of the recommendation of Dr. McRuer—I do not know when we started to call him Dr. McRuer, I guess he got an honorary degree recently—Dr. McRuer, Mr. Justice McRuer, Chief Justice. One would have thought he would have looked at the recommendations regarding the handling of police disciplinary matters. One would have thought he would have looked at the provisions of the limitations section of The Public Authorities Protection Act. One would have thought that the brave new wave would have begun to modernize procedures, regularize them and make them equitable for all police officers in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the House leader indicated to me that it was his desire to adjourn at 5 o'clock. I am finished with that subject, and I am going to embark upon a third one which I will be at some length about, of some interest again to the Attorney General. So if it meets with the House leader's approval, at this point I will move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the House leader to adjourn at this time?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, we are getting very close to the hour of 5 o'clock, and I would move that the House adjourn to resume again on Tuesday next. I would like to say in addition, that on Tuesday—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker having been told at last what the order of business is for today, the member might put the motion that the debate be adjourned.

Mr. Singer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I think on Tuesday we might continue the debate in reply to the Speech from the Throne. There is a possibility that we might seek to have some second readings if the occasion permits.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Just before the motion is put, can the House leader tell us whether it is the intention of the government to return to the unemployment debate next week?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I cannot say definitely not next week, but I think it would not likely be next week. That is as definite as I can be.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): That is good.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): May I ask, Mr. Speaker, if the House will sit Tuesday evening next week?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I believe it is the intention that the House sit Tuesday evening.

Mr. Singer: The minister believes, but he is not sure?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Members can prepare for that.

Mr. Peacock: We are always prepared.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 13, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon our guests in the galleries are students from Main Street School, Toronto, in the east gallery; and in the west gallery from Burlington Central High School in Burlington.

Statements by the ministry.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the document relating to national tax reform, which I announced last week would be ready for presentation today. It is "Ontario Studies in Tax Reform No. 4—Tax Reform and Revenue Growth to 1980."

This is one of the series of tax analyses undertaken in The Department of Treasury and Economics. These analyses have used the most up-to-date techniques and the best available data to measure the impact of various methods for reforming the national tax system.

This recent study examines the possible economic and revenue effects of three alternative tax structures: the existing income tax system, the proposed federal white paper system and the Ontario tax reform proposals within the context of full potential economic growth to 1980. Estimates of the effects of various proposals have become a crucial part of the tax reform process. In particular, estimates of this kind are important in four areas of public sector planning in Canada.

First, the revenue estimates provide a measure for the control of the growth of Canada's public sector. In presenting the revenue implications of alternative tax systems, a basis is provided for anticipating and preventing undesirable revenue growth and inflationary expansion of the public sector in the decade ahead. Specifically, this study reveals that the federal white paper system as originally proposed would generate an enormous revenue increase over the existing income tax system by 1980, in the order of 4.5 billion in 1980. The study also reveals that even the present tax system has the capacity to generate enormous fiscal dividends. The revenue estimates of the study measure the scope available for future tax reductions rather than automatic increases in government spending.

Second, estimates of revenue growth demonstrate the scope for continuing tax reform. The results of the study serve as a guide to the revenue increases which will become available in future years. We have, as a consequence, a better idea of the amount of additional tax relief which may be provided to low-income groups, while at the same time eliminating tax increases on middle- and upper-income groups. The results also act as a guide to the most appropriate timing of continuing tax reform.

Third, revenue estimates help to promote public awareness of the need to examine proposals for tax reform in the context of other proposals for restructuring the social security system. It is important to be aware of how changes in our tax laws and changes in our social security system will jointly affect the disposable income of Canadians. As far as possible, all government tax and spending policies should be examined for their effects on disposable income. This study emphasizes the need for the examination of the combined effects of tax reform and social security reform.

Fourth, the revenue estimates of this study are essential to calculating the pool of revenues which would become available to federal, provincial and municipal governments in future years under each alternative tax system. This information will, we hope, contribute to the more rational division of these tax resources among the three levels of government. The projections set out in this study will, I feel confident, assist in the improvement of the forward projections undertaken by the tax structure committee.

The principal quantitative results of this study are as follows: Under the present income tax system revenues would grow from $10 billion in 1969 to $29.3 billion by 1980, marking an increased share in gross national product of from about 13 per cent in 1969 to about 16 per cent by 1980.

Under the Ontario tax reform proposals, revenues would grow from $10.1 billion in 1969 to $30.8 billion in 1980. The study shows that the Ontario tax reform proposals would provide more tax relief to low-income groups than either the existing tax system or the federal white paper tax reform proposals. In its earlier proposals for tax reform in Canada, Ontario has emphasized the need to devote future revenue gains to finance continued tax relief.

Under the federal white paper proposals, revenues would grow from $11.6 billion in 1969 to $33.8 billion by 1980, revenue increase over the existing tax system of $1.45 billion in 1969, rising to an increase in 1980 of $4.5 billion.

This study, which I commend to the House's attention, places in a dynamic context the tax analyses which have been undertaken in The Department of Treasury and Economics in the last 10 months.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

SECOND READING OF BILL 10

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food. Since The National Farm Products Marketing Act has now been passed by the House of Commons committee on agriculture and is now before Parliament for third reading, will the minister undertake to retain his Bill 10 and not present it as second reading until the federal legislation is enacted?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I would like to give an affirmative answer to the hon. Leader of the Opposition. Unfortunately, I do not feel inclined to do so for the simple reason that we have no idea how long it will take to obtain third reading. I gather it will come back to the House now for Committee of the Whole as well as for third reading. Frankly, I think the way to resolve the problems that relate to poultry products marketing, within Canada particularly, should be dealt with through The National Farm Products Marketing Act. We hoped for several months that this would become a reality, but it has not as yet. In the meantime, unless something is done to control what can conceivably happen, there can be very drastic losses sustained by a good many agriculture producers across Canada.

AIR POLLUTION IN TORONTO

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Energy and Resources Management. The first one is, will he table the names of those industries which by his order were either shut down or reduced their activities in the air pollution difficulties over the last two days?

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member requires them.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): By way of supplementary, is the minister prepared to launch one of his magnificent lawsuits against those industries in Toronto which he knows are polluting the air?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any comparison or analogy that can be drawn here between what happened in Toronto over the weekend as far as air pollution is concerned and any other industries with which we are involved in litigation.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, by way of further supplementary, what permanent steps, if any, is the hon. minister prepared to take against the known polluters in the Toronto area who caused the index of pollution to rise as high as 52?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the industries themselves are not completely responsible for a high index reading. It was because of certain atmospheric conditions and stagnation. The sources that we feel would contribute toward the high index reading, of course, are such known sources as our hydro-generating stations, our incinerators within the city, and the Toronto General Hospital. Those are all under order to clean up.

The hon. member knows for example that the Hearn generating station is converting to gas. The new Toronto hospital stack and heating system is not in complete operation at this time, therefore the condition of that hospital contributed toward a high index reading.

All these matters are being looked into and corrected wherever possible.

Mr. Singer: By way of a further supplementary, is the minister not prepared to do anything to avoid the future danger of high pollution indexes in Toronto such as exist today?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Those known sources, as well as a lot of small sources, are requested to comply with our regulations to install abatement equipment and correct whatever deficiency exists in their operation contributing toward high index readings. They are all under order to do this.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, how many prosecutions have been launched by the air management branch within the last year?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, I have not got that figure in my head but I think it is around 40. I can get the accurate figure for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

EXPORT OF POWER

Mr. Nixon: I have another question of the same minister. Has he completed his review of the former government policy affecting the export of power from northwestern Ontario to the United States through International Falls?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, Mr. Speaker, that review is not complete as yet.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Is the minister aware that the Energy Board requested if there was any change in the policy of the Ontario government in this regard, that it be transmitted to the Energy Board one week before the hearings resume, which is April 20?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: No, I was not aware of that, Mr. Speaker. Certainly it was the intention of this government to let our position be known before any hearings resume.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the minister give us some indication when that will be?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: It will be some time this month, I would think.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister inform the Legislature of the position of the government on the export of power from northwestern Ontario before informing the National Energy Board?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: I do not see any reason why this could not be done as far as that particular event is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

REVIEW OF WAGE SETTLEMENT

Mr. Nixon: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Labour. Has he undertaken a review of the wage settlement between the Sheetmetal Contractors Association of London, Ontario, and Local 473 providing for a 40 per cent increase in wages over two years?

Hon. G. R. Carton (Minister of Labour): Yes, we have studied this problem, Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition. Also, the Prices and Incomes Commission were in London last week and we have their report. We are watching this very closely.

Mr. Nixon: I have a supplementary. According to reports there are 200 additional settlements of this nature that will be before the people of Ontario and particularly this minister. Has he got any programme to keep these matters under constant review and, in the public interest, influence them so that they will not be so inflationary?

Hon. Mr. Carton: Mr. Speaker, we have a continuing review on this particular topic. As a matter of fact, this matter has been gone into every morning.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: Is there anything the minister is prepared to do about it? Does the minister enter into the negotiations on behalf of the public interest to maintain a level that is something less than 20 per cent a year?

Hon. Mr. Carton: We are continually having negotiations with both sides, Mr. Speaker.

OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Justice and Attorney General. Has the hon. minister any further information to report to the House on his negotiations with the government of Canada through the Minister of Justice on off-track betting procedures as they may develop in this province?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): No, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to report at this time.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: Can the minister say that the government, through him or his predecessor, has recommended to the government of Canada that legislation be brought forward permitting off-track betting in this province?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to say that.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West.

BAIL PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, a question of the Attorney General and Minister of Justice: Does the Attorney General intend to announce to the Legislature a change in the bail proceedings which would prohibit the occurrence of the incident at the Don Jail, in the appearance before Judge Foster, that occupied public attention over the last 48 hours?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I have been concerned, as I am sure most of the members of this House have been, over certain press reports yesterday in the Toronto media about an occurrence which at this stage, I can only claim to be very, very highly unfortunate.

I have been tied up all morning in a very important meeting. I have not been able to get the other side of this story, if indeed there is another side to that story. But this afternoon, as soon as I am free from the question period here in the House, I have scheduled a meeting for the senior judge of the county of York, the senior Crown attorney for Metro Toronto—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): A summit conference!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —the director of public prosecutions and the assistant deputy minister of The Department of Justice under whose general jurisdiction this whole question falls—

Mr. Sopha: How about the treasurer of the Law Society?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I intend finding out just what the problem is in respect of this matter and a few other matters that have taken place along this line over the last year or so. As soon as I am in a position to report to the House, I shall do so.

I did have the opportunity this morning, very briefly, to speak to the Minister of Justice for the federal government to find out where the new bail provisions are in their legislative mill, which hopefully are designed to alleviate some of these problems. He informed me it is presently before the Senate. I am not falling back on that as an excuse or an alibi here at all, but I am trying to get to the bottom of it. As soon as I can—hopefully tomorrow, but I may not be in a position tomorrow; if not, certainly this week—I shall be reporting back to the House.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I have two supplementaries, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister had time to consider the comments of Judge Taylor that persons of this type are kept in jail as an economy measure? Judge Foster; I beg your pardon!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. Just on my way into the House I saw headlines in one of the Toronto afternoon papers respecting some reputed comment by Judge Foster, but I have not had the opportunity of reading any further than the headlines.

Mr. Shulman: My second supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister considered the possibility of having a full-time bail bondsman so people need not sit in jail overnight awaiting the arrival of someone at the jail who can get these people out?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am as concerned—as I think the hon. member is reported to have been concerned—regarding the absence of a justice of the peace on Saturday. Why there was no justice of the peace available on Saturday I do not know, but I intend to find out.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Dovercourt has a supplementary?

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, by way of supplementary: Did duty counsel appear on behalf of the accused, in that trial before the judge, to explain the situation to Judge Foster?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is another of the very many matters I am going to be asking a little later on.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, if the observations as reputed to have been uttered by Judge Foster are in fact accurate, is the minister prepared to submit that to the judicial council of Ontario for review?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I have not seen those comments, so I think it would be very unfair of me to comment on that.

Mr. Sopha: Does the minister know the last one the member for High Park bailed out skipped town?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Sopha: He was from Sudbury, to our eternal shame.

ODC LOAN PROGRAMME

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Development? On what authority does Mr. Etchen, head of the Ontario Development Corporation, dispense $26 million of taxpayers' money by way of forgivable loans without paying any attention at all, as he said, to the growth centre priorities as established in the government's Design for Development plans?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Economics): Mr. Speaker, the authority which is given to the Ontario Development Corporation does not, of course, make any reference to any plan. The authority given to the ODC is contained in the legislation setting up the ODC.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, does the minister feel it proper that his major loan programme should violate all existing patterns of economic development which the government, in its other departments, has established?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it must be obvious to the hon. member who is asking the question, and to all members of this House, that this plan has been and is being developed over a period of years. I am sure he would not suggest that the minute those people who are charged with the responsibility of developing such a plan were beginning to write a report, or even brought in a report which has not as yet been adopted as official policy, we should have stopped helping municipalities in obtaining jobs for their people, and so on.

Mr. Lewis: Nobody said that. But why should the minister's plans violate his proposed reports—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well I am asking the hon. member whether he feels we should not have granted any loans in the last three years.

Mr. Lewis: It should have been directed to his department's own growth centres.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What should they have done? Should they have waited?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister and the member are getting into a debate. All the minister should do, please, is to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure many of the hon. members in the NDP as well as the Liberal opposition would agree, that it would have been unwise not to do anything for some of these communities while we were awaiting a report.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker, on what basis will the minister be giving preference to Canadian-based companies?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That, Mr. Speaker, is a policy the details of which I said would be announced in a few days, and probably this week. We will spell out the details.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has a supplementary?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): In what way will this policy differ from the policy that is presently in existence, whereby the government is putting up the risk capital for companies?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a policy question which is not allowed.

Mr. Deans: It is not a policy question; they are doing it now.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A supplementary question: If ODC is going to continue its grants, why cannot it do it in keeping with the guidelines laid down by Design for Development and direct them to the growth centres rather than scatter them all over the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, in the first place, I thought I had answered that previously.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no, he avoided it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I did not avoid it; I am saying to the hon. member that there would have been a considerable number of people in municipalities in difficulty had they been required to carry out the recommendations as laid down in some of these reports to date.

Mr. Lewis: In other words, to hell with the reports.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I did not say that, Mr. Speaker. What I am saying is that if the hon. member would like me to read out the municipalities represented by members of his party which have been helped, I will ask them whether—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, come on. Maybe that is important to the minister's party.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Is that the only way the minister thinks?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, does the hon. member suggest that it is not important to his backbenchers? Would the hon. member like me to read a list of those members representative of his party who have asked for assistance in spite of Design for Development?

Mr. Lewis: Well, is that the way the government distributes a loan? What a silly business.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those people were in difficulty in those municipalities—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: And nobody has whined more than the hon. member has about Peterborough.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it would have been—

Mr. Pitman: The provincial Treasurer really got taken apart, did he not? He sure got clobbered that night.

Mr. Lewis: The civil service is sabotaging the minister. They are undermining his good image.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It would have been completely callous of this government to have ignored the hardships that were going on in some of the municipalities, had we awaited official policy on Design and Development before helping those municipalities in creating jobs, and many of those municipalities are represented by members in the NDP who press the government to do something for the people in those areas.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has the floor for a supplementary, and this will be the last supplementary.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: If the minister states that ODC is going to encourage the growth of Canadian companies, is he aware that about 95 per cent of these companies are located in centres which currently do not come under ODC designation?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not aware of that, Mr. Speaker. I just tell the hon. member that the whole policy is being reviewed, particularly in the light of the policies which we declared in the Throne Speech. If you look into all of these matters—the only thing I am objecting to, obviously, while I am on my feet, is the fact that members of this House who pressed the government to do something about people in these municipalities being out of work, are now getting up and complaining that it was not in accordance with a plan which is being put together by planning. That is all I am saying to the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has the floor to ask further questions.

CONSUMER PRICE INDEX INCREASE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have one question for, I guess, the provincial Treasurer, under the circumstances of the Premier's absence. Will the provincial Treasurer now launch an inquiry into the gas price increases, the proposed beer price increases, the problems of food price increases, given the astonishing jump of the consumer price index?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, will the Ontario food council be requested to look into the food costs in Ontario in view of their large share of the rise in the consumer price index?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: As I recall, Mr. Speaker, the food council looked into that situation some months ago when food prices were falling. I think we are satisfied with what they found, and I would think that the answer to the question again would be no.

FARM COMMODITY PRICES

Mr. Speaker: The member for Renfrew South.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I am sure that the minister is aware of the very low prices in certain farm commodities and I am wondering if he could enlighten the House as to the main contributors to the low prices, especially eggs and pork?

Mr. Sopha: Times are so tough he carries his lunch with him.

Mr. Yakabuski: That is right. A delightful lunch it is.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question regarding the unsatisfactory price of eggs and pork at the moment and the reasons which might be attributed as the cause for this, I would suggest that perhaps in the last few years there have been substantially high prices, particularly with hog prices—good prices, I would say—which have contributed to the over-production of hogs, bearing in mind, of course, the enormous surplus of grain that we had in western Canada that apparently could not be marketed.

As a matter of fact, in the year 1970 hog production increased in the Province of Saskatchewan by 75 per cent and in the Province of Manitoba by 35 per cent and in the Province of Alberta by 33 per cent. This, coupled with a substantial increase in hog production in eastern Canada—about 11 per cent in Ontario in 1970—led to the production of a great many more hogs than could actually be used in Canada.

The result was that we had to look for export markets. Fortunately, through efforts of The Department of Trade and Commerce, the Ontario Food Council, the Canadian Swine Council and the Ontario Hog Producers' Marketing Board, export markets were found. Working with the packing industry, we stepped up exports last year by 68 per cent over the previous year, which I think is a substantial increase in export products. But, by the same token, in the export market, the world price for hogs was greatly lower than the previous two-year prices for pork but it was the means of the western farmer converting a good deal of that unsold grain into cash.

The consequent result has been this build-up of pork supplies, but, by the same token, there has been a substantial increase, Mr. Speaker, in the consumer consumption of pork products within Canada at greatly reduced prices, not only at wholesale but also at retail level. So I believe in the fall of 1970 we had the highest per capita consumption of pork products in the history of Canada, if memory serves me correctly.

The matter of low prices today is definitely associated with the fact that there is a weak market for pork products. The result has been a backup of this on the market. The price is reflected in that condition of over-supply. How long this will pertain, nobody knows, and I wish I could provide the hon. member with a more satisfactory answer. However I think the stepped-up sales of western grain on the export market will discourage many of the western farmers continuing in excessive pork production and we look for much better things to come, probably by the fall of this year.

With regard to egg prices, the same thing is virtually true. Egg production and egg prices have been on a cyclical basis for as long as I can remember, with peaks and valleys. At the present time there exists a state of peak production, generated to some degree again by western producers, particularly in Manitoba, producing far in excess of that province's ability to consume.

There just has generally been vast over-production of eggs, not only in western Canada but in Ontario as well. The result has been a greatly deteriorated price to producers, Mr. Speaker. It is deplorable, there is no question about it. I should think with the action taken by some egg producers in Canada to try to bring some order and stability into the production patterns and pricing structures within their own provinces, that we might look for better things ahead.

Mr. Nixon: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker; I wonder if the minister can indicate whether the food council or his economics branch has assessed the role played by the price war among the supermarkets in depressing these prices unnaturally in recent months?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I cannot give the hon. leader a specific answer on that one way or the other. There was a report published some time ago by the food council and I believe a report was published not long ago by a private firm indicating comparative pricing between the supermarkets in Ontario.

I would say this; that I think the supermarkets have co-operated magnificently in moving the enormous surplus of pork products—particularly up until the fowl hit the market before Christmas. Had it not been for that kind of co-operation, I am afraid the answer to my friend, the member for Renfrew South, is that the price would have been much, much worse than it really was.

Members will note that the price on pork held up to around the $25 to $26 level just the last few weeks, when it slipped to about $22 to $23 on the dressed weight market. It is just the buildup of products; that is all that dropped it, really.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

REGIONAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Sopha: Thank you. I have a three-part question of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Would the minister tell the House whether he has under active consideration the establishment of a single-tier system of regional government for the Sudbury basin?

Secondly, would he inform the House whether any steps have been taken to fill the void in the proposal that he announced a short while ago in reference to participation of the regional government in hospital expansion in the area?

Thirdly, what report can he make to the House of his deliberations with three representatives of the town of Copper Cliff today?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the questions in the order in which the hon. member placed them:

I made proposals on March 15 in Sudbury on a two-tier system. That was the general arrangement we felt best for the area for regional government in the future. I suggested at that time that the intermunicipal committee under Mayor Solski of Coniston should consider the proposals that I put before them and make submissions to me and to the department by an early date.

In reference to the matters that were not covered in that brief, it was not meant to be all-inclusive. Certainly the hon. member raised several matters, including the hospitals, on the occasion when I was in Sudbury. Since that time we have had a group within the department studying the matter further and we will deal with that matter, also the submissions that come to us.

Today I met a delegation from Copper Cliff which included the mayor of that municipality; I had a meeting outside with a number of them and then they presented a brief to me in my office. That brief will be considered, along with a number of others which I am sure I will receive in the next week or so.

I have had some communications from various people in the Sudbury area and they will receive due consideration and certainly the Copper Cliff one will receive consideration. They made some good points in their brief, but the department and myself carefully considered the whole project and felt the proposals we put forward on March 15 had much merit for that area.

Mr. Sopha: As a supplementary, is the minister able to predict with any fair degree of accuracy the date on which the Sudbury basin might expect the implementation of regional government?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Speaker, I asked that the opinions of the people in the area should be submitted by June 1, so that we could move on as quickly as possible after that. So I would say that in the interim, as I said before, I have a committee working on the whole project.

Mr. Deans: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker: The minister stated in Sudbury that he would not entertain any discussion in regard to the maintenance of Copper Cliff's individual identity. Is that still the policy of the department in regard to the establishment of regional government?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I do not recall that I made that particular statement.

Mr. Deans: Well, those are not the words but that was the intent.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I said that the regional form was the one that we felt should be implemented in the area, but that there could be discussion in reference to details within that framework.

Mr. Deans: By way of supplementary, would that also include discussion as to maintaining Copper Cliff's individual identity? Or would it not?

Hon. Mr. Bales: The people in Copper Cliff have today made submissions in reference to that and they have had discussions with me. I think it is only right and proper that people in the area should be able to make submissions on these matters if they so wish.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? Then the Minister of Trade and Development has the answer to a question asked last week.

SENIOR CITIZENS' RENTS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on April 6 the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) asked the following question:

Will senior citizens receiving the guaranteed income supplement and living in Ontario Housing, be permitted to keep all of their increased supplement or will some portion of it be taken away by way of rent increases?

Mr. Speaker, senior citizens in family housing units administered by Ontario Housing Corporation, are rented on a scale which has national application, and is set in co-ordination with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Persons in receipt of a gross income of $190 a month or less pay a basic fully serviced rent of $32 a month.

A senior citizen in receipt of guaranteed income supplement, together with a pension, had an income increase from $113.61 to $135. This means his or her fully serviced rent remains at $32 a month.

A senior-citizen couple, in receipt of pension and the maximum guaranteed income supplement, had a change in income from $227.22 to $255 a month. On the scale, the percentage that goes for rent changes from approximately 19.2 per cent to 20.8 per cent. This means their rent will increase from $44 a month to $53 a month at the end of their present lease. All leases are on a one-year fixed-rent basis for increases so this change would not be effective until that time.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? If not, the member for York South has the floor.

EFFICIENCY REPORT ON GOVERNMENT PROGRAMMES

Mr. MacDonald: A question of the provincial Treasurer: Would the provincial Treasurer table in this House the study that was conducted under the auspices of the Treasury Board last year in reviewing the effectiveness and efficiency of the government's various programmes and grants, loans and subsidies?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It was probably done a couple of years ago, a year and a half ago anyway, and I would suspect that the answer would be no, that that was prepared for the use of the government and I do not think it would be a particularly appropriate document to table here.

Mr. MacDonald: A supplementary question: In a speech of a few weeks ago, I believe his first speech in his new portfolio, the minister stated that the report was completed in 1970, therefore approximately one year ago, and that as a result of the steering committee's implementation of its recommendations there was a saving of $5.3 million. Is this House not entitled to know how the government saved $5.3 million; what the recommendations were upon which it was operating?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be glad to give the member the details of the saving of $5.3 million.

Mr. MacDonald: A final supplementary question: Is the minister saying that he will give us a copy of the recommendations upon which the steering committee was operating when it saved the $5.3 million?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, the member wanted to know how we had saved $5.3 million and I will be glad to supply that information to the member.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of a final supplementary question: I do not want a breakdown of the $5.3 million; is the minister saying he will give us a copy of the recommendations that were implemented in achieving that $5.3 million?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member has now reverted to his original question as opposed to the supplementaries, and I said the answer was no. How many times does the hon. member have to be told? The answer is no, n-o.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask as a final supplementary: Why cannot this House have information when public moneys are—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: When public moneys are spent by the Treasury Board by way of achieving greater efficiency, why is this House not entitled to the information?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me we have been over this ground a number of times. I have reason to believe that there are documents which I would love to see which have been prepared with the benefit of public money in the office of the New Democratic Party. I am not about to demand—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Ontario South.

SUGGESTED ABOLITION OF FISHING LICENCES

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): A question of the Minister of Lands and Forests: Due to the limited revenue from fishing licences in the Province of Ontario, would the minister consider abolishing the fishing licence? It also shows discrimination against the male sex.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to take that question under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Parkdale.

SALE OF FORMER SITE OF MERCER REFORMATORY

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Public Works. Could the minister inform the House if the property on which the Mercer Reformatory once was—on King Street West in Toronto—has been sold, and if so, to whom?

Hon. J. A. C. Auld (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall that it has been sold since I have been the minister. I will get the information for the hon. member when I return to the office this afternoon.

Mr. Trotter: By way of a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister also inquire if this property had ever been considered for the use of public housing?

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

SCHOOLING OF WARDS OF CHILDREN'S AID

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): I have a question of the Minister of Social and Family Services.

1. Why does the government maintain legislation which "discriminates against children who are in the care of Children's Aid Societies, and which could effectively prevent them from attending any school at all?"

2. Why has the Ontario Association of Children's Aid Societies not received a reply for a period of 12 months concerning this issue?

Hon. T. L. Wells (Minister of Social and Family Services): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has not made it very clear exactly what issue he wishes an answer on. I will check and find out what letter he was talking about that has not been replied to and see if I can find out the answer.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question, if I might, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister recommend to cabinet that section 6 of The Public Schools Act, section 22 of The Separate Schools Act, and section 71 of The Secondary Schools Act, be revised so that it is not possible for school boards to exclude children who are wards of the Children's Aid Society or in foster homes?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I will be happy to take that under consideration, Mr. Speaker. That, of course, is a matter of policy.

Mr. T. Reid: The minister has had it for 12 months.

Mr. Speaker: Any further supplementaries? The member for Brantford.

ONTARIO CREDIT UNION LEAGUE

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs. Can the minister indicate if he is planning to take any action regarding the Ontario Credit Union League's stabilization fund?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I met with certain members of the executive of the Credit Union League shortly after my appointment to this portfolio and we examined the report brought forward by a committee of this House. We are studying it now for possible implementation. I cannot say further than that in answer to the hon. member.

Mr. Makarchuk: By way of supplementary, can the minister say when the final decision will be made?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: One of the recommendations, Mr. Speaker, was about the administration of the bond fund. I cannot, I think be more accurate or more close in my estimate than I have stated, that we are studying it, and I hope we will be coming forth with a recommendation in legislation, though I cannot say when.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Revenue has the reply to a question asked last week.

SALE TAX LOSSES

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have a further reply to the member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon) and I have investigated the implications of his question as thoroughly as possible.

The department does, in fact, tax the seller of securities and I might say that if there is any loss of revenue the only sale that we could locate was, in fact, a government sale, or an Ontario Hydro sale, that was made in the province of Quebec, and of course such sales are tax exempt. If there are other avenues of which the hon. member is aware I would be glad to hear of them and take necessary action.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: What steps does the ministry propose to take to place the responsibilities for the payment of tax on the seller of the securities, so that Ontario residents, corporations or individuals who sell securities have the obligation of paying the tax; so it is not just the broker who may have no obligation to pay the tax who has the obligation to pay the tax? We are missing revenue, and I want to know what steps the minister is taking to collect revenue in this case.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, as I said, I am not aware of any tax or any revenue that is being lost, but I will further examine the question of the hon. member and determine if there is revenue being lost in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex South has the floor for a question.

EXEMPTION FROM SALES TAX

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Revenue. Will the hon. minister consider removing the five per cent sales tax on the flower-growing industry in relation to its equipment and its repairs?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, the present method of taxing is that greenhouse operators who, in fact, are involved in the growth of produce related to the agricultural industry are exempt from this tax, whereas in the reference made by the hon. member in those particular cases, they are subject to the tax. Where an operator has a divided operation we allow the exemption on the portion that is considered agriculture. However, in regard to his suggestion, I will certainly take it under consideration.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. In view of the Minister of Agriculture and Food's statement on April 7, that he looks upon the production of flowers as being an agricultural industry, would this not enhance his particular line of thinking?

Hon. Mr. Winkler: For the second time, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly be pleased to take the hon. member's suggestion under consideration.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton Mountain.

GRADE 13 PROGRAMME AT SIR WILFRID LAURIER

Mr. J. R. Smith (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Education: Would the minister indicate what action he intends to take regarding the representations made to him by citizens and the member for Hamilton Mountain regarding the controversy surrounding Sir Wilfrid Laurier Secondary School and its grade 13 programme for next season?

Mr. Lewis: The member has not said anything about it yet.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): He is a front for the Liberal candidate in Hamilton Mountain.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of The Schools Administration Act, matters such as that referred to by the hon. member fall within the jurisdiction of the Hamilton Board of Education. The department itself has not been asked by the board of education with respect to any approvals to construct a school specially for grade 13 pupils.

The latest application for school accommodation we have goes back into the early part of 1969 and deals with a school, the Sir Wilfrid Laurier Secondary School. But I hasten to point out to the hon. member, I appreciate very much the fact that he brought this matter to my attention over the weekend, expressing as he did the concern of those whom he represents in Hamilton Mountain with respect to this decision, but it falls within the jurisdiction of the Hamilton Board of Education.

Mr. Lewis: That is putting him in his place.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has a supplementary.

Mr. J. R. Smith: Mr. Speaker, one last supplementary question of the minister: Is it a legal privilege of a board of education to exclude from its committee meeting, or from a caucus meeting, representations by ratepayers who wish to appear before that said committee and express their views? Such was the case regarding this controversy when these citizens were not allowed to appear before the meeting.

Mr. Speaker: The member has asked his question.

Mr. Deans: The member did not even go to the meeting.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think the question of the bylaws which govern any particular board are a matter which the board itself will decide. I think, however, all regular meetings of the board are open meetings, at which time committee reports are discussed and, no doubt, at which time the public will be able to make its representations known to the board.

Mr. Singer: All open meetings are open, yes?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I want to reiterate that this particular matter, which concerns a number of people in Hamilton, rests with the Hamilton Board of Education and that board is accountable to those who have elected them to be there.

Mr. Speaker: Supplementary.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question: I wonder if the minister might answer whether the Hamilton board had asked for permission or for grants to build a school solely for grade 13?

Mr. Speaker: This is a theoretical question.

Mr. Deans: That is exactly to the point.

Mr. Speaker: This is a theoretical question and is not in accordance with the rules.

Mr. Deans: All right. I will ask a new question.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Is the Minister of Education in a position to reply to my question of approximately a week ago concerning his committee which is examining the feasibility of the elimination of grade 13 in the Province of Ontario—

Mr. Deans: I asked that last week.

Mr. Speaker: This is not supplementary.

Mr. T. Reid: —which would make that school obsolete?

Mr. Speaker: This is not supplementary. The hon. member for Wentworth has the floor for a new question.

SCHOOL FOR GRADE 13

Mr. Deans: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the hon. minister whether it is possible for a municipal board of education to receive grants for the building of a school solely for the purpose of grade 13 students.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to answer that question, but I do not want there to be any misunderstanding. The matter referred to in Hamilton has nothing to do with a school built exclusively for grade 13. The 1969 approval with respect to the Laurier school had reference to the need for school accommodation generally. What the board does in re-arranging—I think, for instance, in that city the Delta Secondary School is now closed down for renovations and so on—

Mr. Deans: That has nothing to do with this.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Does the hon. member want an answer?

Mr. Lewis: Yes, but he is waiting for it.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: No, he does not want an answer he wants to blether. He would not know a right answer if he did hear it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Now what was the question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You think that is esoteric? Look behind you.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The point is this, that the department itself—and this is a hypothetical question—if the department itself got a request for a school exclusively for the accommodation of grade 13, it would not look favourably upon such a request simply for that reason. It would have to be satisfied with respect to the overall need for school accommodation.

Mr. Deans: May I, by way of final supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

PROTESTANT CHILDREN'S HOMES

Mr. Meen moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act respecting Protestant Children's Homes.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member be good enough to indicate what is the principle of the bill?

Mr. Speaker: It is normal that private bills are introduced merely to the House, because they have all been before a bills committee and it is not the usual custom to speak on the introduction of such a bill.

Mr. Lewis: It is a private bill?

Mr. Speaker: A private bill, yes.

HUNTINGTON UNIVERSITY

Mr. Sopha moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act respecting Huntington University.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: The House leader has preference.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I thought it might be as well to inform the hon. members of the House something as to the order of business, particularly since, when the House rose on Thursday last I indicated there might be a possibility of night sittings this week. I should like to inform the House at the earliest moment there will be no night sitting today. Also, Mr. Speaker, I think the members of the House anticipate that tomorrow will be committee day and that the House will not be sitting. Committees will be sitting and the House should be aware of that.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order or a comment, Mr. Speaker, if that is permissible: Can the House leader give us some guarantee of night sittings commencing Thursday, or there will be no time left of the Throne debate in this House and the rights of private members will be truncated totally.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, there is legislation on the order paper; there are second readings. There is also order number two which is the continuation of the unemployment debate—

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Why do we not do that tonight?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —and I have no doubt there will be other legislation introduced. I am not prepared, at this moment, to say that there will be a night sitting this Thursday.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may, sir, to the House leader: The rules of the House now require that the Throne Speech terminate prior to the introduction of the budget, which means Thursday next or Friday next. This means that the members of this House will be confined to the shortest period of Throne debate, probably in the last several years, certainly in my recollection. I think, therefore, that greater opportunities should be given by night sittings, presumably. We thought tonight, but at least Thursday, and Tuesday and Thursday of the following week.

Hon. E. A. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): Not Thursday next.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point made by the hon. member. The whips have been keeping me informed of the number of speakers wishing to take part and I am sure that there will be ample opportunity for participation before the closing of the Throne debate.

Mr. Lewis: They are debating—

Mr. Shulman: May I ask a question?

Mr. Speaker: Sir, these questions are quite proper because they have to do with the order of business in the House and if the member for High Park wishes to, he may.

Mr. Shulman: I am not sure whether the question should go to you or to the minister, sir. Will every member of the House who wishes to participate in the Throne debate not be given such an opportunity?

Mr. Speaker: I think the House leader had already said that before he sat down.

Mr. Shulman: Is the answer yes?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that I felt there would be opportunity for those wishing to participate to take part, but I did not change the rules.

Mr. Lewis: Too much time at the Masters' golf tournament; too much time at the PGA.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The government, Mr. Speaker, has responsibilities and duties which perhaps the hon. member does not probably have.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Sudbury East a remark with respect to the order of business?

Mr. Martel: I would like to ask the minister when we are going to get on with the emergency debate. In view of the fact that time is going to be allocated for Throne debate, what time is going to be left for this supposed emergency debate on unemployment?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the hon. member a definite day, but we had quite an extended debate on that. I am sure it will be resumed and he will have an opportunity to take part before long.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the hon. member for Sudbury East that the unemployment debate was an ordinary resolution on the order paper and was not an emergency debate. The member for Essex South.

Mr. Martel: That is what it was billed as last week.

An hon. member: The hon. member does not know how to read.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, if I might draw to your attention and that of the other members of the House, the basket of freshly picked cucumbers and tomatoes from the riding of Essex South.

The riding I represent has approximately 90 per cent of the greenhouse production in the Dominion of Canada and these two products have been on the market for several weeks now. The cucumbers, in particular, are just reaching the peak of production.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): The tomatoes are a little too soft.

Mr. Paterson: It is interesting to note that this produce is now being shipped southward into the United States, which I think may be a first in our production.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paterson: The prices were excellent. The tomatoes will be at the peak of production in approximately three weeks and they, too, are enjoying very good prices on an excellent market. I am sure it is the wish of the greenhouse producers and all the members that this holds true for all the other products that are produced by our agriculturists in our province this coming year.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to express my appreciation through you, sir, to the hon. member for Essex South for the presentation of this delightful basket of cucumbers and greenhouse tomatoes. It is indicative of the quality of produce grown in that great sun-parlour area of the Province of Ontario, famous for its production of hothouse vegetables. I should like, through you, Mr. Speaker, to advise our friends from the news media—some of whom have departed the gallery I am afraid—but I trust who have been listening to these words of wisdom, that they may advertise the quality of Ontario products so that Ontario consumers may continue to enjoy the tremendous quality of our hothouse fruit and vegetables. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The first order; resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor at the opening of the session.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, to resume the debate in reply to the address from the Throne, I want to stray off course just for a moment and to speak very briefly about the Francottie incident which was raised by the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) over the weekend and alluded to in the question period by the leader of the NDP (Mr. Lewis).

The Francottie incident is a very surprising incident in light of the many discussions and debates that we have had here in the House about bail procedures, judicial proceedings and administration of jails and that sort of thing.

You will recall with me, Mr. Speaker, the case of one John Bennett. John Bennett was a gentleman who was arrested as a common drunk and when he arrived at the Don Jail some policeman said, "Oh, John Bennett, you are just the fellow we are looking for. You are charged with a driving offence and there is a warrant out for your arrest."

Insist as he might, John Bennett was not able to convince the various authorities with whom he came in contact at that time that not only was he not the John Bennett who was being sought for the driving offence but that he, that John Bennett, has never owned an automobile; could not, in fact, drive and could not possibly have been guilty of the offence which the warrant has been issued for.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): He was never sober enough to drive.

Mr. Singer: The very fascinating explanation from the Attorney General was, "John Bennett was not very important in the scheme of things in the Province of Ontario after all, he was a drifter." It was unfortunate that this kind of incident happened and, hopefully, it would not happen again. Perhaps the policemen who were responsible were going to be disciplined and perhaps the system at the Don Jail was, in fact, going to be improved so it could not happen again.

At that point the Minister of Correctional Institutions entered—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Services!

Mr. Singer:—Services entered the lists. I am sure you can recall with me, Mr. Speaker, how seriously the Minister of Correctional Services, (Mr. Grossman) as he then was, takes himself on occasions such as this. He read us, at great length, two brand new directives that he had instructed go forward to the staff of correctional institutions, and in particular the Don Jail, because he was concerned. He showed much more concern about John Bennett than did his colleague, the then Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). He was going to make sure—

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): On a question of privilege or a matter of order: The hon. member said the Attorney General was not concerned because he felt that this man was not very important, he was a drifter. He almost put words in my mouth to that effect. Such words he will not find where I disparaged the importance of this individual in Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Shame!

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I raise that as a matter of privilege.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it is a question of interpretation; the Attorney General certainly used the word "drifter." Certainly, from the tone of his remarks which are recorded from pages 7303 through to 7306 in the 1969 Hansard, to my mind, he disparaged the importance of the case, disparaged the importance of Bennett whom he described as a drifter and a man of no great importance, and disparaged the importance of disciplining the police officers at that time.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Again, on a point of order, to give a fact, in a matter of bail, as to the character of a person, or the fact that he is not known or that he is a drifter, is not to disparage his character in any way but to give a reason why bail might be refused. In no way, no matter how the hon. member decides to twist and interpret it to suit his purposes, I did not disparage the individual, except to describe that he was drifting about the country and was not known.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, the Attorney General can put whatever interpretation he likes on his remarks and I can put whatever interpretation I like on his remarks. I say those words in Hansard speak for themselves and the Attorney General even now has missed the point, because it was not a question of whether John Bennett should get bail or not; it was a question of whether or not he was wrongly identified. And nobody, least of all the Attorney General, showed any great concern about whether or not he had been properly identified and charged improperly, except for the Minister of Correctional Services, who produced—and it is reported on the same pages of Hansard, two long memoranda of instructions that he had given to the people in the employ of his department, particularly, I would imagine, directed to the Don Jail, because the Minister of Correctional Services mentioned the Don Jail.

I am not going to read the whole of these memoranda but just the question about bail—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They are pretty good; read them all.

Mr. Singer: All right, Mr. Speaker, let me read what the hon. minister said about bail:

Prompt and courteous assistance in contacting a bailing magistrate or justice of the peace shall be provided to any person who comes to post bail at any time of the day or night.

Now those were the directions given by this minister apparently to the staff at the Don Jail, and if the member for High Park is in fact correct—and I presume he is—that he went there on Saturday, and said, “I want to post bail,” and the bail magistrate could not be found until Sunday, I wonder what happened to the “prompt and courteous assistance in contacting a bailing magistrate or justice of the peace” that should be provided “to any person who comes to post bail at any time of the day or night.” I would presume “any time of the day or night” includes Saturdays, Sundays and even the time when the hon. member for High Park arrived at the Don Jail.

Again, Mr. Speaker, in the same memorandum, the hon. minister said, “Legal Aid: Every effort shall be made to ensure that a prisoner is aware of all his rights with respect to legal aid.” Obviously something was lacking in this case; obviously this prisoner was not made aware of his rights or not given the opportunity to take sufficient advantage of them, and obviously this gentleman suffered.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How does the hon. member know that?

Mr. Singer: Now the additional fact—and the former Attorney General was quite concerned; there is an exact quotation from his remarks as recorded on page 7305:

The very fact that Bennett was a drifter made it very difficult for these police officers to get any information that was coherent or satisfactory from him. True, he was of the same name as the man they were pursuing. It was a case of mistaken identity. Someone who could give little help to the police goes to jail; he does not say anything about it, he does not ask for any help, he does not report that he is the wrong man, he is that type of fellow, and when they hold an inquiry he says: “I am not going to be bothered, I am on my way.”

Now if that is not the height of unconcern, Mr. Speaker, I do not know what is. Those are the words of the former Attorney General. The former Attorney General also indicated to us, as we debated bail on many occasions, that he had revised the system; he, along with his colleague the Minister of Correctional Services, had revised all of these systems so that the unfortunate incident, even though it happened to a drifter, presumably was not going to happen again. We had that perambulatory bail magistrate that we have talked about in the House on many occasions—the one who drives backward and forward on Highway 401, always going in the wrong direction, who was supposed to be on duty around the clock.

Where was he over the past weekend? Where was he when this gentleman, Francottie, was in fact being held in jail? Where were the officials at the Don Jail, who had received all of these instructions about courtesy and care and concern from the former Minister of Correctional Services? Why did it take such a great length of time until the incident was, in fact, uncovered? It was not uncovered, fascinating enough by any of the employees of this government; it was not uncovered by any of the people who received these instructions from the former Minister of Correctional Services. It was not uncovered until somebody brought some information to a member of this House, who then went down and made the fact public.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How does the member know that?

Mr. Singer: Where were the inquiries that were made? Why did someone who was in charge of the jail, some kind of an official, not try to ascertain why in fact Francottie had been arrested; why, in fact, he was in jail, how long he was there for, and what the charge was?

Surely, Mr. Speaker, one would have thought after all the fuss that we have had in this House about this very kind of incident, after those important instructions that the Minister of Correctional Services put forward, saying he has great concern, that some of the civil servants, who are supposedly bound to heed these words of wisdom and these instructions, would have taken some action.

Where were the wandering bail magistrates, that the former Attorney General told us about, who were on duty any hour of the day or night? His colleague, the Minister of Correctional Services, said “Yes, any time of the day or night.” Where were all these people? Is there no possible administrative system that can check on those people who are held in the various jails around the province, and make sure that people are advised of all of their rights and are given the opportunity to take full advantage of them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes.

Mr. Singer: Can there be anything more ludicrous, Mr. Speaker, than this kind of an incident? What is the purpose now of holding this great high-level meeting that the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) tells us about today? It is going to be about as effective as the memorandum put forward by the former Minister of Correctional Services and the promises given to this House by the former Attorney General. No effect at all; just another lapse of time and there will be another incident brought to light!

In view of the incidents that are, in fact, brought to light, Mr. Speaker, one has to wonder how many incidents are never really brought to light and how many injustices are carried out in this province by reason of the fact that the ministers, who are representative of this government, are not able to see that their instructions and their orders are carried out, or that their expressions of concern which they make in this House have some more meaning than just being another inscription in the pages of Hansard.

I say that this is just absolutely inexcusable and I say that there has to be something far better emerge from the government insofar as the administration of justice is concerned. I see little hope from the new Attorney General who wants to enforce. He calls himself "the enforcer." He is not particularly concerned about administration of justice. His predecessor pretended he was, but perhaps was not very effective at it at all.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with another matter. I want to deal with the question of the law suit involving Dow Chemical. I suppose it is not untypical of the new Attorney General, shoot-from-the-mouth Lawrence, that we are really going to show the people of Ontario that we mean business. This probably was his phrase originally—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is unparliamentary—

Mr. Singer: It later came forward from the Premier (Mr. Davis). I have got some quotations here about it: "$35 million Dow suit is just the beginning, says Davis." That was reported in the Telegram on March 16, 1971. We are going to be real tough; we are going to sue Dow for $35 million.

Mr. Speaker, you are aware with me that for the sum of $35 one can approach the registrar of the Supreme Court and issue a writ. For the sum of $35 it does not matter whether you claim $35 million or $50 million or $100 million or even $1 million.

I do not know whether it was a new touch of colour emanating from the new Attorney General that the government seized on the interesting figure of $35 million, but what in fact was done was one of the biggest frauds, I think, that has ever attempted to be perpetrated on the people of the Province of Ontario. For the first time, sir, I charge with much regret that the government has begun to use the office of the Attorney General and its law enforcement responsibility for strictly political purposes.

I question seriously the motives that lay behind the bringing of this suit. I think the evidence is abundant that there is no business at all in bringing this matter forward in the way it was done. I am surprised that the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Kerr), who has tried to put forward the idea that anyone who does not like this kind of a lawsuit is, in fact, in favour of pollution and that discussion about the pollution of our lakes and rivers, insofar as mercury is concerned, should lie fallow until the election has come and gone.

It is the old gimmick of trying to issue a writ and still the criticism over an election period, and that is what they have done again. All the more, Mr. Speaker, should they be criticized because they are misusing their duty and responsibility to administer justice in the Province of Ontario and should not use their justice powers of obvious and blatant political purposes.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Let the pollution go on.

Mr. Singer: Now, Mr. Speaker—all right, the minister says, "Let the pollution go on." There are two parts to this action—three parts in fact.

One is that they want an injunction restraining Dow Chemical from dumping mercury into the river. The fact is—and the fact was established before no less a jurisdiction than the Supreme Court of the United States, a pretty eminent legal body, Mr. Speaker—that Dow Chemical had established, at least to the satisfaction of Mr. Justice Harlan who gave a majority opinion on behalf of eight of the nine justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, that they had stopped dumping chemicals into the water; that they were in weekly consultation with the Ontario Water Resources Commission; that in fact they were under executive order to stop dumping mercury into the water and they had, in fact, stopped.

Now, whose word does one take? Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I am inclined to accept the word of Mr. Justice Harlan. I see no reason why Mr. Justice Harlan should have said in his judgement in the case of Ohio versus Wyandotte Chemicals, in the judgement given on March 23, 1971, the words that I have attributed to them if he did not, in fact, believe them.

Now, all we have been able to get from the Minister of Energy and Resources Management is, "It was obiter." I just do not understand what the minister is talking about. The fact is that a responsible judicial body, the most senior responsible judicial body in the United States, said in a majority judgement that this was, in fact true.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Take it to the state court.

Mr. Singer: Surely, Mr. Speaker, that should have some influence on the thinking, or apparent thinking, that should lie in the minds of those hon. gentlemen who occupy the front seats of government. That is, in fact, what Mr. Justice Harlan said.

The second point, Mr. Speaker, is this. Of the $35 million the government asks for—either a mandatory order directed at Dow Chemical to take the mercury out of the river, or for the reward of $10 million so the Province of Ontario can take the material out of the river—we had asked within the House whether there is any known procedure whereby this, in fact, can be done and the minister said, "Yes, there is, but it is too complicated. It is too technical and you peasants in the Legislature probably would not understand it. But there is a system that can do it."

Hon. Mr. Kerr: My words exactly.

Mr. Singer: Let us accept the minister at his word. The facts are far too complicated for us to understand. Even if the minister could explain them to us we could never make head nor tail out of them, but there is a system. Let me then ask the minister, either the rhetorical question or the specific question, if he wants to answer me now, if there is a process which can, in fact, extract mercury from the beds of rivers, why does the province not use it? Why does the province not do as the minister announced the other day, in connection with the removal of phosphorus?

The province has discovered there is a method of removing phosphorus from polluted water areas and the minister issued a press release under his name dated April 4, 1971, saying: "Phosphorus is a terrible thing. We have got to take it out of the water and we are going to spend dollars to do it." Quite logical. Quite sensible. Quite obvious, is it not? There you had a process and there you felt it should be done and there you went and did it. You embarked on a programme and you are spending a lot of government money for this purpose. Fine.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Mr. Speaker, as a point of clarification if the—

Mr. Singer: Clarification. That is a good point.

Hon. Mr. Kerr:—hon. member will allow me. Really, there is no connection or analogy between taking mercury out of a river and dealing with phosphorus. We are not taking phosphorus out of the water. It is the matter of proper treatment at the treatment plant level.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): The member for Downsview would not know anyway.

Mr. Singer: Certainly the matter is thoroughly clarified now, Mr. Speaker. It just removes my whole argument.

I say, Mr. Speaker, if there was a system whereby mercury could, in fact, be removed from the water and it was known in the scientific writings anywhere in North America, then the minister should have taken the pains to bring that system before the House. Whether the two systems, removing phosphorus and removing mercury, are the same or different, it does not matter one whit. What, in fact, does matter is, I say, the absolutely incorrect statement from the minister that there is a method of doing this. Because all of the scientific evidence that I have been able to gather, all of the writings, the work of the Federal Research Laboratory in Winnipeg, the comments of such people as—what is his name—

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Minister of Highways and Transport): The hon. member cannot find it.

Mr. Singer:—the gentleman who first discovered mercury pollution—I have his name here somewhere—all of these writings and studies—

An hon. member: Fimreite.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Fimreite, that is the one—indicate that there is no known system. So what does the government do? They say, "Courts, adjudicate against Dow Chemical and instruct them either to remove the mercury from the water—and there is no known system to do it—or give us $10 million to show that we can do it.”

Mr. Speaker, I think that if there is a known system, certainly there is an obligation on government to indicate how this can be done and it is, in fact, practical. The minister should not embark upon the obviously phoney ploy that the system is so complicated he cannot explain it here in the House. That is number two, Mr. Speaker.

Number three is the claim of $25 million. I do not know where they got the figure. A nice round figure, $10 and $25 make $35 and they had to spend $35 for the issue of a writ, so you multiply 35 by $1 million and there is the figure. What would they do if they got the $25 million? Would they give that money to the fishermen who have lost their livelihood? To the tourist operators who have lost their livelihood? To the people who are in the bait business who have lost their livelihood? If that is their intention, Mr. Speaker, most laudable, but not a word, not a word has come from the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They are getting money now.

Mr. Singer: Not a word has come from the shoot-from-the-mouth Attorney General about what, in fact, is going to happen if they are successful.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): I know better.

Mr. Singer: Yes, the Attorney General knows better. He knows he is not going to succeed, that is the point. He knows that he has not got a chance of succeeding in this thing.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I do not think it is inevitable.

Mr. Singer: The second very interesting question has to be, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: Better save it for the commission. The member will need it.

Mr. Singer: —is, just how long is it going to take before this matter is really decided? Two years was the figure that was thrown out over there.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): The hon. member for Downsview will not be here.

Mr. Singer: Some of us are familiar with the activities of a certain gentleman who is being defended by probably one of the foremost counsel in the Province of Ontario on charges of income tax evasion. My colleague from Sudbury, on several occasions, has wondered aloud when that trial was going to come up. The first little effort that is taking them to the Supreme Court of Canada and back again is whether or not there is a right to proceed by indictment rather than summarily. I am quite certain that it is not beyond the ingenuity of Mr. John Robinette to discover three or four more things that will take him again up and down to the Supreme Court of Canada before that matter ever gets on for trial.

Unless I miss my guess, Mr. Speaker, that particular trial will take many, many, many years until finally it is resolved. There is a parallel. Surely the people who are going to look after Dow Chemical's interests, whether it be Dow Chemical or their insurers—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: The member will do that.

Mr. Singer: —are not, Mr. Speaker, going to just put their hands in their pockets and take out $35 million and send it across to my friend, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: We might negotiate.

Mr. Singer: Surely they are going to fight at least as seriously as the people who are defending the particular gentleman who is being charged with income tax evasion, which is their right and which is their duty. Fine. Now what is wrong with that? The thing that obviously comes out of that is that it will take, not two years, it will take five to seven to 10 years before any resolution can possibly come out of that lawsuit if, in fact, there is any intention on government's part of pursuing the lawsuit after the election has really taken place.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Disposed of within two years.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask another series of questions, and hopefully we can get the Minister of Energy into this debate at a later stage. Why did he concentrate only on Dow? It again appears in the judgement of Mr. Justice Harlan that if there is pollution it has gone on for a considerable period of time and that there are half a dozen different known possible or probable pollutants.

My colleague from Sarnia has talked about the Wyandotte Chemical Company. Why did the Attorney General limit himself in this claim to suing only Dow, because he knows, or he should know full well that when Dow gets into court and if they can say, "Maybe we did a little bit of it, but there are other people did a lot more," the lawsuit is, in fact, going to fail on the grounds on which it was fought.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Is the member saying we should not have sued Dow?

Mr. Singer: Exactly what I am saying, Mr. Speaker.

Now, the Attorney General brings me to my penultimate point, and that is this—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Then he is saying we should not sue anybody.

Mr. Singer: Why did this government not bring in legislation if in fact they really were concerned about it?

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Legislation would be retroactive.

Mr. Singer: Ah, I am glad the minister mentioned the fact. The Minister of Energy and Resources Management says the legislation would in fact be retroactive.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: Do not bring in the consumer bill.

Mr. Singer: Retroactivity, you know, Mr. Speaker, is something that has never in fact occurred to this government—a brand-new idea. Retroactivity is a fact that has never occurred to this government in its long history. You will recall, Mr. Speaker—I have a little note here.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson: The member should have brought his speech writer in with him.

Mr. Singer: Here it is. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the incident involving Earl McKie and the KVP Company on the Spanish River, and you will recall that Earl McKie in fact obtained, through court action, an injunction restraining the KVP Company from dumping pollution into the river above McKie's property. You will also recall the great difficulty that apparently existed in the minds of KVP and you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that notwithstanding all the concern about retroactive legislation, the government brought into the House a retroactive bill which dissolved the injunction and which took away McKie's rights.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Tory government.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Supported by the Liberals, too.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that the concern of the government about retroactive legislation lies as hollow words in the mouths of—

Hon. Mr. Kerr: That is ancient history.

Mr. Singer: Oh, ancient history? It is still the same government.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It is not.

Mr. Singer: And you will recall, Mr. Speaker, the concern that Mr. Justice McRuer expressed about that. Certainly my friend the Attorney General, who obviously has read all those volumes and was referring to them the other day, will recall Mr. McRuer's great concern about this kind of retroactive legislation.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I have not read all the volumes yet.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Better get busy.

Mr. Singer: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I would commend it to the Attorney General because he did make a long speech praising Mr. McRuer, as is proper, and I would think that before he gets on completely with all of this praise that he should in fact know what he is talking about. It is indicative again of the fact that the Attorney General does not know what he is talking about.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: He is reading Hellyer's housing report.

Mr. Trotter: That would make good reading. That is good reading.

Mr. Singer: Certainly there is available to this government all of the legislative authority of this body, and through it some form of statutory enactment which could be entered into immediately—the government has the majority of votes—and which could do what they are apparently pretending to do in the lawsuit. There is no reason, Mr. Speaker, why they should tie themselves up in a losing lawsuit unless it is for the reason that I originally enunciated, that it is a fraud and a contempt exercised on the people of Ontario, using the judicial process solely for political purposes. It is a grandstand effort.

The Premier says this is going to show them we mean business. Poppycock and claptrap, Mr. Speaker! It is not going to show anybody anything. It is never going to get through the courts, and if it does get through the courts to final decision they have not got a chance of winning.

In addition to that, sir, I have listened, and I have got copies here of all of the speeches the Minister of Energy and Resources Management has been making around the province. He has denied the exact form of his comments. Fascinatingly enough, the stuff that hits the press is not in his written text. But I have got a news clipping here from the Toronto Daily Star dated March 29 where the minister is speaking from Ottawa—the head on the story is, "International Action Against Pollution is Urged."

International planning must be the first step toward saving the world from pollution—

Oh, I am sorry, that is not the minister. I was reading the wrong one. That was Maurice Strong at the same conference.

The other one is.

SOME SOVEREIGNTY MUST GO IN POLLUTION FIGHT, KERR SAYS.

George Kerr, the Minister of Energy and Resources Management, said today that Canada might have to give up some of its constitutional sovereignty if it is to win the war against pollution of the Great Lakes.

And he goes on to talk about what the role of the International Joint Commission should be.

It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that the government would make much more sense in connection with this particular problem, where they have focused in on Dow, in trying to promote the kind of international co-operation that the minister was talking about, because it is not a problem exclusive to Dow or to Wyandotte; or a problem for which the government has any solution at this moment. All I say is this: Let the government be honest with the people of Ontario, which it is not now. Let the government not make a sham out of the judicial process and let the government go about cleaning up this pollution in the best way that is known on a scientific basis.

Hon. Mr. Kerr: At the government's expense?

Mr. Singer: If this government is prepared to do it insofar as the phosphates are concerned, why cannot it do it here if it knew how to do it? And if it feels that its case is so sure and so certain and it lies only against Dow, it should have the courage of its convictions and bring in a bill that says that.

This Legislature can do it; it is within its constitutional power. Bring in a bill that says it. Do not tie the thing up for an interminable period in court; be honest with the people of Ontario and do something more than make idle speeches.

I say finally, Mr. Speaker, that the government's record since the night of the long ballot has been deplorable. Not only do they not know how to operate voting machines, not only does the new Minister of Trade and Development not know anything about housing programmes, not only is the new Attorney General not the enforcer that he would like to think of himself or the enforcer that he talks about—he is the shoot-from-the-mouth Attorney General who gets involved in these things because they are going to make a grandstand play. There is no substance in his approaches.

Not only that Mr. Speaker, The Minister of Energy and Resources Management embarks upon a lawsuit—or, partially on his advice a lawsuit is undertaken—for which there appears to be no reasonable basis at all, and it presents no help or assistance to anybody in the Province of Ontario. There is no programme for the fishermen; there is no programme for the tourist operators; there is no programme for the bait sellers—all of these things are sort of nibbled at on the way by, and "it is tough, tough, tough for you fellows; the thing is out of control." And—he has not even said this—"maybe if we collect $25 million in 10 years' time we are going to give you a few dribbles out of that, if you are still around and if you are still starving to death."

Hon. Mr. Kerr: They are getting it now.

Mr. Singer: Not only that, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) has embarked upon the same programme. He has been caught two or three times in the last year. He sees a problem and his solution is, "Come and write a bill for me." It does not matter whether it is within our constitutional power or not, there are two or three bills—the auctioneers bill, for one, comes to mind; there was another one about milk marketing. He has this Bill 10 drafted and on a serious constitutional question he does not even bother to get opinion of the law officers of the Crown in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, the advent of this new government has been filled with disaster, and hopefully they will remove this disaster from the people of the Province of Ontario by calling an election at the earliest possible opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, as is customary, I would like to congratulate you, sir, and your second-in-command, upon your re-election to this high post in this Legislature.

I also would wish well those ministers who have been the subject of musical chairs in recent days. They have in many cases moved a notch up the ladder, and in some cases stayed where they were. I suppose for the few brief weeks or months that they remain in those positions, we hope they will administer their ministerial responsibilities in the best interests of the people of Ontario.

Only a few weeks ago, the subject of public auto insurance exploded dramatically in Ontario and I want to deal with that for some time today. The automobile insurance agents' association launched an all-out campaign to defeat the New Democratic Party in the coming election and thereby prevent a public automobile insurance plan in this province.

Twenty-five years ago, the Douglas government of Saskatchewan carried out its election pledge and introduced a public insurance plan there. So successful has it been that when Liberal Ross Thatcher was elected, he did not dare scuttle it, even though he had fought it tooth and nail in a bitter battle against it up to that time. Thatcher knew that if he threw the plan out, the people would throw him out. He has been chipping away at it, but the plan remains to the great benefit of the people of that province.

Last year, the New Democrats were elected in Manitoba. They too introduced a public plan for car insurance. The legislation was fought right down the line by the opposition in the House and they were joined in the battle by the insurance industry. The plan goes into effect this coming November. Car owners in Manitoba will save at least 15 per cent on premiums now paid to the private insurance industry and the government fully expects that those savings will be even greater as the plan develops.

When the New Democratic Party is elected in Ontario it will also introduce a public car insurance plan. All the surveys taken so far indicate that the people want such a plan and the New Democrats can win the next election.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Oh, come on now!

Mr. Young: That is why the insurance industry is embarking upon its strident campaign to defeat us.

Mr. Trotter: Really! Really! This is Mary Poppins hour.

Mr. Young: If they did not think we were close to power, they would not bother. The Insurance Agents' Association has placed a $50 per capita levy on its members, and it is going out to raise more.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): How many will put up the 50 bucks, that is what I would like to know?

Mr. Young: They do not do that in the face of something they do not consider a real possibility.

According to The Financial Post of April 3, 1971, they expect to raise $135,000 from this source alone. The industry is supplementing this from our premium payments to run a widespread advertising campaign in the media. A kit has been distributed to all the agents with full instructions in the fine art of political action. In the kit are the names and addresses of all Tory and Liberal riding presidents—they are in the instructions: "Go and see them and join them." Arguments against public insurance are there; bumper stickers to blossom when the election is called. All this and more to assist the agents in their desperate battle against progress.

This is part of the democratic process. Anyone or any group with a point of view in a democracy is free to express it and to mobilize it into votes. So we have no objection to the campaign of the insurance industry; as a matter of fact, we welcome it. It is highlighting one of those planks in our platform and it is focusing public opinion on it.

The slogan used by the industry is "freedom of choice" and that is exactly what we want. We are giving the people of Ontario freedom of choice between the present system of private car insurance, with all its failures and frustrations, and a system of public insurance similar to that which has proved so successful for so long in Saskatchewan. The campaign of the insurance companies and their agents will give the people of this province an opportunity to assess the issue, to hear both sides, and to vote on it when the time comes.

There is no doubt that there is wide-spread dissatisfaction with the present system of car insurance in Ontario. People are fed up with the way rates have been soaring in recent years and a new rate increase is just now being implemented. People are impatient with delays in settlement, often with attendant legal costs, and they are angry at the way premiums are jacked up following traffic accidents or minor violations of the law. They are asking if there is not a better way to achieve protection against the hazards of running a motor car.

Increasing rates, of course, hit every car owner. Many never have an accident, and go many years free of one but, accident or no accident, every owner has to meet rising rates. These rates depend on many factors and among them are these:

1. The frequency of accidents.
2. The damage done to people and property in accident situations.
3. The cost of repairs and spare parts.
4. The cost of treating accident victims.
5. The post-accident speed in rescue and the salvage of damaged vehicles.
6. The speed and efficiency in the settlement of claims.

All these factors and more have played some part in the upward trend of premiums lately. DBS figures show that in Canada, from 1961 to October, 1970, the auto insurance index has risen from a base of 100 to 172.6. This, according to Mr. E. D. MacKay of the Canadian Underwriters' Association, will go up another 12 per cent in Ontario this year. The increase has exceeded, during the years mentioned, the increase in every other component in the consumers' price index except theatre admissions. It is interesting to note here that during the past four years the public plan in Saskatchewan, even under a Liberal government, has not raised rates at all, but has added substantially to its reserve fund.

The insurance industry here is currently running a series of TV ads to try to explain the rising premiums. They show a series of low-speed collisions and point out that rates must rise because cars are so easily damaged and because labour is so expensive. This is diverting attention from the real issues and offering an excuse when an explanation is really needed.

Take a look at the car insurance industry in Ontario and at some of the factors which drive up the costs. First of all, the need to establish fault in an accident. Often this is difficult if not impossible. No one, unless he is intent on suicide, deliberately causes an accident. It is generally a split-second misjudgment or a mechanical failure and the damage is done.

If two insurance companies are involved, they want to know which driver is to blame so that they can decide who is to pay. If the situation is not clear, it may mean court action and serious delay in settlement, with the victim suffering severe financial hardship in the meantime. It can also mean legal bills eating up resources.

A survey undertaken for the Toronto Daily Star by Martin Goldfarb Consultants—in whom this government, I understand, has a great deal of confidence—published on January 23, 1971, shows that 37 per cent of those involved in automobile accidents waited three months or longer for settlement, and 25 per cent waited more than six months. The much-quoted Linden report pointed out that just where there is the greatest need for swift reparation, there is the greatest tendency for delay. In fatal cases, 22.7 per cent of payments were not made within a year and 12 per cent were not settled before a 2-to-2½-year time lag had taken place.

These cases, of course, jam our courts until 40 per cent of all the cases in our county courts and one-third of the cases in our Supreme Court are dealing with insurance claims. This means we need more judges, and that these as well as other cases are delayed. The whole process of justice is slowed down.

Then, too, benefits are uncertain. The Linden report pointed out that 57 per cent of the people injured in automobile accidents get nothing from insurance, while only 37 per cent of the economic loss is paid. These figures may have changed a bit since the report was published, but not substantially.

Insurance coverage under private plans is only partial, and at best it often takes a long tough trip through the courts to get even that. There is just too much frustration, financial hardship and delay involved.

A very large factor in driving up costs of private insurance is, of course, duplication of services. We have 200 companies in Ontario all competing for business. These have staffs of agents, all needing commissions. They have offices to maintain, separate bookkeeping systems and computers. Each carries on extensive advertising, and each must have profits to stay in business. All this duplication of services must be paid for in premiums, and the cost must be reflected in the rates that are charged.

Then, premium dollars go into reserve funds set aside to meet future claims. These funds earn interest. But the interest on reserves is never calculated as income in the setting of rates.

What this reserve interest amounts to in Ontario alone is not easy to determine. But conservative estimates are that it is at least 5.5 per cent of premiums. We do know that the investment income of the Saskatchewan plan, the public plan, averaged 5.8 per cent since its inception, and that rose to 8.6 per cent in 1970 with the higher general interest rates. This, of course, has been ploughed back into the public plans to lower the premiums.

These, then, are some of the drawbacks of private car insurance—the need to establish fault, legal and court costs, delays, the built-in selling expenses, and the failure to plough back interest on premium reserves to cut rates. Add to this the very high rates for accident-free young people and the larger amounts added to premiums after accidents. All these features mean high premium costs which keep escalating year by year.

In Ontario, during the period from 1965 to 1969, car insurance premiums collected by all companies amounted to $1,368,969,100. Of this amount, $878,305,403 was paid out in claims. That is 64.1 per cent. This means that 35.9 per cent of all premium dollars went to pay expenses, profits and costs of the insurance companies.

One of the reasons the New Democratic Party advocates public car insurance is to meet some of these difficulties. The Saskatchewan experience has demonstrated for 25 years that it can do just that and the reasons are simple.

First of all, public insurance is sold with the licence. This cuts out duplication of services. There is one operation for licence and insurance—no commissions, no profit, no advertising, and no licensed car on the road without insurance. In Ontario, this would mean an end to the expensive and unsatisfactory motor vehicle accident claims fund.

Second, since one authority pays all claims there is no need to establish fault. The police may be interested in the cause of the accident as they are today, but there is no need to go to court to establish blame. This will not only cut costs but it will make for prompt settlement. It will also have the added advantage of getting insurance claims out of the courts with the result that they can operate more effectively.

Third, interest earned on reserve funds will be returned to the insurance fund to be used in lowering premiums. With the higher interest rates of recent years this can be a significant factor in cutting insurance costs.

Fourth, service centres will be established where necessary to process claims. These will be manned by trained adjusters and estimators. Private garages will be used for repair but enough public repair shops will be set up to make sure costs are not out of line. A salvage department will be responsible for recovery and sale of good parts from vehicles damaged beyond repair.

It is interesting to note that the Saskatchewan salvage division has made a profit of close to $1 million, which has been applied to reduce rates.

Through these methods the one province with experience in public insurance—that is, Saskatchewan—has drastically lowered insurance premiums and provided top quality service.

When it comes to comparing costs of specific policies in similar locations, it is extremely difficult. The private insurance industry is careful not to offer a policy anywhere which exactly corresponds with the basic Saskatchewan one. But the significant fact is that while the private plans must have two-thirds of the premium dollars to meet their costs, the public plan in Saskatchewan has been operating for 25 years with less than half that amount going to expenses.

Private insurance companies say that whenever more than two-thirds of their premium dollars go to meet claims then their rates must go up. That is what is happening now. Over the past four years private insurance companies in Ontario spent 64 per cent of their premium dollars for claims and 36 per cent for profit, commissions and administration.

Contrast this with the Saskatchewan experience where under the public plan the cost of administration has been 15.8 per cent.

A couple of years ago the Thatcher government, which would like to get rid of the plan but does not dare, levied an unjustified management fee against it. This brought the present percentage of expenses up to 16.39 per cent. But that still leaves 83.61 per cent going to meet claims, this in contrast to 64.1 per cent in Ontario—about a 20 per cent difference.

The figure for 1970 is 67 per cent for all companies doing business in Canada, but in 1969 Ontario companies started including indirect adjustment expenses—that is office overhead—as well as direct expenses in their figures for claims paid. In 1969, these indirect expenses amounted to 3.7 per cent of premiums collected. Direct expenses, such as claims adjusting and legal fees, have always been included in Ontario's claim figures but never in Saskatchewan's. This makes the saving on a public plan still greater.

No matter how the apologists of private insurance try to juggle the figures, no matter how they try to pick specific costs of policies in specific towns, the fact is unanswerable. The policy holder is assessed at least 36 per cent of his premium dollar to cover private insurance overhead and he pays only 16 per cent for the public plan. Even in Manitoba where private agents are going to participate in selling the public insurance if they wish, and where they will be allowed reasonable commissions and assisted financially to make necessary adjustments, the difference will still be 15 per cent between the present plans and the upcoming public one. That is a real saving for the motorists of that province.

Let it be clear, the public plan in Saskatchewan, as it will in Manitoba, pays full municipal grants in lieu of taxes, pays federal taxes on all purchases, the two per cent provincial premium tax, and the fire prevention tax.

In addition, it sets aside and uses one per cent for driver education. It does not pay federal income tax because it makes no profit to pay it on. A further advantage of a public plan is that resources now being invested by private firms for their own profit can be used by government for social purposes just as the Canada Pension funds are now used. Today, 58 per cent of the car insurance sold in Ontario is controlled outside Canada. Public insurance would bring this control back to Ontario and reserve funds could go into areas like housing where there is a great social need.

The Globe and Mail, on April 5, 1971, said this editorially:

A compulsory public automobile insurance plan partially unveiled last week by Premier

Edward Schreyer of Manitoba—if it measures up to the preview—is going to be difficult for the critics to criticize. The compulsory part of this plan will provide $50,000 third-party liability insurance, $200 deductible all-peril, no-fault insurance; death benefits to a maximum of $10,000, no fault; benefits up to $6,000 for dismemberment, disfigurement or impairment, no fault; medical benefits to a maximum of $2,000, no fault; and finally—which Mr. Schreyer claimed to be far in excess of benefits offered by the private industry—a lifetime disability payment of up to $50 a week.

The government will also offer optional protections to motorists; reduction of the deductible all-peril amount to $100 or to $50, and increase of the third-party liability to $100,000 or $200,000. Private companies will be able to compete with the government in offering these and other additional benefits.

The government claims that the public plan will offer a 15 per cent across-the-board saving for motorists on all forms of coverage in the first year, rising to a possible 20 to 30 per cent saving in subsequent years. Licence fees for drivers will increase sharply for those with bad records; a sensible measure.

It sounds as though Mr. Schreyer will be offering more benefits for less money; a very difficult sort of bargain to beat. Nor do the figures spell out all the benefits.

Most of these benefits, whether for damage, injury or death, are to be paid on a no-fault basis; that is, to those guilty of causing an accident as well as to those not guilty. This means two important gains. Those who need help will get it immediately, when they need it, instead of having to wait months or years to have a court determine who should get what, if anything. And the benefits can be collected without the services of a lawyer; a saving to the victims of motor accidents that could far exceed the saving in premiums promised by the government.

The insurance lobby in Manitoba will have its work cut out to convince the people of Manitoba that they should reject Mr. Schreyer's plan.

So says The Globe and Mail.

But public insurance is only part of the New Democratic plan to reduce car insurance costs. To do a comprehensive job in this field other things must be done. We must reduce the frequency of accidents, cut down the damage during accidents, and institute proper salvage operations following the accidents.

First then, let us take a look at the problem of reducing the frequency of accidents. Several factors need attention here. Better highways stand high on the list. It is a well-established fact that modern highways, properly built, generate less accidents per mile travelled than do older roads. Much still needs to be done to bring our highway system up to date, but to give credit where credit is due, Ontario is working to do just that. We still have a long way to go, however, and the process should be speeded up to incorporate known improvements into our highway system.

Improved driver education is long overdue. We allow drivers on the road with a minimum of knowledge and skill. Young people from 16 to 24, while representing only 19 per cent of the motoring population, are involved in 30 per cent of all accidents and 32.5 per cent of all auto deaths. It is true that Ontario is stepping up its driver instruction in the high schools, although that has recently been cut drastically on the orders of the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) to cut budgets.

Much more needs to be done. Research carried out at Queen's University recently indicates that in addition to instruction before the licence is granted, the young person should be required to take more intensive training after a year or so of driving experience. That is the time when over-confidence and carelessness begin to appear and the time when the young person will profit more from training.

Better car design could cut the accident rate considerably. Protruding sharp-edged hubcaps, sharp snouts and points and knife edges of various kinds add to the pedestrian and bicycle hazard. Dr. William Haddon, Jr., president of the Insurance Institute for Highway Safety in Washington, in recent testimony before a congressional subcommittee said this:

Weaponry design throughout the ages has been based on the principle that impact surfaces that are hard, pointed, rigid, jagged or otherwise hurtful on contact with people will aggravate human injury and suffering. In view of this it can hardly be maintained that using the same lethal shapes for the surface of vehicles that can and regularly do impact pedestrians, bicyclists and other defenceless road users, may be excused as an act of ignorance. Eliminating such expensive and needless costume jewellery and substituting design and executive decisions that reflect concern for people will reduce needless human and social as well as property damage.

There are, of course, many structural improvements in cars which can cut insurance rates. Steering columns which lock when the ignition is off to prevent theft, anti-skidding disc brakes, 360-degree rearview mirrors, rear-window defrosters, different coloured running and stop lights, standard positioning of controls on the dash—these and other items come to mind as features which can cut down the likelihood of accidents.

Apart from design, more care is needed to make sure the car comes to the customer in good condition. We all know the history of recalls in recent years because of defective cars. From the time the recall legislation was passed in Washington in 1966 until July 1, 1970, over 14 million vehicles were recalled in the United States alone. We hope that most of those recalls applied to Canada as well, but since we have not had similar legislation we have no way of knowing how many defective cars Canadians are driving.

Just recently all Pintos manufactured since they were first put on the market were recalled because of fires occurring in the carburetor area. On April 12, 1971, our newspapers announced that all Vegas made before the recent strike by General Motors were recalled. Twenty-three thousand, three hundred Vegas were recalled to correct five possible defects, including one which could cause the choke to jam and one which could lead to fuel spillage.

Consumers' Union reported that their tests of 1969 cars showed an average defect of 26 per car—some of them serious. Certainly more care is needed and more testing—particularly of new models and new techniques—to cut defects and thus prevent accidents. And accidents are reflected in insurance premiums.

Then there is speed. Too often the industry, in its advertising, emphasizes speed—completely ignoring the fact that speed does kill. Fatalities and the severity of damage increase markedly with increasing speed. From 85 to 95 miles an hour the G forces increase by 25 per cent. The question is now being widely discussed as to whether we really need to travel at speeds built into modern cars. Speed standards, when set—and they will be eventually—will cut the likelihood of accidents as well as the damage done if and when accidents do occur. The speed standards could eventually be lowered somewhat, but as a start we might do this:

1. Decree that no car should be able to attain speeds of more than 90 miles an hour.

2. Speedometers should not show speeds over 85 miles an hour.

3. When a vehicle goes over 80 miles an hour, the horn should begin to blow and the flasher lights should automatically turn on. This would serve as a warning to both the driver, who would slow down to stop the confusion; and to other road users, who would thus be warned of impending danger.

Police cars used for pursuit could be exempt from the rule and specially marked.

Another device which can reduce frequency of accidents and so lower insurance rates is regular inspection of all motor vehicles. This should be done every six months and appropriate windshield stickers supplied. The cost can be met through a small increase in the licence fees and this will far more than pay for itself in damage saved.

Let me read a few items from papers in areas where safety lanes were operated last year in Ontario. In St. Catharines, 503 vehicles went through the lane and 69 were ordered off the road. Of the remaining 434, only 19 received safety stickers the first time around; 25 failed on the re-test.

In Chatham, only 94 vehicles of 506 inspected were passed as road safe. In Sault Ste Marie, of 477 checked, only 18 got clearance on the first try, and in Stratford only five of 166 tested were given a safety sticker while 18 had their licence plates removed. In Niagara Falls, 736 vehicles were examined and 76 were taken off the road as unsafe. Only 31 got stickers the first time, and another 227 were given stickers after being repaired.

The State of Texas claims that 15 per cent of its accidents were due to unsafe vehicles before regular inspections got started there. That figure was reduced to five per cent—one-third—after the programme got under way.

In New Jersey, the first year of inspection brought a traffic fatality drop of 32 per cent, and since then the trend has been steadily downward. In 1966, the death rate for New Jersey was 3.5 per million vehicle-miles. In Ontario, it was 7.6. In 1969, the latest year for which we have figures, it had dropped to 5.9.

Some years ago New Jersey did an exhaustive study on the subject of regular inspections. They found that for the year 1961, states having state-owned and-operated testing stations had the lowest mileage death rate—2.8 per million miles of travel. They found too that states not requiring regular vehicle inspection had the highest mileage death rate—6.7 or more than double.

Two Harvard professors, Dr. Robert Buxbaum and Dr. Theodore Colton, did a thorough study in this field in 1966. They found that inspection exerts a preventive effect upon mechanical failure. They, too, say that states with regular inspection have considerably lower death rates, and they back it up with figures. They also prove that the death rate is even lower in states with two inspections a year.

Ontario is doing some inspection work, but it is pretty hit and miss. Owners of old cars steer clear of voluntary inspection lanes and many people driving unsafe cars are completely unaware of it until disaster strikes. With regular inspections, people will keep their vehicles in better repair and wrecks will be banned from the road. This helps to keep insurance rates down.

Then there is alcohol—alcohol in the driver that is. H. David Archibald of the Alcohol and Drug Addiction Foundation tells us that drinking drivers cause up to 40 per cent of fatalities and 30 per cent or more of the collisions caused were of the serious multiple fatality kind.

John Volpe, U.S. Secretary of Transportation, said on January 12 of this year that alcohol is involved in 50 to 60 per cent of highway fatalities, and that problem drinkers, not social drinkers, cause at least two-thirds of these deaths.

These problem drinkers, who constitute about seven per cent of the drivers on the road, cause 50 per cent of the deaths in vehicle accidents.

These people can be identified and they can be treated and controlled. These drivers destroyed six times as much property last year as was lost in all robberies, arsons and burglaries put together.

The Stanford Research Institute has said in a study paper that if only 20 per cent of the drivers on the road lost their licences, the accident rate would go down by 80 per cent.

That is a pretty big order, and I do not suppose in a democracy we would ever achieve the 20 per cent even if we wanted to. But there are measures we could take. It is likely the 0.08 standard for blood alcohol is too high, especially when convictions seldom take place unless the blood count is at least 0.1.

All research in this field points to the fact that the driver becomes progressively more and more dangerous with each blood level point above 0.04. To quote Mr. Volpe again:

In Sweden, only 10 per cent rather than 50 per cent of all fatally injured drivers are impaired by alcohol at the time of their accidents. In Britain, fatalities and injuries are down 35 per cent in the hours between 10 p.m. and 4 a.m. when most alcohol-related crashes occur.

How did they do it? The answer is simplicity itself. If you are caught drunk while behind the wheel—and breathalyser tests are taken to prove it—there is mandatory loss, suspension, or restriction of your licence. In Sweden and England, there is no licence to kill and the law is backed up by severe social penalties. The drunken driver is bad news in his community. Period. People ignore him. He is ostracized. He is not glorified by nightclub comedians. He is known for what he is—a potential killer.

In addition to reducing the frequency of accidents in ways I have just outlined, insurance rates can be dropped still more drastically by cutting down the extent of the damage done in accident situations.

This means, first of all, safer cars. It is an interesting fact of life that when we ship goods and we find them damaged, we do not shrug and keep sending more goods in the same old package. We redesign the package so it will withstand the forces it encounters in the mail or in the freight car. We want the contents to arrive in good condition.

Until a few years ago we did not even start to apply this commonsense philosophy to motor vehicles and the builders of the motor car are not yet willing to accept it. They are moving slowly, and reluctantly, toward it as they are forced to do so by government.

Engineers tell us that we can build cars that can crash head-on at 50 miles an hour, roll over at 80 miles an hour, and sustain side impacts at 40 miles an hour, without serious damage to their occupants. In fact, engineers at the Connaught Aeronautical Laboratory now say that cars can be made which can crash at 60 miles per hour without serious damage to those inside. The package can be built to protect the human contents. Yet no car for general use is being built to anything like this degree of safety. The United States has set standards to come into effect in 1973 for passive restraint systems to protect occupants at up to 30 miles per hour.

It has just now been announced that the motor car industry has been successful in its lobby to postpone those safe restraints being built into motor cars until the 1976 models—a sad delay. They have also set standards for withstanding side impacts, and those are being fought. Today side impact accidents make up 14 per cent of the total, and the fatality rate for these is 21 per cent. Cars built really to protect the passengers will cut down death and injury. This will cut medical and dental bills; it will save untold man-hours lost from work. All this, too, will save on insurance premiums.

Will such cars cost more? Not significantly. But if they do, how do you balance life and suffering against dollars? And if there is added cost, this can be more than made up by skipping yearly models to pay for them. New models cost $700 per car per year to produce. New models could be brought out every four or five years, or when genuine improvements demand it. The tremendous savings in this move alone—and they would be tremendous—would not only pay for better design and proper safety features, but could also be applied to lower prices to the consumer.

Improvement in the highway system will also cut down on severity of accidents. Rapid replacement of present guard wires with the new ones now beginning to appear on our roads, breakaway signposts and lamp standards, proper design and placing of guard rails, elimination of deep ditches, these and other measures will cut down highway casualties and help to reduce insurance rates.

Modern bumpers, or lack of them, are the scourge of the insurance-paying motorist. The car manufacturers are engaged here in a modern version of highway robbery which puts the old-time highwayman to absolute and utter shame. Many of today's cars do not have bumpers at all; and most of them do not have functional ones, except to carve up whatever they touch to the greater glory and profit of the manufacturers. Bumpers themselves are extremely sensitive, many of them suffering damage if they hit anything at two miles an hour or up—or even less. Bumper repair alone accounts for 15 per cent of all damage claims today, and in and around the bumpers is a startling array of expensive chrome, lights, filigree work, protruding nose cones and upper lip snouts, all of which collapse at the slightest provocation and all of which the bumper is designed to damage, rather than protect.

For the past few years, I have placed on record here the results of tests conducted by running sample motor cars into fixed barriers or into each other at speeds at which a man walks or runs. The 1971 results are in and they are startling. The 1971 cars suffer 50 per cent more damage than the 1970 models. Of the small cars tested at five miles an hour, the AMC Gremlin came out best. It cost $121.30 to repair. The Chevy Vega sustained the most damage at $181.30. That is at five miles an hour. These are United States figures.

Canadian repair figures for the 1970 tests as reported in The Financial Post of April 3, 1971, came out 30 per cent higher than in the United States. Allowing for the higher value of the Canadian dollar since that time, the repair costs in Canada will run about 25 per cent higher than the United States figures that I am using here.

In the intermediate class of those tested the Plymouth Satellite showed up the best with only $98 damage. That is a front-end bump at five miles an hour—I am using round figures now—while the Buick Skylark topped the list at $427. Four sedans were tested—the Impala, the Fury, the Galaxy and the Ambassador. Of these, the Plymouth Fury cost least to repair—$202—and the AMC Ambassador the most at $415. I repeat, this is the damage done in a five-mile-an-hour crash into a fixed barrier. That is the speed at which you hit the floor if you drop 10 inches.

Backing into a barrier at five miles an hour was still more expensive for most cars, but not for all. This is significant in view of the fact that the motor industry is now claiming that the five-mile-an-hour standard for rear bumpers is too high and that it should be set at 2.5 miles an hour.

You can back a Volkswagen into a wall at five miles an hour for only $59, but a Plymouth Satellite will cost you $256 as against only $98 head-on. If you have a 1971 Impala, do not try it. Backing at five miles an hour will cost you $447 in the United States and $560 in Canada.

Just a year ago, on April 2, 1970, I attended the hearings in Washington on bumper standards. Both General Motors and Ford maintained in their testimony that governments should not interfere with private enterprise by setting bumper standards. These words appear in the Ford brief:

We do not believe that federal standards are necessary or appropriate to the development of bumper systems aimed at the reduction of collision costs. . . Clearly, automobile manufacturers and insurers have every motivation to improve the satisfaction of their respective customers. . . I believe the private sector should itself work out the present situation without the need for governmental action. . . Plans and programmes under way at Ford will, we believe, result in significant improvements in bumper performance. We intend to implement these programmes on an expeditious but orderly basis. It should be recognized, however, that major vehicle changes may be involved and hence, adequate lead time will be required.

That is from the Ford brief.

Granted that lead time may be required; but how much? The industry has known for a decade that its bumpers were progressively creating more and more damage with each successive model. Lead time has been used up to now to make bumpers more expensive for the motorist and more profitable for the manufacturer. Now the consumer is bristling and how long will it take the automobile industry to reverse that trend? How much lead time will it need? It is several years now since the public outcry against bumper damage and fragile car construction began. Already 30 states have introduced bumper standard legislation—the figure now, I think, is 33—which is being bitterly fought by the car manufacturers.

At the time of the Washington hearings last April, at the very time the industry warned against government bumper standards, it was preparing to bring out its most lethal bumpers in the history of the industry.

The 1970 Ford Galaxie cost $185 to repair after the five-mile-an-hour crash. The 1971 Galaxie cost $341—almost twice as much. The Impala five-mile-an-hour crash cost $196 in 1970 and in 1971, $170 more. The average cost of crashing the sedans at five miles an hour in 1970 was $216. In 1971 this had risen to $332 or $116 more.

The average rear-end damage at that speed will $111 more in 1971 cars than in 1970 cars. The average damage in a two-car crash when the front of one car rammed the side of another at 10 miles an hour—the running speed of a man—was $499.36 in 1970 and $638 in 1971, or $138 more. To compensate a bit, the front-to-rear crash tests at 10 miles an hour were $40 cheaper this year than last.

William Haddon Jr. says this:

The 1971 automobile designs guarantee huge sales in crash replacement parts that are available only from those who possess the specially designed equipment which fabricated the costly, delicate, original equipment parts in the first place.

And the sad part of this is that even if we had properly constructed bumpers and surrounding structures next year—which we are not going to have—it will take at least 10 years for the recent crop of damage-prone cars to disappear—and during that time they will continue to levy their toll for the manufacturers at the expense of a long-suffering public.

The result of all this for the motorist is, of course, disastrous. The average cost of insurance claims has almost doubled since 1963. Property damage has more than doubled. And to add insult to injury, the car manufacturers have been jacking up the price of spare parts—the very parts their bumpers are designed to damage. As a matter of fact, prices on replacement parts are increasing 3½ times as fast as prices on new cars.

Add to all this the fact that the vast bulk of damage claims are for damage which would not occur if bumpers and the bumper areas were properly designed. Forty-two per cent of all property damage claims are for less than $100, 84 per cent are for less than $400, and 91 per cent of all dollar claims are for less than $1,000. Seventy per cent of all dollar payouts by insurance firms go for property damage, with only 30 per cent for compensation to people—a complete reversal of the situation a decade ago.

The incredible thing is that people of North America have allowed themselves to be robbed in this bare-faced way for so long. But now, at long last, the public is demanding government action to end the tribute being levied by the industry through the insurance pipeline.

Roy Lovell of the Nationwide Mutual Insurance Co. of Columbus, Ohio, says:

An energy-absorbing bumper would reduce damage in all but the most severe accidents. This being so, it seems well within the realm of reason that damage repair costs could be reduced by 25 per cent overall.

As a matter of fact, Allstate Insurance is offering a 20 per cent discount on collision insurance coverage for cars which can sustain front- and rear-end impacts up to five miles an hour without damage—surely, a commentary on the whole motor-car manufacturing and insurance industry.

The setting of bumper standards by government, then, can be the greatest single factor, next to public insurance, in bringing down the cost of premiums. Standards must demand uniform heights, including trucks, so bumpers will meet, resilient surfaces which will not damage easily, and hydraulic construction to absorb shock.

Bumpers incorporating these features are already built. They have been tested and can take cars through collisions up to 30 miles an hour without damage. Water bumpers are being used successfully by the Toronto Transit Commission. Others are built on the same principle as the landing gear of aircraft which absorbs terrific shock, and no damage done. But so far the industry will not use them. It is too profitable to keep manufacturing the flimsies which decorate present cars and which mangle what they touch. With the 1971 rise in premiums caused almost solely by bumper damage, there should be an increased public outcry for bumper standards.

What is happening is simple. Each year the car manufacturers are building higher-cost damage right into their cars and the insurance firms are collecting that increase and handing it on to them.

Canada-wide standards should be set. But since there is no action in Ottawa, Ontario, where almost all Canadian cars are built, should act and act immediately to cut this intolerable tribute being levied by the industry. It should set bumper standards and set them now.

The final technique which I want to discuss for getting insurance rates down might be termed "post-accident action." Part of it is getting injured people to hospital with all possible dispatch, and part is salvage by the public insurance plan of parts from damaged cars which cannot be made roadworthy. The Saskatchewan salvage department, as I pointed out, since its inception, has ploughed back almost $1 million to reduce premiums. The Swedish insurance companies have developed an assembly-line repair system in co-operation with the tool and equipment manufacturers of the country. They are saving large amounts on repair bills.

But more important is using the records of cars involved in accidents and setting rates according to these records. The Swedes have pointed the way here. They assess the cost of repairs on each make as well as the frequency of claims on each make and model. Insurance rates are based on this experience. Manufacturers then begin to examine their cars with a view to cutting insurance claims, since getting into lower premium classes would mean a real sales advantage. As a result of this move, General Motors cut parts prices by 25 per cent in Sweden, Renault by 20 per cent and Peugeot by 10 per cent. Manufacturers began to make design changes as well to lower repair costs.

The result is that there has been an annual reduction of damage repair costs for the Swedish insurance companies of 15 per cent. Contrast this with the dramatic increase here in repair costs, which I outlined earlier. Part of this increase is due to the fact that replacement parts have been soaring in price. During the period from 1965 to 1969, Ford parts went up by 35 per cent, GM by 20 per cent and Chrysler by 23 per cent. And they have been going up since that time.

Our insurance companies have records similar to the Swedish ones. These records can be used to force rates down here. But it is not being done. A public insurance plan in a large and powerful province like Ontario could follow Sweden's techniques and could lower repair costs—and so insurance premiums.

These are some of the methods then, through which lower rates can be achieved for our car insurance. The forthcoming election will tell whether the people of Ontario are sufficiently aware of the possibilities or whether they must suffer through another period of high cost and frustration. Certainly the automobile manufacturers and insurance combination are fighting desperately to hold their power to levy the high tribute they are collecting today. No establishment gives up without a struggle and this one certainly will not.

It is extremely interesting to note that the insurance fight against the New Democrats is based on the old battle cry, "socialism versus free enterprise."

Mr. Trotter: That is a dead issue.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): That is deader than a dodo bird.

Mr. Young: This cry—or one similar to it—has been used in every single struggle of the people to achieve freer institutions or to advance the community—

Mr. Pilkey: It is deader than a dodo bird.

Mr. Young:—good against vested interest.

Mr. Pilkey: They tried that in Manitoba. What happened in Manitoba? Tell us what happened in Manitoba?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): A new year; a new Throne Speech.

Mr. Young: Well, socialism versus free enterprise was the cry of the private schools against universal education.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Young: It was used by the toll-gate operators against public highways. It is still being used in some places in the United States where citizens want to establish a public water supply to replace the private water companies.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Young: During the past few years we have heard it repeated against the public Medicare plan and agricultural marketing boards. It is a curious fact that almost every single cabinet minister of this government is administering an undertaking which a few years ago was looked upon as socialism and, in fact, is socialism—

Mr. Pilkey: How does the government like that? Would it agree with that?

Mr. Young:—and opposed, steadily opposed during those years by the free-enterprise establishment.

Mr. Yakabuski: Free enterprise developed it.

Mr. Pilkey: Is that not nice?

Mr. Young: I have mentioned education which used to be the prerogative of the private schools. That fight is finished. The highways used to be maintained by private landowners through whose territory they ran, and they did it by—

Mr. Yakabuski: How long ago was that?

Mr. Young:—levying tolls on the travelling public at toll gates stationed on their land.

Mr. Yakabuski: The opposition is living in the past.

Mr. Young: This government right now is in the process of completing the transfer of Medicare from the private to the public sector, of socializing it—

Mr. Pilkey: Oh, socialism!

Mr. Young:—while at the same time they profess horror at the thought of doing the same thing with car insurance.

Mr. Pilkey: How do they rationalize that?

Mr. Young: In Ontario, marketing boards are taking the place of the private trader. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) is proud of this. Legal aid has brought justice within the reach of all the people, and the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) is proud of this.

Mr. Yakabuski: We just use the goodies, not the bad parts of socialism.

Mr. Young: Ontario Hydro, OWRC, the Workmen's Compensation Board—

Mr. Yakabuski: Just the goodies, never the bad parts.

Mr. Young:—the Ontario Northland Railway, most municipal services—all these are socialism.

An hon. member: Sure, the goodies! Right, right!

Mr. Pilkey: Never the bad parts.

Mr. Young: And they were fought against with the same fervour that the insurance industry is now fighting against public car insurance.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): They will take over the member's hardware store if he does not watch out.

Mr. Pilkey: They are not going to win this one either.

Mr. Young: But they were gradually accepted as an integral part of our society. In fact—

Mr. Yakabuski: Dreamer boy!

Mr. Pilkey: The member for Renfrew South will come around.

Mr. Young: In fact, present Tory ministers in this government have constantly boasted how these socialist enterprises, under their administration, are effectively serving the people of Ontario; and well they might.

Mr. Peacock: Except for Medicare; except for workmen's compensation.

Mr. Young: These same ministers now shake in their shoes, terrified by the word socialism as it is now applied to public automobile insurance; the back-benchers in the same way.

Mr. Yakabuski: That Waffle socialism is what the member's leader, the member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), is trying to avoid, but he is really part of it. He is trying to change his image.

Mr. Young: You will recall that when the Hon. J. J. Greene, federal Minister of Energy, was asked if the proposed takeover of Home Oil was not socialism, he shrugged and replied: "Socialism? That is just a word." He was no longer afraid of it.

Mr. Trotter: Fine man, good man. That is right; Liberal policy.

Mr. Young: The battle is joined. Over the next few weeks car insurance will be very much in the public mind.

Mr. Pilkey: Yes, they will come around.

Mr. Young: I believe the people of Ontario want the public insurance plan.

Mr. Pilkey: Sure they do.

Mr. Young: The cries of socialism will not scare them any more than they did the people of Manitoba.

An hon. member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young: When the smoke has cleared and the people's verdict is in, car insurance will take its place in the public domain along with the other measures that I have mentioned.

Mr. Pilkey: What happened to the Tories by the way?

Mr. Young: The skies will not fall, and the argument will still continue in other fields where new lines will be drawn between socialism and free enterprise, between the public and the private sector of our economy.

Mr. Trotter: What about the Waffle group?

Mr. Pilkey: What about those elections in Manitoba? What happened there anyway? Who won there?

Mr. Young: Meantime, I direct the attention of the House to the steps I have outlined—

Mr. Pilkey: Where did the Tories finish in Manitoba? Where are they now anyway? Where is Mr. Weir now?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): What happened in British Columbia?

Mr. Yakabuski: The member has not been around long enough.

Mr. Makarchuk: What happened in Middlesex South?

Mr. Pilkey: Where is Mr. Weir, director of a funeral parlour?

Mr. Yakabuski: That is the school the member went to—Hoffa tactics; that is his school—union brutality.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, meantime I direct the attention of the House to the steps I have outlined which can drastically cut the cost of car insurance in this province as well as bring other distinctive values which I have outlined:

1. The public car insurance plan.
2. Positive steps to reduce the frequency of accidents through better highways, improved driver education, better car design standards, more care to prevent safety defects in new cars, regular inspection of all vehicles, regulating speed and moving in on the alcoholic driver.

Mr. Yakabuski: All-Canadian unions!

Mr. Young: To continue:

Cutting the extent of damage in accident situations through safer cars, bumper standards and removing highway hazards.

4. Post-accident action through speedier transfer of injured to the hospital, salvage depots to recover spare parts and capitalizing on accident records to set premiums according to the accident experience of various models.

I respectfully ask the support of this House for these measures.

An hon. member: Now you will hear the truth!

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, even though there are few in attendance and the debate seems rather quiet, I realize that considering what will probably happen in this province within the next few months is just the quiet before the storm that is going to break.

But I did want to congratulate you on the manner in which you have conducted this House. I understand from reading the newspapers that this is going to be your last term in this House, so probably with even less feeling of competition than usual I can say that I congratulate you, not only in what you are doing now but for your work as you have sat in that chair over the past three years. I think you are most fortunate, considering the unruly lot we are, that things have gone as well as they have.

I do want to congratulate, through you, Mr. Speaker, the various members of the so-called administration. I particularly want to congratulate the new members of the administration. I really do doubt all this talk about the new administration. I know technically it is so—

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Where are they?

Mr. Trotter:—that at some future date, when they carve their names on the marble walls out here, it will be under the Davis ministry; therefore it is a new administration. But I am very biased, Mr. Speaker; in truth and in reality it is the same old Tory gang.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Hear, hear!

Mr. Trotter: And you know, that group over there that is called a government at the present time is existing really under—it is really a shotgun wedding. If there ever was a shotgun wedding this administration is it, with the hon. Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) one of the leading lights of the Davis ministry. One can hardly conceive how the two of them get along, how they are going to form any type of ministry, particularly when you read what the hon. Attorney General said when he was seeking to be the number one man in what he had hoped would be the Lawrence administration.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Lawrence of Ontario administration.

Mr. Trotter: I would like to give you a few examples. Mr. Speaker, of some of the interesting comments that were made by the present Attorney General. I must admit it confirms a lot of what many of us on this side of the House have been thinking and have been saying. I rather suspect not only the hon. Attorney General was thinking these things, maybe over the past two or three years, but some of the back-benchers on the government side have been thinking a number of rather uncomplimentary things about the present administration and its predecessor.

If the government members are thinking this way, you can well imagine what the people of this province are thinking of the present Conservative administration. I just want to give you a few short examples. I will not belabour this point, Mr. Speaker, because a lot of us realize how bad it has been. I just would like to underline a few things.

For example, here is a report from The Windsor Star—we Torontonians do not always just quote Toronto papers but we like to improve our mind and we read other newspapers throughout the province. This is from The Windsor Star of January 30, 1971; the report is from Barrie, written by a man named Bill Prager from The Windsor Star's Queen's Park bureau. Here are a few choice quotes:

Lawrence, who got some support from a Tory back-bencher—

And I am glad he is in the House right now. —for his attack on the cabinet, also indicated that he does not think much of some of his fellow ministers. He did not name them.

Of course, we would be glad to help him on that score over here because we rather suspect who he might be thinking about.

Mr. Lawrence went on to say, "Do not hold me responsible for the makeup of that cabinet."

Well, mind you, here is a minister of that cabinet and supporting that government, and now he is out telling the country what he really thinks.

William Hodgson, a member for a nearby riding, said too many ministers are lawyers who think along one train. He complained ministers do not listen to the back-benchers who have the feel of the local people.

An hon. member: The member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) agrees with that.

Mr. Trotter: I may inject here, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson) may think that there are too many lawyers, but I noticed that when five ministers either were dropped or resigned they did not drop a single lawyer. So, in essence, the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton is stuck with the same old gang.

Hodgson also agreed with Lawrence that the Tory caucus—

Now this is interesting; this shows really into what a state government in this province has fallen.

Hodgson also agreed with Lawrence that the Tory caucus of members of the Legislature do not get enough time to consider the government's proposed legislation before it is sent to the Legislature.

Then the Attorney General went on to complain about civil servants giving weighted opinions. In other words, not only in Ottawa but in the city of Toronto, our capital city, it is the same old problem—that the politicians have allowed the civil servants to take control. A lot of us have been aware of it. I am glad to see that some of the Conservatives are now admitting this publicly.

On another occasion—I am reading from the same article, and I am sure I am not taking this out of context—the man who is now our present Attorney General and Minister of Justice went on to say: "A great wealth of talent and information in the party is not being used." Then:

He suggested people from industry, commerce, agriculture, "and even unions" should be brought into government temporarily so it could benefit from their experience and advice.

None of the three back-benchers present at the meeting—

I do not know who the other two were. I know a Mr. Hodgson with whom we are all familiar was there; I do not know who the other two were. But the article says:

None of the three area back-benchers present at the meeting disagreed with the minister. Hodgson said the caucus gets only 10 to 15 minutes to decide on government bills.

When you stop and think of it, Mr. Speaker, that is a very shocking admission to be made by a government member, that the government members get 10 to 15 minutes to decide on government bills.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): That is more than they get in Ottawa.

Mr. Trotter: When you think of the hundreds of millions of dollars that are involved in the spending of money through this Legislature—

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): How much time do the member's federal counterparts give the Parliament in Ottawa?

Mr. Trotter: —it shows how little time is being spent as it should be spent.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The member ought to ask his federal counterparts in Ottawa.

Mr. Trotter: And I might ask the shouting Tories in this House, Mr. Speaker, how are we to preserve a democratic government if the members do not have an opportunity to make a decision on the legislation that is taking place?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: I want to deal with this problem at some length Mr. Speaker, because this is what is wrong with our society today—the individual is being neglected by government and one can easily expect the individual to be neglected by government when the government will not pay attention to its own members. This is a sickness in our society today.

If it makes my friends across the floor feel any better by yelling about Ottawa, it is an excuse, I would agree; I am not arguing about that. I do not approve of a lot of things that go on in government today. In fact the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton and myself could agree on many things, and I could make the same criticisms about Ottawa as he makes about Ontario, and I am glad he speaks out.

But I want to say this: what they do in Ottawa, or in San Salvador, or Costa Rica, or anywhere else does not solve the problems of what they do in the Province of Ontario. This is what we are elected for; to decide the issues as they should be fought in this province. I am getting fed up with this red herring of these people who cannot think for themselves and keep talking about Ottawa all the time.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Trotter: I will deal with the Minister of Agriculture and Food very shortly. He cannot even shout from his own seat, Mr. Speaker. I have something to say about the Minister of Agriculture and Food and maladministration, and how the farmers are treated in this province; but again the issue is what is to be done in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Henderson: It had better be good.

Mr. Trotter: Now if we want to know something about the tax problems in this province, let us ask the Attorney General, because in this case he is right. Mind you, while he was in the old administration he did nothing about it, and if they are going to judge the new administration by the Speech from the Throne, well he obviously has not the slightest intention of doing anything about the tax situation in this province whatsoever.

For example, this is from the Toronto Daily Star of February 2, 1971:

ALLAN LAWRENCE SAYS REBATE SHOWS
ONTARIO OVERTAXES

The Minister of Mines, Allan Lawrence, speaking in Ottawa, said while meeting Ottawa Valley leadership convention delegates that the fact that the present Ontario government—

Not Ottawa, but——the fact that the present Ontario government—

Mr. Henderson: That shows the members have no opposition when he speaks that way.

Mr. Trotter: I continue: has introduced several tax rebate schemes means we should not be taxing that much in the first place.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): He took that idea from our party a year ago.

Mr. Henderson: The hon. member has to quote a Tory member.

Mr. Trotter: And again:

Collecting taxes, then paying the money out again, involves administrative costs that waste the taxpayers' money, Lawrence said at Rockland, 22 miles east of Ottawa.

Mr. Speaker, he has been reading Liberal speeches in order to get the truth. We have been trying to tell him that for some considerable time. But it is the truth that, if it is necessary to give tax rebates, this province is being overtaxed by this government. Again I say the regrettable thing is—the major regrettable thing is, Mr. Speaker—that the Attorney General is a member of both governments, the old and the new, and still nothing is done about it.

Then one other item, again from the Minister of Justice—and this is from the Woodstock Sentinel-Review of February 2, 1971, when he told Halton area delegates to the leadership convention that the civil servants are the only people who have the chance to study alternative solutions to problems. The minister, who was then Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs said:

The civil servants present huge amounts of information to the cabinet, but the members are not given time to study it fully before having to make a decision.

Well he is right there, and the unfortunate part of it is that no changes are suggested by this administration. I do not expect any will be, but before I am finished I have a few suggestions I want to make in the hope of some improvement.

There is one other promise that the Minister of Justice was making that just galls me, and it is this. "Pay nursing care," he says. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this government should introduce legislation to cover people who are in nursing homes. It is an absolute disgrace that we have permitted hundreds, nay thousands, of people who languish in nursing homes throughout this province, to see what little earnings they have dwindle away.

The hon. member for Quinte (Mr. Potter), who is now in the cabinet, agrees with this. Evidently the Attorney General agrees with this, and yet the government does nothing. The only possibility that this government will ever come to the aid of those people who are in nursing homes is that it will read the polls and see what a desperate situation it is in. Then the government will probably come out with either part-payment or, I hope, all.

I hope it happens, but this government is so afraid to rock the boat, simply because it has won elections over the years living on the husks of tradition—that is all it does, Mr. Speaker—that there is not going to be very much hope for people in nursing homes; unless, of course Mr. Goldfarb has found again, by his marvellous treatment of Madison Avenue methods, that this is what is needed.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): We have a new fellow, "Goldfinger;" we got rid of Goldfarb.

Mr. Trotter: In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you want to know if they really do use Madison Avenue techniques, again I would like to refer you to the hon. Attorney General. I do not know if I have that quote just handy—oh yes, I have it here. This is so true, if you have ever watched how this government moves, particularly in election years. Again I am quoting from the Windsor Star.

Lawrence says senior civil servants bring weighted material to cabinet meetings which, the Mines Minister said, are like a slick ad-agency promotion.

Now those words are in quotation marks, Mr. Speaker, "a slick ad-agency promotion."

He said the cabinet finally is forced to the conclusion it has no other alternative but to go along with the civil servants.

Now there we are quoting a man who has been a cabinet minister in this Tory administration, and this is the state of government in the province of Ontario today.

It does not speak very highly for a democratic society at a day and age, really, when our way of life is being challenged all over the world. Unless we succeed in this province regardless of Ottawa—sure Ottawa is very important but unless we succeed in the province, I hold very little hope for the future of free society any place in the world. That statement, Mr. Speaker—and I hope to use a few practical examples in trying to illustrate my point—is not an exaggeration.

Ontario, where it is placed geographically, where it is placed with water supply and how it is placed with financial resources, is one of the most fortunate places in all the world, and it is also at a very key centre of world activity. Literally the United States cannot exist without the fresh water; if we keep it fresh, if we have some half-decent policies that do not pollute, we possess one of the major assets of any place in the world.

Because of what we have in this province in natural assets, because of our economic importance in Canada and the influence we can obviously have on the federal policy, what we do and what we say and how we act in this province will have tremendous reverberations on whether this is going to be a prosperous country, or whether it is going to remain a Canadian nation. That will depend on what the government does in this province and what we do in this Legislature. That is why it is highly important in this day and age that we again emphasize some of our old traditions, and that is that the individual is the centre of our life. It is also important that we adapt ourselves to the major problems that we have to face in a rapidly changing society.

This government, I feel, ignores some of the main principles of democratic government, which are old but about which we have to be eternally vigilant in order to protect them. The government has ignored, in my view, some of the major problems with which we must come to grips.

The other day in the unemployment debate the government here went through the usual routine of "Let us blame Ottawa." Well Ottawa is not blameless—

Mr. Henderson: That is where the blame belongs; no denying that.

Mr. Trotter: I am not trying here to defend it, but I again emphasize the administration must be positive, and if this administration continues to do what it has been doing over the last many months, just sitting back and blaming Ottawa, it is not only betraying the interests of the people of this province, but it is betraying the interests of the people of Canada.

What can this province do to harm Canada by its own policies, and harm itself? If you listen to the government, you think here we are, we sit back, we are helpless because of what they do in Ottawa; we cannot do a thing. But we can do a number of things. There are some things through which we can harm ourselves and harm the country as a whole, and there are many things that we can do to help ourselves and help the country as a whole.

I do not intend to go into detail in this, Mr. Speaker, because this was touched on in the debate earlier and it is still before the House. Also, we emphasized, when my leader brought our amendment before this House, the number-one thing that we had in our amendment was this, "the failure of the government to come to grips with the grave problems of unemployment and inflation." We are going to hear this again and again.

Mr. Speaker, when our government in the Province of Ontario goes out and borrows money abroad in essence to build public buildings at a time when we should not have built them, it means that the federal government must put up our own money to buy U.S. Treasury bills. They must keep up the balance of payments. If we go out and borrow money by the millions it means that federally that must be covered one way or another. When the former Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) goes out and brings in American money—and brags about bringing in American money—it means once again that in an inflationary period we must buy, in a federal capacity, United States Treasury bills.

The pressure got so bad that the federal government broke an international agreement, in that we would not try to take the lid off our dollar. But this happened. Ontario was not the only one at fault. I am not saying that. But I am saying that because of its tremendous wealth and because of influence on the Canadian money market when it goes abroad, it was one of the major culprits when we had to resort to what is now called a floating dollar.

When you have a floating dollar and when the value of our dollar increases, as it did, the people that are hurt the most are the Ontario businessmen. They are the ones who lose the export markets, and so this is why the Minister of Trade and Development—or the predecessor of the present man we have now—in many cases regardless of the nationalist issue, did this province a tremendous amount of harm in the way he attempted to bring foreign capital into the Province of Ontario.

Besides the businessmen our municipalities suffer when money becomes expensive. Those municipalities that have bonds out at 5.5 per cent must refloat the issue at 9.5 per cent. Again I want to emphasize that one of the main culprits, not only for Ontario but for Canada, was the former Treasurer of this province (Mr. MacNaughton) and the former Minister of Trade and Development, because their policies led head-on into this very major problem that we have had, which causes inflation and which has affected our foreign reserves.

Here is one instance in which a provincial government can do a tremendous amount of harm. In this issue what can the Province of Ontario do? Where can they do a lot of good? Any provincial government can, I suppose, affect a money market one way or another, but what Prince Edward Island can do or Newfoundland can do, even though they operate under the same constitution, does not amount to too much. But when you know that 40 per cent of all tax dollars in this country come from the area almost between Oshawa and Niagara Falls, it is pretty obvious that this jurisdiction can do quite a bit if it wants to, if it intends to take any action.

This is why I have even suggested to the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart), or his predecessor (Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence) that whenever he wants to bring a change in the improvement of the marketing of goods such as the matter of frozen foods, they should be marked, they should have a date on them, for after a certain date they could be a risk to health.

Of course our then Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs said, "Well, we will let Ottawa worry about it. Let us see what Ottawa does." But the truth of it is that because of the strength of the Ontario economic market, if we said—and it is quite within The British North America Act—that frozen foods must have a date on them, the country would have to follow for the simple reason the market is in Ontario and you cannot really operate at a profit unless you sell in Ontario.

There may be one exception to that. I think if you sell patent medicines, Quebec is the big market. Patent medicines still go over big in Quebec. But for almost any other item on the market, if Ontario said you must have a date on it or you must do this or you must do that, Ontario could lead. Again I emphasize it is because of our economic strength.

The Minister of Trade and Development gave us a great speech about what he was going to do about housing because this would help the unemployment situation in this province, and he mentioned—it is in the Throne Speech—about 132,000 jobs. Well, they backed off that a bit now. Whatever it was, it was a lot of window dressing. It really was, Mr. Speaker, window dressing. There is really no guts in what they said could be done in putting up houses to fight unemployment. But there are some things that this province can do in affecting employment, in affecting the economy, that they did not even mention.

For example, in Canada there are approximately $14 billion in pension funds. Not all of that $14 billion is in the Province of Ontario. Most of it is. I do not know the exact proportion. Of those pension funds only nine per cent is invested in mortgages that can be used for housing.

There are two pension funds in Ontario, one operated by Canada Packers—and I believe Paul Hellyer in his report on housing pointed this out—that have 60 per cent of their pension fund money in housing. Air Canada has nearly 40 per cent. I am not asking that a pension fund go as high as 60 per cent, but suppose they went from their nine or 10 per cent to 25 per cent. Think of the tremendous amount of money that would be in the housing market.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that that is a matter for provincial jurisdiction and you can give Ottawa a real argument on that on any day of the week, and believe me those of us on this side of the House would be more than willing to support any argument. In fact, Ottawa has never objected, but here in this administration they have made no effort in order to use those funds.

On one occasion I mentioned this situation in this House and the former Minister of Trade and Development got up and gave us a long speech about building-society loans in England, and how you could not have them here because the federal government would not change the income tax. Well, I do not think it was ever seriously discussed between this province and Ottawa. Regardless of that, building-society loans have never taken root in this province or in this country, but we do know that there are literally billions of dollars in pension funds that can be used. This is the type of thing that, if this administration had any drive or interest or any intention really to come to grips with building houses and with solving unemployment, here is a practical situation where it could actually do something.

One more thing, Mr. Speaker, that is well within the realm of control of this province to solve unemployment and again to help the housing crisis that we have in this province. We have a provincial bank. I have often wondered why this administration, if it wants to pour capital funds from general revenues into that bank for mortgage loans, could not do so. Why do they not go out and compete in the market for deposits? Why do they not go out and get some deposit money? We have permitted the building interests to run roughshod over the federal administration and the provincial administration. Most of all, the banking interests have run roughshod over the general public and they do not give a damn.

We have that provincial bank. I know there are some lawyers who will give one the constitutional argument that we should not have a provincial bank, but we have had it here for years, and I would just dare the banking industry to challenge the constitutionality of the Ontario provincial bank. But here is a source of getting funds and going out into the market and getting this money to use, whether you want loans for municipalities, or more particularly whether you want to create employment through housing. There is a source that can be used.

Do not ever let this administration tell you, Mr. Speaker, or anybody else, it is just the fault of the federal government, because it just is not so. With all the things that might be wrong, there is no question that with the powers that we have in this province—both constitutionally, but even more so, economically—it is the buck that counts and this is where the money is and this is where this province has a tremendous amount of influence. If the federal government will not go after the banks, then, for heaven's sake, use the provincial bank.

The government is going to have to re-allocate how money is lent. The banks go out and encourage people to buy red Cadillacs, because there is more money in consumer loans. Let us give them some competition and get the money and put it into housing where it belongs, or in helping the municipality where it should be; and let us have fewer loans for red Cadillacs and more for houses.

This basically is what banking policy is today, and it is stupid for the Province of Ontario to sit back and literally do nothing about it if the government is going to fulfil some of the promises we read in the Speech from the Throne or some of the wondrous statements made by the Attorney General throughout his campaign about helping small businesses. I could not agree with him more, but what in actual fact is happening in this province and throughout the country is loans of under $100,000 are decreasing in numbers.

We are talking through our hats when we say we are going to encourage small business, because the actual number of loans is decreasing, so the only place this government is going to get that money is by using something like the provincial bank where the apparatus already is, and by seeing to it that small business does get the loans it should get.

While the Attorney General was campaigning, while he was Minister of Mines and Northern Affairs and had a bleeding heart for small business, why in the world did the provincial government not cut its Ontario corporation tax of 12 per cent? They levy that tax irrespective, on these small companies, no matter what their level of income. When they collect that 12 per cent one of the main beneficiaries is the government in Ottawa. This is why it seemed so ridiculous when I had to sit here and listen the other day and hear the government blame Ottawa, because if it ever wanted to go after Ottawa, why does the government not cut the 12 per cent corporation tax that is in the province? All the government is doing is helping Ottawa.

We still have the five per cent on machinery and equipment used for production purposes. The government does not make a move on that—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Building materials too!

Mr. Trotter: Whatever fault Ottawa may have, it certainly does not make this decrepit and infirm government look any better. In essence, that is what is wrong with this administration. It is feeble of purpose and over the years it has become too self-satisfied.

Mr. Speaker, I have two items I want to touch on and in essence they all come back to this point that I feel, in this day and age, the individual has been neglected and we are not protecting what is traditionally democratic government. We always want to be modern and do the up-to-date thing, to be tuned in; but there is nothing old or outdated about democratic government, about the right of private ballot or the ballot box. These things get forgotten from the old debates.

But these are part of our tradition, and we are going to lose them if we do not repeat and remind ourselves of their importance. One of the main reasons we do not hear so much about these old traditions today is because of modern economics, where we still have to measure up to the challenges of a changing economy. So many millions of people have become alienated from the system which we treasure and which I for one believe is of the utmost importance.

For example, it still holds true in this society that an individual can develop to the best of his ability and exertions—and note I add that term, “and exertions”—and we have been able to do it for the average person in our society better than anywhere else. And yet, despite all the virtues that we might have, we have to face up to the fact that we have got a number of things wrong with us to the extent that we must ask why is it in the world today we have a Communist bloc; we have in the United States a military-industrial bloc; we have black power, Panther power, red power, labour power, corporation power—society seems to be breaking up into little groups.

I think one of the main reasons is that we, as governments, have failed to measure up to the modern demands of our society; we have failed to come to grips with what people need. There is no question that the rich are becoming richer and the poor are becoming poorer. In large part, it is because of government policy; also in large part, it is because government has ignored the individual.

I just want to give you what, in my mind, are practical examples, because we can have all the theory in the world, but unless we are practical, our democratic system will not work and we, being a pretty practical people, have to be pretty determined that our theories will work.

Just for an example, Mr. Speaker, let us look at how this administration has abused local government. Local government—particularly in the Province of Ontario—has been the keystone of our free society. Local government is sort of the mechanism for the average person to get close to those people who are governing him and where the person who is being governed can remind that person that the governed are those who have the right to decide what are the priorities of government.

In other words, the individual can feel a close kinship to local government and the people who are involved. In fact, the average person himself can become involved in the government that has the power over him. This has been one of the great strengths of Ontario's society. There have been very few countries—and in relation, if you go into the history of this country, Mr. Speaker, there really have been very few provinces in Canada itself except those provinces that have copied themselves from Ontario—that have had the strong local government that we have had. I again repeat that this is one of the great keystones of our society.

Even though we have had approximately 993 municipalities that in many ways had become outdated, they had managed to keep going in a jet age simply because they did have traditional boundaries, geographical boundaries, historical boundaries. They were able to work, even in the last few years, even though not always as efficiently as they might have done. They have still been able to work because of this tradition that they have had.

Now changes are bound to come. Regional government was bound to come, and I have been in favour of regional government. I have been appalled with the way it has been imposed; I repeat, Mr. Speaker, how it has been imposed by this administration. I feel—

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Like Grey South.

Mr. Trotter: I feel this administration has neglected to carry out one of the first principles of a successful democratic government, and that is to consult the people involved and to listen to what they want. This Tory administration has had such a holier-than-thou attitude toward the communities of this province that it has gone a long way to contribute to the possible destruction of the foundation of this society.

The only thing that has really saved us—and will in the long run save us, I am not that pessimistic—is that basically the spirit of the self-reliance of our people runs so deep that not even over a five- or six-year period can this Tory administration destroy the foundations of our society. But if we permit it to continue as it has gone on in the last few years, this is what is going to happen to this province; we will destroy many of the basic freedoms that we have had.

It is mainly the government's manner or attitude. The other day, in the debate on unemployment, when the hon. Treasurer (Mr. McKeough) of this province got up and interjected, while discussing political parties, he referred to his own as "the" party. We are getting in this province aristocratic democracy. It is not democracy of the people; it is becoming aristocratic democracy, and if you look at the history of other civilizations, even those that have been democratic, it is usually the beginning of the end.

Those of us on this side of the House are not going to see that happen because there is a Liberal Party in his province and this gives the people of this province a viable alternative. We are imbued with those principles that will protect the individual and will protect the local government. But if regional governments in this province are going to serve the people in practice as well as in form, then it is about time the provincial government here remembered four basic principles.

Number one is the consent and co-operation of the citizens within each region. I do not believe that has taken place; I think Thunder Bay was imposed on the people. I read things about St. Catharines, and it does not sound to me as if there was much co-operation from "Big Brother" at Queen's Park, or if there was very much—

Mr. Nixon: Closing all the hospitals in Grey county.

Mr. Trotter: —interest in what was going on.

Secondly, you know, we succeeded in this province, in our history, because basically we have been a very practical people. But we are not practical in the way the Tories treat almost any municipal government because they do not give them a sound financial base.

How in the world can people operate a regional government, a city government, or almost any type of municipality in this modern society when the Tories try to base everything on the assessment of a house? It is just stupid and it is completely out of date.

The government is running this province on an Act that was passed in about 1849—I think it was the Baldwin Act—and when you think of the changes that have taken place in the last 25 years never mind the last 125 years, can you see how stupidly municipal government is being treated in this province today?

The government is impractical, as well as being completely undemocratic. How can it expect a municipality, no matter what its size, to operate on the basis on which they operated the little red schoolhouse? That is exactly what the government is doing now.

I admit the little red schoolhouse is the cornerstone of a good educational system. Despite all the things that are wrong with it, despite all the high spending, we have a reasonably good educational system in this province. But how can we expect the municipalities to pay for it? And how can the Tories expect local government to succeed, given the way they have treated them in a financial way?

How can the government expect the township of Vaughan, for an example, to build houses? Here we, in a great urban area like Toronto, need land for houses and so we look to the township of Vaughan, but the councillors up there say: "No, not unless you build a house that has a market value of $40,000." How many working men are going to move there?

I do not blame the councillors of the township of Vaughan. It is wrong to fault the local councillors of any municipality. Just what does the government expect them to do? They cannot afford to carry the educational costs that they must carry; they simply cannot afford to pay for the expensive trunk sewers that must be built. Yet this government, year in, year out, has utterly and completely ignored the councillors, the people and the whole system of local government,

Again I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that unless this province comes to the rescue of local government, the keystone of a free society, we will, in the long run, contribute to the destruction of a free society. Yet these Tories have continually ignored this issue and it has been brought up time and time again.

You can go into great lengths about the financial base of it, but in essence you have got to see that they get money to be used—I would in many ways prefer—for unconditional grants rather than have a myriad of tax systems. I do not want to see that. No one wants to see that. It is inefficient and uneconomic. But you have perhaps got to use that system of unconditional grants and they will say, "Well those people have not raised the taxes"—meaning the local councillors. I say, trust the local councillors who have been elected by the people, because in essence you are trusting the people and it is their money anyway. But you have simply got to face up to this issue, because it is a shocking situation the way we have treated the various communities in this province no matter what their size.

I want to say a third thing. It is that the regional government must be given the freedom of action to assume some of the necessary duties and to make decisions of its own, because today there is too much of a "Big Brother" attitude from Queen's Park, looking over the shoulder of every move a local councillor makes. And let us remember this, that most of the decisions that have made this province have come from hundreds of thousands of people working on councils, or taking an interest in councils that have served this province well over the years. Unless we encourage these communities we will destroy their individuality and eventually we will destroy the individuality and the dignity of the individual himself.

You know, when you think of what the Highways Department has done to some of the communities in this area, in this province—I give you the example of King City, a pleasant community that many people in Toronto would like to live in. In fact, Mr. Speaker, if they would build a decent transit system and have a decent transportation system in this province, King City could become a very important segment of a great metropolitan community without destroying its individuality. But what did the Highways Department do? It was in a hurry to get from point A to point B, so it ripped out the main street, virtually, of King City and cut down these lovely trees which were almost the atmosphere of the community. Mind you, all they had to do was move the highway half a mile north or south. There was room to do it without destroying the centre of that community.

But this is what is important to remember—that we must preserve these communities not just because they are there but because they have a very important role to serve in a modern society. And this government does not realize that. It is destroying, in many respects, what I would say is the very best of rural Ontario. I can say this from someone who represents a big city—the government will destroy rural Ontario and the government is going to destroy this province.

It is a surprising thing that a Tory government is utterly and completely blind to the importance of these communities. Of course, they are going to be more than just a farmer's store supplying the local farmer. This may have changed, but if you can have proper transit systems—look at other parts of the world; even, in fact, look at what we have done here—many hundreds of these communities can become very important.

I was amazed, Mr. Speaker, when looking into this problem when I was down in New York. The Americans, in many cases—except the investors—do not know very much about us in this province or in this country. And yet when I got talking about transportation they started to point out the importance of Toronto and how other communities fit in and they knew all about Guelph and Galt and how it was so easy that they all were in one section and how these communities were all viable communities around the hub of a tremendous centre.

I do not think that it ever occurred to those people over on the Tory benches, Mr. Speaker; all they do is think of going from A to B and ripping out a lot of trees and destroying these communities. And yet, if you look into King City—and this is what I want to emphasize—they were just not consulted. What hope has King City got against “Big Brother” up here at Queen's Park? What hope has Waterdown got? What hope has Pickering got? They have not got a prayer against “Big Brother” at Queen's Park. These Tories just do not care and they just do not know. I point out to you that it is not only a tragedy what we are doing to highways; but philosophically, basically we are contributing to ruining one of the finest societies in the world today, right here in the Province of Ontario. This is a tremendous weakness in this government and a prime reason why it must be turfed out.

Fourth—the last of them—is local government, whether regional or not. There are going to be a lot of governments in certain areas where regions may not quite become set up for some years—this week we do not know; we are in the dark on that—but whether the local government is regional or not we should see to it that they have every opportunity to look after the physical things that are local—the local roads, the sewage, the hydro distribution. Also we should see to it—and this is a major reversal of what has been going on in Ontario—they should administer the social services, such as health and education, which perhaps to some extent they have been doing—but health and the welfare services because when we get too centralized the average person just does not have a clue as to what is going on.

Let me give you again a practical example of where I think a regional government or a local government is most important. Take even a relatively inexpensive thing like a well-baby centre that is set up. In my area, they opened up a few but they closed them down when OHSIP came in. They said, “Well, you can go to your doctor. You are all insured, so go to your doctor.”

Well what is wrong with that is that there are a lot of people, particularly new Canadians and maybe anybody else, who might not have any contact with a doctor. But when we had the well-baby clinic, the people in charge of that clinic not only saw the babies, they were talking with the people who brought their children to that clinic. It was a personal contact that no “Big Brother” government can give to anybody.

This is why, I emphasize again, that even though the provincial government may set down the guidelines, it must see to it that these policies are administered on a local level where the people have contact with the actual administration of the services that they are receiving. It is just not good enough to continue the “Big Brother” attitude that we have had here from this Conservative government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the other thing I think that this government is doing that is going a long way to destroying individual choice and to destroying the sanctity of the individual, is through its housing policies. It is all very well and good to say we are going to produce 132,000 jobs.

Suppose that was even true—I do not believe it, but suppose it was true—there is still one thing basically wrong with the way we treat housing. The only answer we seem to have is to put more and more people into bigger and bigger buildings, and in essence we are destroying the pride of ownership. And whether it is a small shack or a fancy house, if you destroy ownership you again are going to destroy one of the basic tenets of our society.

We have permitted the economy and the housing situation to go to such an extent that by about 1990, 60 per cent of the people of the city of Toronto are going to qualify for subsidized housing. Can you imagine that? Sixty per cent of the people in Toronto will qualify for subsidized housing because the cost of housing is getting completely out of hand. This comes from the Patterson report; it is not a figure just pulled out of the air.

If we let the situation go on in the Toronto community, or any community in Ontario, we again are going to just sit back and almost let dry rot destroy the foundations of our society.

It is a matter—they are all worried about density—of seeing how many people can be piled into these great buildings. I know they are spending money on research to see if these highrises are bad for family life. Yugoslavia has got something going, and they have come up with the conclusion it is bad for family life. Without doing research, without being able to employ a lot of well-informed people to go into the subject, Mr. Speaker, I will venture that piling family after family into highrises is absolutely disastrous for the family and for the community.

Yet we sit back and we seem to have no answers. Surely there must be some answers. It is more than spending $72 million a year, as this government does, on housing. We are going to have to remember that housing is a utility and it is going to have to be produced and used almost like hydro except you have got to give people the opportunity of ownership. I believe—and I may be old-fashioned in this—that unless you give people the pride of ownership and opportunity to have something for themselves, then you lose one of the basic elements in this society, but this is what is going on today.

We have 1,700 acres in Scarborough called Malvern. We have heard that name kicked around so much in this Legislature. We are told that we cannot build houses because the land is too expensive. The land in Malvern of 1,700 acres was bought when land cost peanuts and yet they have all sat back—and I will tell you right now it is the cost of education, it is the cost of sewage, it is not the federal government. It is right over there, it is this Tory administration—that is where it is.

There are many plans right now. I could take the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Grossman) and show him models and plans set out where you can still, in various areas, get high-density housing which is needed in some places in downtown Toronto without destroying all the old houses, without destroying all the old buildings, and without building all those highrise apartments.

Highrise apartments are wonderful for those people who want to live in them; for the older people who like them; for the bachelors; for the happy spinsters; for the newlyweds they are fine, and they serve a purpose. But I say if we are going to have a strong society we must supply the proper housing for our families and this we are not doing and this we can do.

It is just ridiculous that a province with our resources, with our assets, with the ability and the personnel that we have in our people, can sit there and let 1,700 acres at Malvern just sit there for nearly 20 years until we cannot do anything. It is just a shocking situation.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Shame.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): It has all been looked after.

Mr. Trotter. Oh, nonsense!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Trotter: You see, Mr. Speaker, this is the type of crap we get from this administration!

They will not change. They are like that concrete they pour. They are always pouring concrete into these highrise apartments. They are all mixed up and permanently set. That is the concrete mind of so many people in this Tory administration. And it is about time some radical changes were made.

On another occasion I will go into more detail in the housing situation because it is a very, very major problem in this province. But I want to use it as an illustration that unless we have proper housing policies in this province, and for that matter in this country, we are going to go a long way to destroying society as we know it.

One last item, Mr. Speaker, and again it comes back to the basic conception of the individual. It applies to nations as well. This is why it is important that we in Ontario make every effort we can to express our individuality as Canadians.

It has always annoyed me—the policies of government both federally and provincially—that this very basic idea of being a Canadian has really been ignored. I do not want to be a member of the Communist bloc; I do not want to be a member of the industrial military group that is now becoming so powerful in the United States.

What is happening in the United States is a tremendous tragedy. There has never been any nation in all the world, Mr. Speaker, in the democratic process, that has been able to get together and start from scratch and accomplish so much. When you look at the founders of the American union, there has never been such an example as theirs in all the history of the world. But the United States is literally going to pot the way they are carrying on at the present time.

Many of the great traditions that they started—their best chance of growing and becoming of any importance—are in Canadian society. And this is why it is important for us to be Canadian. I am not saying be anti-American; I am not saying ignore all the American money—that would be wrong. But I am saying we should lay down the ground rules and see to it who is controlling what is going on within the province. It has just been a shocking situation—

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): That is what you call belated enlightenment.

Mr. Trotter: —that our Minister of Trade and Development almost thought it was a big joke. The former Premier (Mr. Robarts) of this province said it was a phoney issue. It is not a phoney issue. It is a very vital issue, because if the Canadian identity were lost and submerged by the Americans, there are hardly any nations, you might say, of a middle group of any stature or of any economic power, that can stand up and at least provide a podium for people like ourselves who, as I say, do not either want to be a member of the Communist bloc or part of a group that is now controlling the United States of America.

So it is of vital importance that our government avoid doing what they did just last January—dole out over $300,000 to Pfizer Corporation in order to put a plant up in Cornwall. Surely there must be people in Canada who can help out Cornwall? Cornwall needs new industries, I do not question that. But why should we give forgivable loans to a drug company that, according to the American Senate, is one of the worst drug profiteers in all the world? That is what we did last January. How stupid can we get? This is what this administration does. It is a practical example that it simply does not care.

Now I feel that—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the member want to ask the member for Sarnia about American companies in his area?

Mr. Trotter: It is going to take more than a change of ministers. It will be more than just playing musical chairs to put some real guts into policy in this province, so that we can say not only to ourselves but to all of Canada that we are Canadians because—as I began I want to finish, Mr. Speaker—because the strength of the economy in this province, the fact that a thousand people a week come to live in the city of Toronto, shows that we are a viable economic community.

There is wealth here, there is training; and this is why it is important that it have proper direction, not only to serve ourselves but to serve Canada as a whole. I think that if we have a strong democratic country in Canada, we literally serve the free world as a whole everywhere. This is why Ontario is so vitally important because if governments, and more particularly the men in that government, were inspired with proper ideals they could legislate the practical policies that would be of tremendous help to every man, woman and child in the province of Ontario. But what do we get? We get wisecracks; we get almost complete indifference from the present administration that we have here—

Mr. Nixon: And it has got to go.

Mr. Trotter: And it is time that we advance—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): Is there any other place you would rather be?

Mr. Trotter: It is an aristocratic democracy at best, but even that is getting infirm and decrepit. What we want here is democracy for the people and not for a particular group of aristocrats or a little close group—

Mr. Nixon: The uppercrust of Chatham.

Mr. Trotter: —which has been running this province for a long, long time and so—

Mr. Nixon: Time is running out.

Mr. Trotter: —we are all overdue for change. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I ask this House to support the amendment as put forward by my leader, because it is Liberal policies that are going to deliver this province and give it the leadership that it needs and all this country needs. We are the one party in this province that can go into any community and advocate the same platform and preach to them the same political philosophy that they need in order to give them and give this province the proper future that it deserves.

Hon. J. W. Snow (Minister without Portfolio): The member has been preaching like that for 25 years.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: He must have just found out!

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): It is 28 years now.

Mr. Trotter: The time of wasting our resources, of poor leadership, has got to come to an end. This is why I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all the members of this House—and I hope to the people of the Province of Ontario—that to support the Liberal Party means supporting the party that is going to give them a government that they need.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Amen!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the member for Cochrane South would move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Ferrier moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, are we to understand that there is work on tap for the committees to undertake tomorrow or will, in fact, tomorrow just be a day in which the Legislature does not continue?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): There is the organization of the committees. I do not know that the committees have a great deal of work before them but they will need some time to organize. The House will not be sitting.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 5.55 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1971

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon in the east gallery as our guests we have students from the East Mersea Public School in Wheatley, and Hillside Public School in Clarkson, and in the west gallery from the Adult Day School in Toronto. This evening we shall be having with us at our night session, the Young Christian Workers from Toronto.

Statements by the ministry.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition):
No statements!

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Revenue then has a statement?

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): The Minister of University Affairs has a statement.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce that the provincial government will provide financial support for the preparation of a series of historical biographies of the prime ministers of Ontario since Confederation. This series will record the historical developments of Ontario and the achievements of the men who have given leadership to the people of this province from the time of the Confederation Premier, John Sandfield MacDonald, up to the present.

The biographies will be written by recognized scholars in Ontario history with general direction from an independent board of trustees under the chairmanship of Dr. Murray Ross, former president of York University. Dr. Ross has solicited ideas and advice from university presidents and history department chairmen throughout the province and has received enthusiastic support for the scope and aims of the project.

The other members of the board of trustees are: Mrs. Margaret Angus, president, Ontario Historical Society; Dr. Floyd Chalmers, chancellor, York University; Dr. R. E. G. Davis, founder of the Canadian Institute on Public Affairs; Dr. Raymond Labarge, deputy minister, customs and excise division, Department of National Revenue, Ottawa; Dr. J. K. Reynolds, secretary to the cabinet of Ontario;

Dr. E. E. Stewart, deputy minister, Department of University Affairs; Dr. James Talman, department of history, University of Western Ontario.

Additional historians will be invited to join the board of trustees and a senior editor will be appointed by the board in the near future.

Formal approval of the project and the appointment of board members has been approved through order-in-council. The research funds for the preparation of the biographies are to be included in the regular budget of The Department of University Affairs.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have three reports to table and in that I am going to make a statement with them and perhaps in that the hon. members opposite might like to ask some questions I propose to table the reports and make the statements at this time, rather than under "Reports."

The first one, Mr. Speaker, relates to tabling of the third report of the McRuer royal commission on civil rights. It is my privilege to table the third report of the inquiry into civil rights conducted by the hon. James C. McRuer.

As you know, the inquiry has submitted two previous reports to the Legislature. This third report, which is volume five of the documents prepared by Mr. McRuer, concludes the activities of the commission. The report, which is now being placed on the desks of all hon. members deals with the application of the general principles recommended for adoption in the earlier reports.

As the government has only just received this report and has not had an opportunity to study it in great detail, I cannot indicate to the House to what degree action will be taken at this session to deal specifically with the suggestions put forward in this volume. However, as was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, measures which grew out of the earlier reports by Mr. McRuer will be put forward to further enshrine civil rights in the statutes of Ontario and may well in fact meet some of the suggestions contained in this report.

I should like to take this opportunity, on behalf of all hon. members of the Legislature, to express our appreciation to Mr. James Chalmers McRuer. Since May, 1964, he has devoted his considerable energies and intellect to a most complete review of the application of fundamental civil and human rights in this province. His work has already borne considerable fruit and, I am confident, will have a continuing and salutary influence on the work of this Legislature and the conditions of living in our province.

The people of Ontario owe Mr. McRuer a very large debt of gratitude and, I know, will come to realize this more and more as the years pass by. His understanding of the need to preserve and protect the basic principles of civil liberties and freedoms will be applied to the daily activities of each and every person in Ontario and substantially influence governments in many other jurisdictions in Canada and elsewhere.

Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure—and not just a pleasure; a matter of some concern—that I present to the Legislature the first report of the royal commission on book publishing. You will recall that this commission was appointed on December 23, 1970, to examine fully the publishing industry and inquire into its position within the business community and the effect of this contribution on the cultural life and education of the people of Ontario and Canada. The commission was also asked to study the economic, cultural, social and other consequences of substantial ownership or control of publishing firms by foreign, foreign-owned or foreign-controlled corporations or non-Canadians.

The report I am tabling today deals specifically with the financial difficulties faced by McClelland and Stewart Limited, one of the largest book publishing houses in Ontario and Canada. The members will recall that the owner of this firm, Mr. Jack McClelland, has announced his intention to sell his shares in the company because of an inability to obtain sufficient capital in Canada to remain in business. He recently opened negotiations with United States sources.

This report indicates that an independent analysis of the company's financial statements by Clarkson, Gordon and Company reveals that approximately $1 million is required to overcome the difficulties faced by McClelland and Stewart. The commission concurs with statements by Clarkson, Gordon and Company that these funds could not be obtained in Canada without the assistance of the government.

The government of Ontario agrees with the royal commission that the creative momentum in original Canadian publishing undertaken by this company should not be lost or permitted to be transferred to non-Canadian ownership.

The commission has recommended that as an emergency measure this government, through the Ontario Development Corporation, offer to acquire from McClelland and Stewart Limited 10-year term convertible debentures for one-third of the company's assets—$961,000. It is suggested that the debentures should bear no interest during the first five years and low interest rates thereafter. In turn, the Ontario Development Corporation would appoint members to the board of directors of the company, along with other safeguards of public funds.

Further, the royal commission suggests that McClelland and Stewart is a national asset worthy of all reasonable public encouragement and support, and therefore the government of Canada should be invited to participate to a substantial extent in the acquisition of the proposed debentures.

Mr. Speaker, the government of Ontario accepts the principles put forward in this interim report by the royal commission on book publishing to maintain McClelland and Stewart as a Canadian-owned company. The Ontario Development Corporation will pursue the recommendation of the commission. The government will also undertake to request that the government of Canada enter into a joint venture with this government to assist McClelland and Stewart Limited.

Mr. Speaker, this government is concerned that there be a sound, Canadian publishing industry. We are especially concerned that the cultural integrity of our educational system be protected. The importance of maintaining a Canadian textbook industry was emphasized yesterday in testimony before the royal commission and reported fully in today's press.

Because of our interest, the Deputy Minister of Education, Dr. J. R. McCarthy, will be seconded to the royal commission as a special consultant on textbook publishing. His extensive experience in all phases of education will greatly expand the capacity of the commission to consider this important aspect of the publishing industry.

Mr. Speaker, as a continuation of this aspect of it, as you are aware, over the period of the last 25 years, there has been a great emphasis on development in education in Ontario, involving the provision of more accommodation, more equipment, more transportation, more teachers and additional other staff.

In recent times there has been a deceleration of the increase in enrolments. Beginning in September of this year the elementary school enrolment will decrease in absolute numbers and continue to do so throughout the 1970s. These developments have implications of considerable significance for all those associated either directly or indirectly with education.

This diminishing emphasis on quantitative factors will release time and energy which become available to be utilized in other ways. It also means that resources, in terms of personnel and finance, may not be required to the same extent or in the same manner.

The challenge exists in terms of planning ahead, establishing priorities which have regard for the aims and objectives we hold in education and which take into account the hard realities of the economic and other relevant factors in our society, and in making those decisions which will not always be easy but which will be essential in the light of the considerations to which I have referred.

If this job is well done we will be able to place a new emphasis on quality in education and will make the system responsive and accountable to the people of our province.

Therefore, it is the intention to examine fully the financing of education in Ontario. This will be done in relation to the aims and objectives, goals and philosophy of the elementary and secondary school system. We shall relate the financing to our priorities and programmes and to the resources available at the various levels of government.

In addition to his role as consultant to the royal commission on the publishing industry, Mr. McCarthy will undertake the proposed study for The Department of Education. He will devote his full time to these two important areas. Dr. McCarthy's experience in the areas of curriculum, textbooks, school administration and education finance will be helpful in the proposed study.

A further and more detailed statement on the terms of reference and procedures for the study will be made by the Minister of Education (Mr. Welch) at an early date.

Mr. Speaker, the third report that I would like to table and refer to in the statement relates to the second interim report of the committee on government productivity.

The House will recall that the first report of the committee was released several weeks ago.

The second report is based upon further analysis of the functioning of cabinet and the multitude of roles a minister is required to fulfil. The recommendations are designed to increase the capacity of the cabinet to deal with change, to add both precision and speed to the decision-making process, to ensure the flow of current information to cabinet and to reduce the amount of routine work required by ministers so that they may concentrate their time and energy on broad policy questions.

The cabinet has given approval in principle to all six recommendations in this report and is moving quickly to implement them. I am confident these will have a positive influence on the ability of the cabinet and individual ministers to fulfil both their public and executive responsibilities.

As a first step in implementing the recommendations, legislation is being prepared and will be introduced in the near future to establish two senior cabinet committees. The committee on policy and priorities will replace the present cabinet committee on policy development. The function of the Treasury Board will be substantially altered to reflect a new emphasis on its role in the management of government programmes. It will be renamed, at this point at least, the management committee. Both committees will have assigned to them additional duties and responsibilities.

The committee on government productivity recommends that a legislation committee be established to review legislation before discussion by full cabinet and to schedule the introduction of government legislation into the House. This recommendation has been accepted and the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Wishart) has been appointed chairman.

To co-ordinate the work of departments with similar responsibilities, the committee on government productivity recommends that ministers whose departments are allied in function should be grouped together in co-ordinating committees. Thus, policies relating to a given area, such as the environment, will be fully discussed before arriving at cabinet. Programmes will be co-ordinated and gaps in service identified. This type of cabinet organization will result in more inter-departmental co-ordination at the highest level, in more precise policy definition—

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The Premier has got to try something.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —and clearer, more consistent policy decisions.

These recommendations, taken with those related to a strengthened cabinet secretariat and more formalized procedures for the channelling of cabinet business, will allow cabinet to achieve more within the limited time available. The ability of ministers and cabinet to process a large volume of decisions on the basis of thoroughly researched and complete information will be increased substantially.

These new recommendations by the committee on government productivity herald a new management style being introduced by this government to match the new demands placed on it as we deal with the needs and requirements of the people of Ontario in the 1970s.

As further support of the recommendations of the committee on government productivity, I should like to announce the restructuring and strengthening of The Department of the Prime Minister and the cabinet secretariat and, as well, a number of changes in senior government personnel. All will become effective on May 1.

As the House is aware, The Department of the Prime Minister is a relatively small department, serving the administrative needs of the executive council and what has developed into a rather large undertaking, the staff functions related to the fulfilment of the office and, of course, of the leader of the government. From 1964 to 1969, Dr. J. Keith Reynolds served as the chief executive officer of The Department of the Prime Minister. In early 1969, he undertook the dual responsibilities of secretary to the cabinet and deputy minister of the department. During this period, The Department of the Prime Minister has developed in its role as the co-ordinating office for government activities and began to increase its capacity to assist cabinet in its work.

In concert with the expanded activities of the cabinet committee system it is imperative that The Department of the Prime Minister also evolve so that it can undertake a far larger role in the co-ordination and direction of government activity.

We shall bring into the department a number of additional responsibilities including the possible transfer to the department of a number of activities now performed in other departments. Dr. Reynolds will assume what I foresee to be a significant and onerous role as deputy minister of The Department of the Prime Minister. Additionally, he will serve as my chief executive officer and undertake a number of special assignments on behalf of myself and the government.

Mr. Clare Westcott, who was my special assistant in The Department of Education, will continue in this capacity in The Department of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Carl E. Brannan, who is secretary of the Treasury Board, will become secretary to the cabinet which carries with it the rank and status of deputy minister. As part of the reorganization of the cabinet secretariat, Mr. Thomas I. Campbell will become secretary to the cabinet committee on policy and priorities.

Mr. Brannan will be succeeded as secretary of the management committee of cabinet by Mr. G. H. U. Bayly, deputy minister of The Department of Lands and Forests. Mr. Bayly will be secretary of the management committee of cabinet when it is established.

Mr. Walter Q. Macnee, who is now Deputy Minister of Transport, will become Deputy Minister of Lands and Forests.

Dr. Edward E. Stewart, Deputy Minister of University Affairs, will become deputy minister of The Department of Education. Dr. Stewart will be succeeded by Mr. H. H. Walker, Deputy Minister of Revenue.

The deputy minister of The Department of Trade and Development, Mr. Stuart W. Clarkson, will succeed Mr. Walker as Deputy Minister of Revenue.

The chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission Mr. Donald J. Collins, will become Deputy Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Robert D. Johnston, deputy minister for The Department of Civil Service, will become acting chairman of the Ontario Water Resources Commission. I would add at this point that both The Department of Civil Service and the Civil Service Commission are to become part of the new management committee of cabinet, with Mr. W. A. B. Anderson directing both The Department of Civil Service and the Civil Service Commission. It is expected that further recommendations in this general area will be forthcoming from the committee on government productivity.

I should also at this time, Mr. Speaker, like to designate the appointment of Mr. A. T. C. McNab as deputy minister of the planned new Department of Transportation and Communications and Mr. John C. Thatcher as deputy minister of the Ontario Department of the Environment. Legislation to effect these new departments is in the course of preparation.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to announce these appointments. The people of Ontario may take pride in the high calibre of the men and women who are their civil servants. These men, along with the senior officers of our other departments, are among the most skilled and dedicated people one could wish to work with. On behalf of the people of our province, I wish to extend to them my congratulations on the excellence of their work and appreciation of their service on our behalf.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy and Resources Management has a statement.

Hon. G. A. Kerr (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Yes, Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. leader of the Opposition's question of April 13 last, I would like to table a list of the sources ordered to curtail operations on April 12, 1971, under The Air Pollution Control Act.

I would like again, Mr. Speaker, to make it clear to the members of the House that this list is made up of industries and sources which were called by air management branch last weekend and which co-operated with my department's officials. They are not necessarily all the sources which may have contributed to a high index reading.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: I think the question period is the appropriate time for that.

Mr. Nixon: He was answering my question.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but he was answering by way of statement rather than taking up the question period for it.

The Attorney General has a statement.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker!

Similarly, I have a matter that was raised in the House by question, but rather than take up the time of the question period I would like to make a statement on it. It involves the case of Regina vs. Francottie. You will recall, sir, that I undertook to review the circumstances relative to this case when certain questions arose in the House as to Mr. Francottie's inability to raise the $20 cash bail after he had been taken into custody by the Metropolitan Toronto police.

Hon. members are already aware that this case arises out of a charge which has been laid pursuant to section 280 of the Criminal Code of Canada which creates an indictable offence of theft, including theft of an article under the value of $50. Since the matter is before the courts it is obvious that I am not in a position to make comment on the facts that led up to the laying of the charge, although it already has been noted that it involved an allegation by a newspaper vendor as to the removal of money from his box through which he distributes newspapers.

Mr. Francottie was arrested on Thursday, April 1, and taken into custody by the Metropolitan Toronto Police.

He appeared for the first time before the provincial court on Friday, April 2, the next morning. He saw duty counsel—that is duty counsel under the legal aid plan—before his appearance in that court on Friday, April 2, since deputy counsel is present in the cell area from 8 o'clock in the morning and is available to the men who are in custody.

Mr. Francottie provided to the duty counsel the information relative to his person only, not in relation to the charge. This information was in turn conveyed to the Crown attorney who provided it to the court on that Friday morning at the appropriate time. The matter of bail was raised by the Crown attorney, who did not make any specific recommendation on this first appearance; nor did the duty counsel make any specific recommendations.

The judge, after considering the matter and in the light of the fact that the man did not have any fixed place of address and did not have any means which were readily apparent, felt that the bail of $20 would be reasonable in the circumstances; and he so directed.

At this point Mr. Speaker, I feel I should make the observation that the purpose of the recognizance is to ensure the attendance of the accused person at his trial, this is the whole essence of the bail system. However, in association with that position, the evidence must be considered by the court as to what the circumstances will be that will in fact ensure the attendance of that person at his trial.

In the present case, I think we are doing an injustice to the system if we do not recognize that the information provided by the accused person himself through the duty counsel of the legal aid system to the courts and the Crown attorney was not such as to indicate with certainty that the man has a position in the community or indeed even family connections that would ensure his attendance at his trial.

Mr. S. Lewis (Scarborough West): But $20 would.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The judge, in these circumstances, obviously felt that some amount of money—

Mr. Sargent: Some places have an honour system. Why not try it here?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The judge, in these circumstances, obviously felt that some amount of money might provide that incentive.

Sir, I am of the opinion, however, that when the duty counsel and the accused himself did not raise any question about the bail which has been fixed, then the Crown attorney should have raised the question. Since the Crown attorney is the agent of the Attorney General, I feel that it is incumbent upon him in all cases to do everything possible to further the administration of justice. I have now given instructions that all Crown attorneys in the province are to be advised that if neither the accused nor his counsel make any indication with respect to the bail which has been fixed by the court, the Crown attorney should raise the matter before the court so that consideration may be given to the circumstances of the accused, particularly when these are not made readily apparent to the court or to the judge.

If I can continue with the review of the particular case, this was remanded to Wednesday, April 7, and the accused was returned to the Don Jail—that is he was returned to the Don Jail on the Friday afternoon, when he then asked to see duty counsel. Duty counsel at that hour was not available in the Don Jail. He was not available on the whole of that Friday afternoon; and because it was Friday, the next day was Saturday and the day after that was Sunday. We do not have duty counsel available in the Don Jail on the Saturday or the Sunday either.

So Mr. Francottie saw duty counsel on Monday, April 5, and he then named a lawyer whom he wanted to appear.

Mr. Sargent: So justice takes a holiday.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: He named the lawyer whom he then wanted to appear on his behalf. He did not name any alternatives. When asked to do so he declined, and indicated that there was only one particular lawyer whom he wanted and that no alternative would be requested by him.

Mr. Lewis: They were asking a lot of him there, but little before.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: On the next day, Tuesday, April 6, a legal aid certificate of eligibility was issued; but the lawyer who had been named by the prisoner was not available and could not be contacted by the legal aid officials. On Wednesday, April 7, when the man appeared in court his lawyer was still not available, indeed had not even been informed yet that the accused wanted him because no one had been able to reach him. The man, therefore, was not represented. Duty counsel again was present in the courtroom but in the circumstances the duty counsel was not entirely certain as to whether he should speak on behalf of the man who had already selected his own lawyer. The man was once again remanded in custody until Wednesday, April 14.

Here again, sir, I am not satisfied with the way in which all of the responsibilities of the officials were discharged and I feel it certainly would have been appropriate for the assistant Crown attorney to have raised the matter of bail again if neither the counsel for the accused nor the court raised the question first.

In considering the various aspects of the Ontario legal aid plan, I think we may all take pride in the service which is being provided continually throughout our courts, both by the duty counsel involved and by those who are participating in the continuing provision of legal aid. In the present case it will be noted that the duty counsel spoke of the matter on the first appearance on April 2 although the matter of bail was not dealt with in the manner which I feel was completely satisfactory or appropriate.

However, on April 5, when the accused saw duty counsel he selected one lawyer only and the very next day his certificate of eligibility was issued but they were unable to contact that single lawyer who had been picked out by the accused. On April 7, therefore, the man was not represented.

The question immediately arises as to whether or not we should require the accused to select alternative lawyers. If we do that, sir, we are then, of course, subject to the criticism that one of the essential features of legal aid will be aborted, because the man will then not be having the lawyer of his first choice. However, there are obvious considerations that may be extended to this matter and the Ontario legal aid plan director and his officials are developing an arrangement so that alternative counsel will be requested—will have to be requested—and obtained to prevent the recurrence of this type of unfortunate situation.

As far as I can ascertain, the time lags were minimal in the provision of legal aid but even so, I am asking the officials of the Ontario legal aid plan to review these time factors so that they may be kept to an absolute minimum, particularly where the custody of an individual is concerned.

On April 7, therefore, the man was not represented and the case again was remanded until April 14. At that time he was advised by the court to contact duty counsel in view of the difficulty which he had encountered, but the accused did not do so. He made no attempt to contact the duty counsel, though this seemed to be the most effective manner by which he could pursue his own lawyer.

On April 10—that is, on the Saturday—the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) attended at the Don Jail at approximately 5:45 in the afternoon to inquire about Mr. Francottie's bail. While I gather he was willing to put up the cash necessary for bail, the justice of the peace had left the premises and therefore was not then available.

Unfortunately, no person advised the hon. member for High Park that he could contact the local senior officer at the police station and a justice of the peace could then be notified so that an appointment could be made to accommodate this particular bail arrangement at the Don Jail.

However, advice was given to the effect that the justice of the peace would return on the following day. I believe that some discussion was had as to the leaving of the money, so that the matter could be arranged expeditiously on the following day, but the hon. member felt he would really prefer to re-attend the next day, which was the Sunday.

This brings me to one of the other areas of concern which I have and that is with respect to the provision of justices of the peace within Toronto. We are all aware that there have been other cases when there has been difficulty in obtaining this service. As a result of the review which was made by my predecessor, further justices of the peace were made available for this night service in all areas of Metropolitan Toronto.

However, one of the factors which has not been dealt with is the period from 4 o'clock in the afternoon until 8 o'clock in the evening, when a justice of the peace is not ordinarily available, even by special request through the police station. I have now taken steps to ensure that additional justices of the peace will be obtained so this special service after 4 o'clock will be available continually through until the resumption of the ordinary service of the JPs and the courts in the following morning.

In this way, hopefully, any person wishing to have the service of a JP to arrange bail from 4 in the afternoon until 6 the following morning may contact the senior officer in charge of any police station in Metropolitan Toronto who will then provide the telephone number of the most available justice of the peace. The individual may then arrange an appointment with that JP to attend at whatever location may be appropriate for the bail arrangement.

It has been suggested that some central location would be preferable to the existing system, but I would point out that such a central system would involve the transportation of the individuals from all points of Metro Toronto to one location, and this could lead to a great deal of difficulty, not only for the individual himself but for those persons who are interested in assisting him.

At the same time, it would involve a tremendous amount of police time if the persons were to be transported expeditiously after their arrest to such a central location. Under our existing arrangement, the individual, who may be in any one of a dozen police stations or who may be at the Don Jail, will be able to make the arrangement to have the attendance of the justice of the peace at the place where he specifically needs the help. We feel that this has worked well in the past for those who are working within the system, and that it will be even more effective when we fill this four-hour gap that has existed.

One other feature through this whole process which has caused me concern is the communication of all these services to the people who need them. It is fine for us to talk about the rights of the individual but it is rather frustrating, sir, if they do not know what those rights are. This must of its very nature be difficult when there are so many people involved in this process.

We have now made arrangements with both the Metropolitan Police force and The Department of Correctional Services so that informative material will be provided to the people who are taken into custody and to those who may make inquiries.

This material will inform them as to the manner in which they may contact the JP. In this way, any person who is pursuing a bail arrangement will get this advice from either the police or the institutional officials. Here again, I fully realize that there may be isolated cases where such a system may not get the information to an individual at the precise point of time at which he wants to have it. We will do everything possible to provide the broadest possible communication of the service and will revise it as our experience indicates where improvements may be made.

I have taken considerable time both to review the situation with my officials and to relate the results to this Legislature. In doing so, sir, I think mention should be made of the fact that the matter of the custody of an accused person is important not only to that individual but also to the whole of the society in which he and we live.

It is not without importance that, at the same time there was controversy over this particular case, the recent report of a grand jury in the county of York expressed grave concern that bail had been extended on too lenient terms in too many cases with subsequent depredations upon the public. This is not the first grand jury comment that we have had to that effect. It must be borne in mind that these comments are made by the citizens of this community who have had the advantage of going through the Don Jail and reviewing specific cases and reviewing the particular circumstances as they relate to those cases.

I mention this, sir, merely to illustrate the fact that in all matters relative to the administration of justice there is balance, and there must be balance, between the right of the individual and the right of the public and our courts and our officials really do their best to provide this balance in the best interests of all concerned. As long as we have human beings involved in the process, there are bound to be human mistakes. I do not anticipate that these will ever be eliminated 100 per cent because our system must always depend on human beings. But insofar as it is within my power and our power to do so, we will be mitigating against human error and will do all that is possible to provide appropriate assurance for both the individual and for the public whom we all serve.

Mr. Speaker: Oral questions.

REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON PUBLISHING

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Premier further to his announcement with regard to the report of the royal commission on publishing.

Can he clarify for me, and perhaps for other members of the House, as to what might be the involvement he is requesting of the federal government? Is it in addition to the $900,000-plus that he announced would be a part of the assistance that would be provided for McClelland and Stewart?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is contemplated that the request to the federal government would be, say, for an equal participation. The $961,000 represents what the commission thinks is the total required, so it will be 50 per cent of that if they involve themselves.

Mr. Nixon: A further question: I wonder if the Premier can indicate to the House if this decision could be applied to other somewhat similar circumstances in the publishing industry and elsewhere? I refer particularly to the request that evidently has been made on behalf of Maclean-Hunter to representatives of the government for a 50 per cent involvement in their publishing expansion.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I expect there will be a number of other specific items discussed by the commission that is presently sitting, and I really do not think I can comment at this moment as it relates to their activities. This is the first report we have received and, as I said in my statement, the government accepts the principles in it and we have asked the Ontario Development Corporation to see if they cannot move in this direction. I cannot comment as to other suggestions that may flow from the royal commission at this point.

Mr. Nixon: A final supplementary as far as I am concerned: Has the government received assurances from the management of McClelland and Stewart that they are withdrawing their offers to American concerns to buy into the management of that company?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there have been any assurances from McClelland and Stewart. This proposal has been discussed with them and, of course, this is a part of the on-going negotiations.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough West has a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, am I to understand from the statement that the Premier has in fact made a governmental guarantee that it will meet the recommendation of the royal commission exclusive of any federal involvement?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the statement was quite clear. We hope to involve the federal government in that we feel this is a matter of national interest. I think it is also quite clear from the statement that we intend to accept the principle of the report and will make every effort to see that this matter is brought to a form of solution.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, by way of—

Hon. Mr. Davis: With or without the federal government.

Mr. Lewis: With or without? Fine.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview has a supplementary?

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, would it be reasonable to assume that since the government has accepted this report in principle, the government thereby repudiates the recent statement of the hon. member for Don Mills (Mr. Randall) who indicated the faults of McClelland and Stewart has arisen because of bad management?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read the report itself—I am not fully familiar with what the hon. member said—I think it is fair to state that one of the difficulties of McClelland and Stewart does relate to management.

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): He would not understand it anyway.

Mr. Singer: By way of further supplementary, does the Prime Minister agree with the statement, whoever made it, that McClelland and Stewart has had bad management to date?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to get into an analysis of McClelland and Stewart. The hon. member is quite free to read the royal commission's report. There was a report made by Clarkson, Gordon related to the financial situation. The policy and the intent of this administration is to resolve the problem and that is what we are attempting to do.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brantford has a supplementary?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): A supplementary question of the Prime Minister: Can the Prime Minister indicate whether any directive will be issued to school boards regarding the purchasing of books?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this would more appropriately be addressed to the Minister of Education, but in that I know something about it, I will endeavour to answer it. There have already been directives over the years relating to Circular 14, where are very clearly indicated the numbers and the books that are printed by Canadian publishers and written by Canadian authors. There has been a very clear indication that we wish them to use Circular 14 and to use the textbooks printed in this country to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East (Mr. T. Reid) has a supplementary? The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

STANDING COMMITTEE DECISION TO DEAL WITH EDUCATION

Mr. Nixon: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: Does he intend to take any particular action in light of the decision taken yesterday by the standing committee dealing with education matters, in view of the fact that his minister, the Provincial Secretary, has said those actions are "improper and undemocratic"?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, just before the hon. Prime Minister replies to—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Unless the minister has risen on a point of order or personal privilege—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On a point of order!

That is a transliteration or paraphrasing of remarks I used. The remarks, as I recall them, were as follows—

Mr. Speaker: This is not a point of order. It may be a point of personal privilege.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): It is a point of personal privilege.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: A point of personal privilege; thank you, Mr. Speaker.

I took the position that whatever the merits of the resolution were, a standing committee could not take unto itself powers other than those assigned to it by this Legislature that our—

Mr. Singer: Is this a point of personal privilege?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: —our democratic way, the democratic way in which—

Mr. Speaker: Order!

If the hon. minister wishes to make a speech, he will do it by way of a statement before the orders of the day or at an appropriate time in a debate.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I did not use the—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a question of the Prime Minister, and the Prime Minister may answer it or not as he wishes.

Mr. Singer: If he can get a word in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in that I now have a more accurate quotation of what the hon. Provincial Secretary said than what was transmitted by the Leader of the Opposition in the question that he asked me, my answer to that question is very simply this; that the standing committees, as constituted by this House, are set up legally with very specific terms of reference and these specific terms of reference will be followed by the members of this House.

Mr. Lewis: Is that a veiled threat? Is that what it is?

Mr. Nixon: A further question, Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Premier then would interpret his own answer. Is he going to stop the investigation from proceeding or does he think it falls within the specific terms of reference of the constitution of the committee?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the constitution of the committee and the debate that ensued in this House and the decision that was made, the standing committee can deal with those matters referred to it by the members of this House.

I expect there will be a number of motions emanating from the government benches related to the activities of the committee. One of them, of course, will deal with the matters of education and I anticipate that either the Minister of Education or I will have a resolution or motion relating to the question of cost and how it might be assessed by the standing committee, which is the proper way to do it.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I—

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I think it is essential that we be perfectly clear about this, if you will permit a further question, sir. We are to understand then that the resolution of the standing committee would have no effect until a representative of the government, either the Premier or the Minister of Education, presented a resolution in similar terms or different terms to this House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am very anxious to follow the rules of this House. I think the rules are quite specific; that is the standing committees may deal with those matters referred to them specifically by the members of this Legislature.

I intend, or the Minister of Education intends, to introduce a motion that will relate to this matter. The members opposite will have full opportunity to discuss whether or not this can resolve the problem and how the standing committee can function on, say, the assessment of educational costs or many other matters. As I say, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: So the Premier is rejecting the independence—

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am not rejecting it at all. I am trying to operate the standing committees as set down by the rules of this House, which have been agreed to by all members.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is trying to manipulate the committee system.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I would like to ask the minister about the decision he has stated. Would it in any way affect the decision of that committee to call before it the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education and the Ontario Secondary School Teachers Federation next Wednesday? I wonder whether that decision will remain on the books of that committee or whether, indeed, what the minister has said today simply wipes the whole proceedings clear?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I cannot speak for the Minister of Education. I can just say as a matter of principle, as it relates—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —to the functioning of that particular committee—

Mr. Singer: Why can he not speak for him? He is the Premier?

Hon. Mr. Davis: In my view, there would be great merit in having the institute, the teachers' federation, the trustees' council and the organization that is related to and interested in educational matters—it would be quite proper for the committee to meet and discuss issues with them.

An hon. member: And the taxpayers.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But I am saying, Mr. Speaker—I want to repeat it for the benefit of the hon. members opposite—I have read the rules very carefully, as they have, and if we wish the standing committees to function in a meaningful way I suggest, with respect, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: He means in a more controlled way.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —we should do it according to the rules.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: A further supplementary?

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The hon. Leader of the Opposition has a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: The new democratic centralism of William Davis!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Nixon: A further supplementary: May I ask the Premier if he is going to proceed in a similar manner to reject the decision made by the committee on natural and physical resources to call before it the Ontario Food Council?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it abundantly clear I have not rejected anything. What I have said, and I hope I do not have to repeat it again—

An hon. member: Why not?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —is that I shall be, or particular ministers will be, introducing motions or resolutions, whichever is most appropriate, to have matters referred before the standing committee. The resolution could be so all-embracing that they do not have to come back to the Legislature as it relates to particular organizations or institutions. To me this is a very logical and relevant way of resolving the problem.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West a supplementary?

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary, dealing not with the generality but with the specific, Mr. Speaker, to the Premier: The committee yesterday passed a specific resolution, with the support of government members, to look at the costs of education—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, to look at a particular—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: I hope the Speaker will extend the question period appropriately.

Mr. Speaker: No, the hon. member and his party were equally vociferous a short time ago.

Mr. Lewis: The committee passed a resolution, with government support, asking for an inquiry into education costs along certain lines, a committee constituted of members of this Legislature. Is the Premier saying that that resolution of yesterday is, today, invalid?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am saying, Mr. Speaker, I want to be as helpful and as constructive as I can.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is fine. The resolution that was passed yesterday by the standing committee was out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it may come as a bit of a surprise to the member for Scarborough East and the leader of the socialist party that the resolution—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I guess it was something of a Freudian slip, although I do make this general observation—I have yet to hear the leader of the New Democratic Party refer to any member on this side as a member of the Progressive Conservative Party. I usually hear the term Tory; for which we do not apologize incidentally, we do not apologize for that term.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now to get back to the answer to the question.

Mr. Lewis: Right. The Premier is muzzling the committees.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all.

Mr. Lewis: A little twitch of autonomy was a little too much for him.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the government will, as I am sure the members opposite like us to do, administer the affairs of this House relative to the standing orders of this House. There will be a motion related to those matters which should be assessed by the committees, and we will have every opportunity to debate it here in this House, every opportunity.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

I continually point out that the question period is the time for the members and if they are going to use it in the way we have been doing, they are going to lose much valuable time. Now the hon. member for York South has risen on a point of order. We will hear it, and thereafter the member for Scarborough East has a supplementary.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I ask for your ruling on a point.

Mr. Lewis: Right.

Mr. MacDonald: Is there any precedent or is it within the powers of the government to come into this Legislature and unilaterally declare that something that has been done in a committee of this Legislature is out of order?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: I have no hesitation in giving my view at the moment and I will be glad to take it under advisement; but at the moment, so far as Mr. Speaker is concerned, he is not advised of anything that happened in the committee. There has been no report here and therefore so far as I am concerned it is a question of oral question and answer. There can be no ruling from me because I have nothing upon which to base it.

I do recollect very distinctly the wording of the motions which established these committees; I think most of us recollect it because of certain events in another session. There is very definite wording to these resolutions and I think all members of the House would do well to look at the wording before this particular discussion goes too much further because the answer may be there.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to put my question to you again.

As the Speaker of this House, who therefore guides the destinies of our actions here, has the government the right to come in and unilaterally rule out of order something that took place in a committee of the Legislature?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking me a theoretical question because, as I have pointed out, there is nothing before this House for the government to rule out of order or for the Speaker to rule upon.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is not theoretical. The Prime Minister has come in and said he has declared it out of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. He has asked me to rule on a point of order. I have done so. He may appeal my ruling if he wishes.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. You declared this to be theoretical. I draw your attention to the fact that the Prime Minister has ruled—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order. If he wishes to appeal my ruling—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, with respect, you are out of order.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member wish to appeal my ruling? If he does, he has the opportunity. If not, the member for Scarborough East has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, it is your obligation to rule—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is out of order and he will resume his seat. I will suspend the hon. member for the rest of this session if he does not resume his seat.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, what was that again?

Mr. Speaker: I said if the hon. member does not wish to observe the rules of this House and the rulings of the Chair by proper means, which is by appealing them, then of course he is not a proper person to be in the House at this time.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have no alternative but to appeal your ruling and my reason is this: It is not possible for you to say that there is a theoretical proposition before this House, because the Prime Minister has come in and declared out of order something that took place which you say theoretically does not exist. I suggest to you that you have a responsibility to exercise your responsibilities as Speaker of this House, and if you are going to walk out from under those responsibilities and in effect stick with the government, let us have it clearly stated.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, if I may.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege if I may.

Mr. Nixon: Does that take precedence, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Oh I think it could.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the member for York South, I have ruled nothing. This is not properly before the House. It should come in under "Reports." I passed a personal point of view and I said that it was our intention—

Mr. MacDonald: If the Premier was out of order, why did he not—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York South knows me well enough—I hate to interrupt him when he is in full flight, so I let him carry on. I hate to interrupt him, Mr. Speaker, but I am just repeating once again that I do not think this whole discussion is in order, but that it is the intention of the government to make the committees of this House meaningful, related to the rules that are set down and we shall do so.

Mr. Nixon: Surely the hon. member for York South is entirely right when he says we must look to you, sir, to order our affairs. With this in mind, may I ask you, before we simply have a partisan division in the House on something of this importance—which is the dependence on the usefulness of the whole standing committee system—that you consider what has been said here, the wording of the resolutions and the statements made by the representatives of the government when they brought forward the committee motion which emphasized the autonomy and the approved usefulness of the committee. Give us your considered opinion at a time when we are not going to be deciding it in the heat of this particular moment.

I ask you, sir, to reserve your judgement in this particular matter, and certainly we would be very glad to hear it and then to consider it at that time.

Mr. Speaker: One thing is quite certain from experience in other sessions of this House: Unless some control can be maintained of what goes on in the House, we might just as well not have sessions. This afternoon is an indication of the resurgence of the view that the Speaker's rulings and the orders of the House and the normal proceedings of the House are not to be observed.

I would point out to the hon. members that this is the oral question period and in my experience in this House since we have had a question period, either written or oral, there has been no determination made in the oral question period of any policy or any order of the House. Therefore, so far as I am concerned, there has been no binding statement, nothing that will affect the operation of a committee or of the House, and in my opinion it cannot be done in the question period because the House is run by its own particular resolutions which come before it.

At the appropriate time, if there is a resolution brought in by the committee—if you wish, by the chairman—or by the Prime Minister or by the member for York South, then that is the time that these matters would be debated. They certainly cannot be settled in the oral question period.

I think that the Leader of the Opposition has a fair proposition which he has placed to me this afternoon. I will be glad, subject to the agreement of the member for York South.

Mr. Nixon: The member was out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I realized that. There cannot be anything except questions in the oral question period.

Mr. Sargent: We cannot even get them, sometimes.

Mr. Speaker: The questions you can get; it is the answers that you have trouble with sometimes, is it not?

If the member for York South is agreeable, we will consider that particular matter closed for the moment. I would take it under advisement, but I would point out that the oral question period is not a period when orders of the House and of the committees are determined. It just could not be.

Mr. MacDonald: I am agreeable, Mr. Speaker, subject to this one reservation; that we have your ruling before 6 o'clock tonight so that we have it for guidance for the committee meetings tomorrow. Surely we are entitled to have the Speaker's ruling in advance of the committee meetings tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are next Wednesday.

Mr. T. Reid (Scarborough East): A supplementary question of the Premier: Did the Premier, the Minister of Education or any member of the cabinet or one of their staff people contact the Clerk of the House, who acts as secretary of the standing committee on human resources, to request that he withdraw his invitation to the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation to appear before the committee next Wednesday morning and to withdraw his invitation to the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education to appear before the standing committee on human resources next Wednesday afternoon?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I can only answer personally. Until this afternoon—perhaps I did not read the press reports that carefully, and I should have—I really did not know that the OSSTF or the institute had been invited, so there have been no instructions.

Mr. Pitman: It was by a motion of the committee.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am not talking about that. I was asked by the member for Scarborough East whether there had been any contact from me or one of the ministers to have this invitation revoked. All I am saying is that until I arrived here this afternoon I did not know that an invitation had been extended; so, Mr. Speaker, quite obviously

I have not contacted anyone to do away with any invitation that has been made.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary—

Mr. T. Reid: I have the floor still!

Does the Prime Minister consider his remarks in the House this afternoon to be in effect an instruction to the chairman and the secretary of that committee to tell the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, who are already preparing a brief for the committee, not to come next Wednesday and the same thing to the Ontario institute?

Mr. MacDonald: Of course they are.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to think I was relatively specific. There was nothing in what I said this afternoon that would in any way instruct the chairman—because I would not instruct the chairman or the secretary of the committee—not to extend the invitation to the OSSTF or to the institute or any other body.

Mr. Nixon: Both sides of the question at the same time.

Mr. Lewis: It is a bad way to start.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, no. We are trying to start the right way.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

A supplementary question? The member for Sudbury East has the floor for a supplementary question.

Mr. Lewis: Not dictating the activities of the committee? Look at the Premier's announcement this afternoon.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): In view of the fact that it states; "which said committee shall be empowered to examine and inquire into all such matters and things as deemed by this House," may I ask what, specifically, the committee on natural resources was to discuss on instruction from this House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I talked to no chairman nor any of the standing committees of this House.

Mr. Martel: Then what was the purpose of meeting yesterday if all the powers must come from the House before we can discuss anything?

Hon. Mr. Davis: To establish the committees.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): The whole day off.

Mr. Nixon: A waste of a whole day.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Will the Prime Minister give consideration—

Mr. Singer: What a place to play politics—in the Legislature. A terrible place!

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Singer: Look at the Minister of Energy—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Will the Prime Minister give consideration to amending the resolution which established the standing committees to give to the standing committees powers, in his discretion, to call before them any persons or groups they desire in the absence of any specific direction from this House?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really am not sure that this entire discussion is in order. It is not my intention to alter the resolution at this precise moment, no.

As I said—and I hope for the last time this afternoon—there will be resolutions introduced referring work to the committee, and I think in a way that even the members opposite, in a very objective way, will agree to.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Now do not try to placate us.

Mr. Ben: In the absence of any direction from this House—in other words in a vacuum—will this House empower these committees to call before them groups or individuals at their discretion?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think it is there now.

Mr. Ben: It would be great if it is not.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question?

Mr. K. C. Bolton (Middlesex South): A supplementary, please: May I ask what were the specific instructions given to the committees for next Wednesday, so we know what we are to deal with rather than wasting nearly 15 minutes of the whole day?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I guess it is now for the seventh time—I said there would be resolutions or motions introduced that would be referring work to the standing committees. This will be done well before next Wednesday.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Prime Minister has wasted years of our time!

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

OSC SUSPENSION OF STOCKBROKERS

Mr. Nixon: A question of the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs: Is he going to undertake an investigation into the circumstances and procedures undertaken by the Ontario Securities Commission in privately suspending two Toronto stockbrokers, and nine months later, arranging for a private appeal on that suspension?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I had not thought of conducting an investigation. I shall certainly make myself aware, Mr. Speaker. If there is any particular point of information the hon. member would like to know, if he will direct the question to that I will endeavour to satisfy him.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary: The thing I am concerned about knowing it, would the minister be prepared to make available a report of his investigations as to why these particular procedures should be carried on in private when the Ontario Securities Commission is specifically established to deal, I had understood, in a public way with the protection of the public?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, it is not my understanding that all investigations of the Ontario Securities Commission have to be conducted in public. I certainly would anticipate that in many of these investigations there are matters which affect the reputations of individuals, matters of business concern, that are not really for public information. I do not know the reason for the delay, if that is the hon. member's point of inquiry. I could find out. I would be glad to do that and answer it.

Mr. Nixon: And to make a report?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: No, I do not say I would necessarily make a report available, because I think many of these reports are not for publication for the reasons I indicated.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): To the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs, through you, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact the promoters involved in this case are Messrs. Feeley and McDermott, of some fame in this city, does the minister not think that the public has a right to be informed of what these gentlemen have done?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: The public, Mr. Speaker, may have a right to a very considerable amount of information. All I have said is that other persons are involved as well as the gentlemen the hon. member named. They might be quite innocent, yet their reputations might be damaged in a serious way—that is their business reputations. I would only say that we will make available to the public the fullest information possible; but I do not for a moment say that the full conduct of the investigation is a matter that I would, at this moment, say should be made public.

Mr. Shulman: A second supplementary, if I may, Mr. Speaker: If, after the conclusion of the hearings, it is found that the other gentlemen involved are found guilty, will the minister then agree to release all the results of the investigation?

Hon. Mr. Wishart: I do not know what the hon. member means by the expression “found guilty.” They may have contravened certain rules of the commission. They may have broken certain regulations under the Act—

Mr. Lewis: That means “not innocent.”

Mr. Simonett: Pinhead, will let you know.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Thanks, I am glad the member has come to that conclusion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: If they are found guilty of an infraction of law for which they can be prosecuted, they will be prosecuted.

An hon. member: “Found guilty,” the minister says?

ODC LOAN PROGRAMME

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I really do not know just how the time is progressing, but I do have one more question of the hon. minister of Trade and Development.

What procedures does he have through ODC to, let us say, police or insist that those companies in receipt of forgivable loans do come up to their minimum requirements in the provision of jobs?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, the machinery is within the corporation—to keep on top of the situation—to make sure that they do. Now if the hon. member is asking me precisely how they go about this I cannot give him that detail, but it seems to me to be relatively simple to keep in touch with the corporation or the company.

Mr. Nixon: A supplementary question: Since it is reported that 20 per cent are in violation of their agreement, then obviously the government is not getting its money's worth out of the money that the Legislature votes for this purpose.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, is the hon. Leader of the Opposition referring to the item which was in the newspaper which claimed that some of them did not live up to their agreement in respect of the number of those who were employed?

Mr. Nixon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, Mr. Speaker, there are some whose intention it was to carry out their agreement and because of the downturn in the economy—because of unemployment generally—some of those people, through no fault of their own, are not able to employ the number they had agreed to. I am sure the hon. member would not suggest that we take punitive action against those companies merely because, through no fault of their own—through the fault of the economy generally—they find that they cannot employ quite the number they agreed to employ in the original instance.

Mr. Nixon: Surely before the minister enters into an agreement they have to have an undertaking on their side? Is there not a concrete, signed undertaking before they get the free money?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is such an agreement, Mr. Speaker. I have discussed this with my officials and my officials advise me that where in their opinion it is not the fault of the company, that it is a matter of conditions generally, where the company is doing everything it can to live up to its commitments, they take this into consideration.

For example, there was a company, I think it was Westinghouse, which did not carry out its commitment in this respect because of actions on its own initiative. They were given a $250,000 loan; the money was demanded back and we got a cheque for it, because through their own actions they did not carry out their commitment.

Mr. Nixon: What about the ones who do not fulfil and do not send the money back? Surely the minister has to take some action?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. member would agree it is reasonable to expect that if a company, for example, has promised to put into effect say 25 jobs immediately because of the assistance it has had from ODC, and it runs into this situation we are in right now, the economy being in the state it is in now, where it can only employ say 20, because its orders have fallen away, because of the economy generally. It is doing whatever it can to live up to its commitments, and as I say through no fault of its own they are unable to do so. We separate those from the companies which have no intention of living up to their agreement. I have pointed out the action we take in those instances.

If the hon. member has any situation where he feels a company has not lived up to its agreement on its own initiative and this particular situation does not occur in that particular instance, I would like to know of it because I would like to investigate it myself.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth has a supplementary?

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes sir. By way of a supplementary, could the minister indicate what form of investigation took place into the reported bankruptcy of Brocair Systems Limited, of Brockville, which received $139,083 in May of 1969? How much of this money has been recovered, or is it the intention of ODC to recover any?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that matter is being looked into at this time.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough has a supplementary?

Mr. Pitman: I have a supplementary. I wonder if the minister would be good enough to give the Legislature, which has voted the money, a list of the companies which are in arrears, which have not carried out their performance, and an indication as to what degree that performance has not been carried out?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will have to be careful in answering that statement. My first intention, Mr. Speaker, is to say of course that it should be the business of the Legislature to know this.

There may very well be—and I am not saying that is the case—there may very well be a situation where it would do the company a great deal of harm in its operation.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Oh, come now, we have heard that. That is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Lewis: It is job money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: All right, do not get excited, I started out—

Mr. J. Renwick: Let the minister tell us he will give us the information.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just a moment!

I started out by saying that, Mr. Speaker. I also added that it is a simple thing merely to say, because it involves public funds, that the public has a right to know everything. When you are the minister and you see what situations may arise if you make some of these things public and you trigger off a situation where there will be more jobs lost because of the—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Now just a moment! Do the members opposite want answers to their questions or do they not? I will sit down and not bother answering if that is the way they feel about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it seems reasonable to me. I am not saying, Mr. Speaker, that I know of any such situation, but I am attempting to be honest with the members of the House. It just does occur to me that quite possibly the credit of a company may be impaired, its operations may be impaired, and obviously we would be blamed as a government if we made public information which would trigger off more unemployment. Now that is all I am saying.

If the hon. member has any specific situation in mind I will look at it and find out if—

Mr. Lewis: Yes, what about the statements which were made by the minister's director. Those are the specific situations.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I guess they do not want an answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Scarborough West a further supplementary?

The member for Wentworth has the floor, has he a further supplementary?

Mr. Deans: Yes sir, a supplementary: Might I ask the minister whether in the instance that I mentioned he intends to make that information available to the House?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It seems ridiculous to ask a question supplementary to an answer which I was not able to give! Now if hon. members want to hear me give them a reply and ask a supplementary question, I would be glad to consider it, but I was not able to give the reply to the last question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East has a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question to the minister: Has the managing director—Mr. Etchen, I believe—submitted his resignation to the minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, he has not, Mr. Speaker, and I have not heard of that before either. I would think that under the circumstances it was not a very nice question to ask.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, it was not. The hon. member is implying something wrong with a civil servant who is employed by my department. If the member has anything to say about that let him get up and say it. Why does he not get up and say it if he thinks he should resign?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. T. Reid: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. My question was, "Has Mr. Etchen, the present managing director and vice-chairman, submitted his resignation?" I object, sir, on a point of personal privilege, to the minister accusing me of criticizing a civil servant.

I did not ask the minister whether they are going to fire him, I asked whether that gentleman had submitted a resignation because he cannot stomach the minister's policies.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Cannot stomach our policies? What does the member mean by that?

Mr. Speaker: Order! The member for Scarborough West has the floor for a supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Along with all the other information he is tabling, would the minister table the names of the 13 companies for which subsidies have been cancelled because they did not proceed with their announced intention to build or expand their plants?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will take that under advisement, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Huron-Bruce has a supplementary?

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wondered if the minister could give the House any indication as to whether the ODC is giving these companies which are in arrears additional time; and if so how much additional time?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have not any such information. I will be glad to get it for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Has the member for Peterborough a further supplementary?

Then the member for Scarborough West has the floor for questions.

COST OF EDUCATION

Mr. Lewis: A question of the Premier, Mr. Speaker: I am not sure I caught all of the Premier's statements before orders of the day. Did he announce that Dr. McCarthy would be undertaking a one-man commission into the cost of education in the Province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, Mr. Speaker, I did not announce that. I announced that Dr. McCarthy would be involved with the royal commission on book publishing and that he would also be related to the question of an assessment of costs and many other aspects, the terms of which will be announced by the Minister of Education very shortly.

Mr. Lewis: By way of a supplementary, did the Premier cast Dr. McCarthy in a specific role in relation to this question of costs?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker. He will be part of a study group that will be making this assessment—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is very specific.

Mr. Lewis: By way of supplementary—

Hon. Mr. Davis: —the details of which, Mr. Speaker, I said in the statement, will be announced by the Minister of Education.

Mr. Lewis: What is the habitual pattern of first Dr. Wright and now Dr. McCarthy, to analyze the costs of the system over which they themselves have presided? Is there not some value of an independent look at the costs of the system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the first point that needs to be made is that Dr. Wright, who is the chairman of the commission on post-secondary education—

Mr. Lewis: Sure! The government knows what happened to that commission.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right. It has done very well.

Mr. Lewis: It was quarrelling internally and the Premier stepped in. The hon. minister knows it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the commission is not quarrelling internally. It has done a very excellent amount of work and will continue to do so, no question whatsoever. He has not been—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: For the member for Scarborough West to say that Dr. Wright has been presiding over the university system, of course, is a statement of non-fact.

Mr. Lewis: When the Premier was Minister of Education was he not Deputy Minister of Education?

An hon. member: Dr. Wright was the chairman.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed, literally amazed, that the member for Scarborough West is so ill-informed. I am talking about Dr. Wright who has always been chairman of the committee on university affairs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I will go back to the question I asked. Was Dr. McCarthy not involved as deputy minister in the educational system?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, Dr. McCarthy most certainly was involved.

Mr. Lewis: Right. Then I take it that the hon. minister has again appointed the most senior official in the related area to examine the costs over which the hon. minister himself officiated through the years of his tenure?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, there are very few men in this province who are more qualified than Dr. McCarthy.

Mr. J. Renwick: We understand that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Right.

Mr. Lewis: Like the Minister of Justice and Attorney General, the Premier feels wounded about the persecution of his civil servants.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I never feel wounded.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is why Dr. Band is chairman of the review board of the welfare system of the province.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary question.

Mr. Pitman: I realize the Premier will be giving further details, but could he indicate whether there will be open hearings and open submissions in relation to this investigation into the costs of education being directed, or at least related, to Dr. McCarthy's role?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the statement made it very clear that Dr. McCarthy would be related to it. Of course there will be submissions, open hearings and everything else.

Mr. T. Reid: A supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: A supplementary, the member for—

Mr. Lewis: And "everything else." What is everything else?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. Only those things that are associated with—

Mr. J. Renwick: Et cetera.

Mr. Pitman: I do not want to impinge on the Prime Minister further. Would the hon. minister indicate what kind of a staff will be assigned to Dr. McCarthy and the degree of detail and the length of time this will take, and the exact nature of this investigation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will get a copy of the statement to the member for Peterborough. I said in the statement that the details of this would be announced to the members of this House by the Minister of Education very shortly.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Scarborough East has a supplementary?

Mr. T. Reid: Will Dr. McCarthy continue in his position as Deputy Minister of Education while he is evaluating the education system? If so, will there be any witness when he interviews himself?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I recognize the very sarcastic and facetious tone of the latter part of the question.

Mr. Singer: Very clever.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, it is.

Mr. Lewis: The Premier is discerning.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am discerning, and once again I am quite amazed, because in my statement, Mr. Speaker, relating to the committee on government productivity, I very specifically stated that one Dr. E. E. Stewart was to become the new Deputy Minister of Education. I guess the answer to the question is really very self-evident.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): It is hard to tell.

Mr. T. Reid: By way of supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will Dr. McCarthy, who is going to investigate the costs of education, be interviewing the former Deputy Minister of Education concerning his policies over the last few years?

Mr. Speaker: This is quite a facetious and out-of-order question. The member for Scarborough West has the floor.

Mr. Lewis: It is not out of order. It shows how preposterous it is. The same kind of thing that happened in the committee yesterday. That is what the Premier has done. Just another avenue.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not at all!

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT PURCHASES

Mr. Lewis: I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests, if I may, Mr. Speaker. When the minister's department acquired the land in Caledon Township as part of its acquisition of Niagara Escarpment property, how much, at that point—I think it is within the last month—had been purchased by the government of the original recommendations in the Gertler report?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): I would be pleased, Mr. Speaker, to take this question as notice and provide the information tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: Right. Could I then ask, by way of supplementary, if information is to be proffered—

Mr. Speaker: I think it is not proper, by way of supplementary, because there has been no answer given. Another question, perhaps?

Mr. Lewis: I have a further question then. Thank you for correcting me.

Would the minister indicate whether the land was purchased by Caledon Mountain Estates in July and August, 1969, at $763 an acre and then resold to the government in early 1971 at $1,450 an acre, and if in fact that is so, why did the government cost the taxpayers an extra $300,000 for the acquisition of that land when the Gertler report was in their hands at the beginning of 1968?

Mr. Breithaupt: Who are Caledon Estates? Is that the Minister of Justice?

Mr. Sopha: It is public money.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to reply to that at the same time.

Mr. Sopha: The former Prime Minister never used to get into that trouble.

Mr. Speaker: The oral question period has now expired.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (London North): That is not what the member told me then.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. B. Gilbertson (Algoma): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member a bill? Yes; well after the government bills are introduced, then private bills are introduced by members.

REAL ESTATE AND BUSINESS BROKERS ACT

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendments in this bill is to permit loan corporations registered under The Loan and Trust Corporations Act to be registered under The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act. Last year, both the federal legislation and our own Provincial Loan and Trust Corporations Act were amended to permit loan companies to have real estate operations. These amendments bring The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act into agreement with the legislation already passed by this House.

TIMOTHY INVESTMENTS LIMITED

Mr. Gilbertson moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act respecting Timothy Investments Limited.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

HUMAN TISSUE ACT, 1962-1963

Mr. Burr moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act to amend The Human Tissue Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Speaker, the amendment permits the use of a donor's body, without the authorization of next of kin where he dies outside of hospital. The amendments permit the use of a body of a person who is not a donor to be authorized by the nearest class of next of kin who are available, notwithstanding that persons in a closer relationship exist that are not available.

THUNDER BAY FOUNDATION

Mr. Meen moves first reading of bill intitled, An Act respecting the Thunder Bay Foundation.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: Before the orders of the day, there is a matter that last week was raised in the House. The hon. member for Riverdale asked me to have research done to disclose whether it could be said to be a practice of this House that ministers of the Crown be not included in the membership of the standing committees. This has now been done and I am pleased to share with the members the interesting results of such research.

In 1946 the membership of ministers on standing committees was quite large; 12 on each of two committees; 10 on two others, nine on four, eight on one and four on two. It is to be noted that the Prime Minister of the day was a member of all standing committees.

This practice and pattern continued for some years and it is interesting that in 1949 when the standing committee on privileges and elections was very active, it was under the chairmanship of the hon. Leslie M. Frost, the Treasurer.

In 1950 there appeared to be some effort to reduce the size of the committees. However, the number of cabinet ministers on such committees was still very high; only two having as few as two ministers and several having six and seven. The Prime Minister of the day was on two committees.

In more recent times it is to be noted that the number of committees had grown to 17 and that there were still as many as six and seven ministers on several of the committees. Moreover, the number of ministers on the other committees actually appeared to have increased since 1950.

It was in the session of 1964 that the practice of omitting most ministers from the committees started. I am advised that the reason for this was that the committees were smaller and the striking committee felt that the ministers, who might find difficulty in attending because of their workload, should give place to the private members who were anxious to serve. However, this was certainly not consistent practice as ministers have served on committees from time to time since that date.

No foundation can be found for the contention that it is a common parliamentary practice to omit ministers from membership on committees. It is obvious that in jurisdictions where the balance between the government side and the opposition is close it would be impossible for the government party to man the committees if ministers were excluded.

It is interesting to observe that in Manitoba it is not only the practice to include ministers on committees in the present closely balanced Legislature, but in fact this has always been a practice since the creation of the province. An even more interesting practice is that in the past almost all standing committees in Manitoba have been chaired by members of the cabinet; and in the present Parliament this practice continues, at least with the committee charged with legal affairs which is chaired by the Attorney General.

It seems to be the antithesis of our parliamentary system to suggest that ministers should not be on committees. Under our system they are chosen from among the members of the House so that they will be responsive and responsible to the House, and to bar them from one of the most important functions of the House would be inconsistent. It must be remembered that the ministers have a dual function and that as members of the assembly they have the same duties, rights and privileges as all other members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, just one thing with regard to the statement you have just given to the House: In fixing on the date of 1946 as the first date in which that happened, do I conclude correctly that that was the first occasion in which ministers became involved in committees of the Legislature?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised by the Clerk, who of course is very knowledgeable in these matters, and what I was about to have said myself was that 1946 seemed to be a reasonable time—25 years or so back—and the research was started then. But there have been many cases in the past—in fact I have looked them up myself—where ministers have been on committees. Therefore, it is not a recent development within the period of the administration, or at least of the party which has formed the government since that time.

Mr. MacDonald: Since 1946?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, by way of a further point of information, I am rather curious as to the references to the government of Manitoba being the criteria by which this Legislature is governed in determination of such a question. Would it by any chance be influenced by the fact that there is a New Democratic Party government in the province of Manitoba at the present time?

Mr. Speaker: I thought that the hon. member would be interested in what our sister province is doing, and particularly since the question came from a member of that party, I thought he would be interested in knowing what practice his party, in power, followed. I was sure the other members would be interested in that also.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on another point of information: As I understand the standing orders of this House at the present time, if there is any question of custom that has to be decided, reference will be made not only to the custom of this House but also to the custom of the Parliament at Ottawa. I am interested to know—

Mr. Singer: He is at his pettifogging best again today.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am interested to know whether or not in the Parliament at Ottawa, in the House of Commons, it is customary for ministers to be members of the standing committees of that House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that there are many ways for the member to find that out. As far as I am concerned, the practice in this House has been the tradition which we follow, and if the traditions are not here and the facts are not here, then we go elsewhere. In this case we do not need to go elsewhere. But as a matter of information, and as I said in order to let the member know what the party he represents is doing and let the hon. members know, I included the Manitoba reference.

This is not to become a debate. If the hon. member wishes to have further research made I am sure the Clerk will arrange it for him and provide the necessary information.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if I may just, on this particular statement, make the position of this party perfectly clear, the subject of such further research, as Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order! This is not a place for a debate.

The hon. member asked for certain information. I have tried to give it to him. Now if he is not satisfied with it that is fine; I have done the best that I think I can do under the circumstances. I will be glad to provide additional information if he wishes it, but this is not the place to debate it.

If he wishes to make a submission that he wants some additional information I am sure that the Clerk's Office, which is the main research office for this House, will be glad to undertake it. Now does he wish to ask for certain other information?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I certainly wish to ask for certain other information, and subject to such further research as Mr. Speaker may have available to him for the purposes of informing this House, and subject of course to this party forming a minority government—in which case it would have to take advantage of the opportunity of appointing certain ministers—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question.

Mr. J. Renwick: —to the standing committee of the Legislature—I would certainly say that in our view the evolution of the parliamentary system would indicate that the practice of appointing ministers of the Crown is a policy which should now cease.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a speech now. If he wants further information and will ask me for it, I will try to see it is provided.

Mr. J. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Singer: Oh the hon. member is not going to subside like that even if he is out of order.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we might have a little recess here and have something a little more pleasant because it will give us the time to recoup ourselves. Before the orders of the day, as has been my custom when one group of legislative pages has been about to leave, I wish to draw to the attention of the members of the House the names and home ridings of those pages who now serve us. These boys will be leaving us tomorrow, although the girls will be serving for a further period.

Those who are now completing their tour of duty are as follows:

Ian Barr of Toronto, from the riding of Eglinton; Paul Figueroa of Toronto, from the riding of Eglinton; John Free of Whitby, from the riding of Ontario South; Peter Frise of Richmond Hill, from the riding of York Centre; Peter Grespan of Kitchener, from the riding of Kitchener; Jim Irwin of Dunnville, from the riding of Haldimand-Norfolk; Robert Kyle of Port Hope, from the riding of Durham; Khan Majid of Scarborough, from the riding of Scarborough East; Jeff Marshall of Bay Ridges, from the riding of Ontario South; George Morrison of Thunder Bay, from the riding of Fort William; John Newcomb of Elliot Lake, from the riding of Algoma-Manitoulin; David O'Brien of Peterborough, from the riding of Peterborough; Brian Paul of Willowdale, from the riding of York Mills; Scott Payne of Iroquois, from the riding of Grenville-Dundas; Anson Quon of Toronto from the riding of St. Andrew-St. Patrick; Robbie Sagar of Scarborough from the riding of Scarborough West; Kent Sheridan of Scarborough from the riding of Scarborough North; Jack Siegel of Toronto from the riding of York-Forest Hill; Raymond Stericker of Scarborough from the riding of Scarborough Centre; Mark Stevens of Morrisburg from the riding of Grenville-Dundas; Cary Watson of Toronto from the riding of St. David; Kevin Wells of Etobicoke from the riding of York West.

I think perhaps some day, if we live long enough, we may see some of these young people back here occupying the seats we have had and indicating, as they did in their mock Parliament the other day, how well they can manage the affairs of the province.

The hon. member for Scarborough West on a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: I have a point of order, Mr. Speaker, which I am purposely raising now because I was not sure whether I should interrupt the proceedings before. I hope you will grant me the indulgence.

I would like you to explain to me if possible, sir, why it is that the chairman of the human resources committee, before whom a specific resolution was passed yesterday, has no report to make to the House indicating the content of that resolution today, since he is now in his place in the House.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, when a major resolution is passed by committee, or several resolutions, for subsequent debate by members of the House in the very context which was put to us earlier by the Premier, it is a simple matter of custom for the chairman of the committee to inform the House.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): No, it is not!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know whether the chairman wishes to speak to the matter. It is quite in order as far as I am concerned, but in the first place I have no way of dealing with it as Speaker of the House because the committee is a law unto itself within the authority delegated to it. It would seem to me that the next move would be for the committee to have the report presented, and if the chairman does not present it then I presume the vice-chairman or a member can do so.

Secondly, of course I presume the motion is duly recorded in the minutes of the committee and eventually it will come before the House. But until something comes, there is not very much Mr. Speaker can do about it.

Mr. Lewis: Well, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, if I may.

Mr. Lewis: Well, go ahead.

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, I feel it is very important that Mr. Speaker consider these matters. As I recall the functioning of the committee in the past, it has often happened, or has happened in my experience, that the committee would undertake to invite people to appear before them and undertake certain other things without reporting it to the House. Also it was the custom—and I think it would be required—to report to the House on duties and matters assigned to it by the House.

That is the whole problem that we have here, since the Premier has stated—and Mr.

Speaker is going to examine it, I hope—that the committee can do nothing that is not sent to it formally by the House, and then of course it would have to make a formal report back. But certainly there have been instances—and the old standing committee on education is a good case in point—where expenditures were entered into—we went out from this House to examine matters in other parts of the province, we entered into decisions to call people before us in order to get their views—without getting permission or reporting back to the House specifically at all.

Mr. Lewis: I agree.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, by way of speaking to this point of order, it seems to me the dilemma we faced a few moments ago, which caused some tensions between myself and yourself, is now right out on the table.

Your comment, sir, was that there was nothing officially before the House because we got no report from the committee. Now if the committee is not supposed to report back, then nothing will ever be before the House. It seems to me, sir, this is another area where if there are going to be debates and the kind of differences of opinion that have emerged earlier this afternoon, then somebody should say to the committees—and I suggest, sir, it might be your prerogative—that there should be a report back.

I grant that the Leader of the Opposition is correct: We are moving into a new kind of straitjacket. It used to be that the committee could summon people by resolution—they could do lots of things by resolution—and now, presumably, like little boys, we have got to come back to teacher and get approval before we do it.

Those presumably are the new rules under which we are operating. But if those are the rules then let us live up to them, and after every meeting everything that we have done will have to come back to this House and be approved before we can proceed further.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, could I ask—if it is not presuming too much—whether the chairman of the committee wished to say anything to the House about the matter.

Mr. Speaker: Well, this may or may not be a debate, and if it is a debate then of course the hon. member has spoken once and he would be out of order.

Mr. Lewis: I was on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: But is it a debate on a point of order? All I wish to say to this, and particularly to the hon. member for York South—and I have already asked the chairman if he wished to speak—is that this, I think, is the proper place for the matter to be raised, or when the order for reports was called—not in the question period.

I quite agree that it is something that should be brought before the House, and I think it is now properly before the House and the Speaker, and I certainly now have no hesitation in saying that I will try to look into the matter and see if it falls within the Speaker's jurisdiction to do anything. The Speaker, of course, is ruled by the majority of the House, and he always has that dilemma.

But this is the proper time, in my opinion—either now or when motions were called—for this matter to be dealt with, not in the oral question time.

Mr. O. F. Villeneuve (Glengarry): Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make at this time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order—

Mr. Singer: “No comment” point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Well, on another point of order, Mr. Speaker. Because there was no report from that committee chairman at this stage of our proceedings, I am inclined to think that the committee chairman was instructed by the Premier to say nothing during the course of the proceedings this afternoon—

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe East): That is not so.

Mr. Lewis:—and that the committee chairman should at least have had the courtesy to indicate—

Mr. Speaker: What is the point of order?

Mr. Lewis: Well, I am coming to the point of order. I am stating the point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member should come to the point of order.

Mr. Lewis: The committee chairman should have the courtesy to inform the House of the resolution which was passed in order that the House may judge, rather than the Premier unilaterally judging, whether or not it was out of order. What right has the Premier to—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is now making a speech and is out of order.

Mr. Lewis: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, my contention is that the Premier has no right to take unto himself whether or not matters of committee are out of order, that you have no right to acquiesce in his presumption to usurp the Speaker's authority in the Legislature, and that the chairman of the committee has equally been intimidated by the proceedings today and yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Waterloo South.

Mr. A. E. Reuter (Waterloo South): Mr. Speaker, if I might speak to the point of order. It seems to me that we are governed by the standing orders of the House insofar as committee procedures are concerned, and surely the notices of the committee indicated it was purely an organizational meeting. Since there was nothing referred to the committee for consideration, I fail to understand how any report could be made.

Mr. MacDonald: Well that is a real hamstrung—

Mr. Pitman: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, it would seem to me—

Interjections by hon. members.

M. Pitman: It would seem to me that the major problem which we have here is the fact that the scheduling of committee meetings has changed drastically. Apparently we are going to meet once a week, on Wednesdays. It would seem to me that Mr. Speaker might well take into consideration the responsibility of seeing that reports emanate from that Wednesday meeting and appear in this House by Thursday so that the members of that committee will know where they are going on the following Wednesday. It seems to me that the new scheduling of these meetings makes this especially incumbent upon the Speaker.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order and on the previous point of order, that government members of the committee did partake in the vote and certainly did not indicate at the time that they did not regard it as a constitutional meeting of that committee, and did not indicate that they were not prepared to go further than regarding it as an organizational meeting. They remained in the meeting, they passed several motions, and it seems rather strange indeed that government members should be prepared now to look upon this as a non-meeting and everything that took place as a virtual denigration of the duties of that committee.

Mr. Makarchuk: They have had their wrists slapped.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): The member should know better than that.

Mr. Speaker: I have already said that I would be pleased to look into the matter and see if there is anything that lies within Mr. Speaker's power to deal with the matters which have been raised by the opposition. I also am very much aware of the rules of the House as quoted by the Deputy Speaker and also by others here today.

Orders of the day.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves second reading of Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Speaker, I would be guided by your direction in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. minister may speak first and he may reply, and close the debate; or he may wait and speak last and close the debate.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: With that advice, sir, I would like to say that in my opinion—and I am sure the opinion is shared by our department and the government of Ontario—the ultimate solution to the problems of international or interprovincial agricultural trade and supply management must be found at national level. We believe that Bill C-176, the national marketing bill now before the House of Commons, provides the legislative machinery whereby this national rationalization of production and marketing can be realized.

When I appeared before the standing committee on agriculture of the House of Commons meeting here in Toronto on January 25 last, I supported the principle of national marketing legislation. I continue to support that principle. I believe many of the problems now facing our industry in Ontario, in Quebec, in Manitoba and in fact in most of the provinces of Canada would not have occurred—

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order!

Might I ask the minister before he gets too far on in this debate, if in fact Bill 10 is intended to add a new subsection, a new section 12*b*, or if it should not have meant adding a subsection 12*b* to section 8, because in reading it I have had difficulty in reconciling it. Now it may be he means it as it is printed or it may be he made an error.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer. My legal adviser is here, one of the solicitors from the department is here and—

Mr. Singer: I think it is most material to the debate if somewhere along the line, very shortly, we could get the answer.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if I may continue. I suggest that had the national marketing legislation now before the House of Commons been in effect, in my opinion the problems we now face across Canada would not have occurred, as far as inter-provincial marketing problems are concerned.

Now as I understand it the national bill, Bill C-176, will be introduced for third reading in the House of Commons in the very near future. I am advised by the office of the Minister of Agriculture of Canada that the bill has passed the standing committee on agriculture stage, has been returned to the House and will be proceeded with.

When it is passed it will provide the legislative authority at national level, but it must be complemented and supplemented by an exchange of power with the provinces. Here, Mr. Speaker, I wish to assert that I have assured the office of the federal Minister of Agriculture that we in Ontario will introduce the necessary amendments to our Farm Products Marketing Act to bring it in line with the national legislation, to provide for the reciprocal exchange of the necessary legislative powers.

Mr. Speaker, having said that, I believe that the urgency of the situation which we now face in the province of Ontario makes it imperative that we move on the passage of this bill, which I now present for second-reading consideration of the House. This matter has been brought to our attention because of certain infractions against the regulation provided by the Broiler Chicken Producers Marketing Board, implemented last September 3. The Broiler Chicken Producers Marketing Board of Ontario had little trouble enforcing its regulations until just recently.

As a matter of fact, within the last few days, they found that there were certain individuals who would not adhere to the market permit regulation. I think it only fair to say that those who do not adhere to this regulation will have a distinct advantage over those who do. It seems to me that if we are going to have legislation we must have legislation that is effective for all to live under. I do not think we can make fish of one and flesh of another.

I think we must have uniformity in this particular regard. This is why I have brought forward this legislation, fully realizing that we recognize the powers that are contained in the national bill. We believe that that is the ultimate solution. We have no assurance as to when that bill will pass the House of Commons; and even if it were to pass, I believe the necessary hearings that will be required to be held in getting the legislative machinery in operation, the regulations in operation, that it is quite conceivable that many months might elapse.

With regard to hearings that might be held before the Supreme Court of Canada, I cannot give any assurance as to when that will happen. We have heard rumours there is no possibility the hearing can take place before sometime next fall. In the meantime, with the threat of wholesale introduction of broiler chickens into the Province of Ontario from outside of this province, I believe the welfare of the broiler chicken producers within the Province of Ontario is at stake.

In this instance I beg the favourable consideration of the House, Mr. Speaker, through you, for the passage of the legislation in second reading; and I would hope that it would pass third reading and be given royal assent as quickly as possible.

Mr. Singer: Does the minister have an answer to the point of order?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My solicitor advises me that it was clearly intended to add a new section as section 12*b*.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, perhaps pertaining to the point of order and the minister's answers to my colleague from Downsview, we will have more to say about that, but we have certainly examined the bill very carefully indeed. As a farmer myself I can tell you, sir, that I am aware of the problems that the primary food producers in this province are facing.

As a matter of fact, we attempted to raise these problems in what amounted to a supply debate on the second day of the session. I felt at that time the problems should have been given more substantial consideration by members on all sides of the House.

You may recall, sir, that our amendment at that time was voted down by the Conservatives in support of the administration, as well as the NDP. There is a feeling, I think by too many people, not only in this House but in the community of Ontario, that the welfare of the agricultural producer is something of even tertiary importance, political and otherwise. I think it is a good thing that this debate comes along at this time when we perhaps can examine at least some of the details specifically referred to by the hon. minister in his presentation of the bill for second reading.

It is not my intention to spend much time on the history of the development of this interprovincial warfare, which has come to be known as the "egg and chicken war." But the minister knows that for the past four years there has been an escalation of the competition among provinces, particularly those of the primary producing provinces that want to expand their markets among the consumers in other provinces.

This is true not only of chickens and eggs, but of beef and hogs, tobacco to some limited extent, and certain other products.

I think it was in Regina in 1968 that the Ministers of Agriculture, including the minister of Ontario, and officials of the various departments as well as those people concerned with the egg industry met in order to discuss their common problems. At that time the consensus was that national legislation was the best answer.

We of course, have marketing legislation assisting our primary producers of eggs and other products in this province, but obviously when it comes to interprovincial trade there are terrible difficulties, constitutional and otherwise. There are national difficulties in exerting provincial controls, particularly to the exclusion of markets outside our provincial boundaries, but not outside our national boundaries.

A further discussion took place among the ministers in November, 1968, and it was decided that the problems associated with eggs were definitely as important as for other products—broilers, chicken and turkey evidently, hogs and tobacco and other products that could be mentioned. This culminated in March 1970, with the introduction in the Parliament of Canada of Bill 197.

I think it is unfortunate that the bill did not proceed to proclamation. Parliament adjourned without final disposition. There was substantial objection from among those members, particularly from the western part of Canada, who have never felt that they could accept this sort of marketing legislation with their views of free enterprise and agricultural development. I think there was a time in this province when there was much sympathy for that attitude, but we have come a long way since then and we do not feel that our rights have been unduly trespassed upon by legislation.

There are always complaints, certainly, but as a primary producer myself I have examined the area of controls in the milk field and have felt that our marketing system in that particular area is working as well as could be expected. But now we find that the problems we are facing, particularly with the Province of Quebec, are escalating to the point that sometimes we are losing if not our objectivity at least some of our good judgement.

It is true that the federal legislation was reintroduced this year as Bill C-176. As the minister has already said, it has had approval in principle and has had detailed discussion in committee over a long period of time and has been reported from committee to the House.

The minister is correct when he says there is no way of knowing when it will be approved by third reading. It will be considered by the Senate, would get royal assent and would become the law of the nation. There are those who feel that this could be accomplished before the end of next month, but there is no way of saying for sure. However, this bill has been delayed for a good long period of time.

The minister and anyone else interested in the agricultural industry knows the source of the delay and I need not refer to it in any particular here. All we know is that the legislation has been before Parliament for two years and it has now received approval in principle and has been reported by the standing agricultural committee.

During this period of time the Province of Quebec, having some substantial difficulties with both the egg and the broiler market has brought forward its own legislation. It has developed an organization called FEDCO which has substantial powers to control marketing in that province. Egg marketing is their main responsibility because they have found that this province, producing a surplus of eggs, has found it to its advantage to use Quebec as an additional market for this product from here.

On the other hand, the province of Quebec has tremendously expanded the production of broilers largely, I think, not in the hands of the independent farmers, but it is mostly the major feed companies which have been involved in this, as in fact they are more and more in the Province of Ontario. Sometimes, we think that we are talking about the little farmer on the concession and how he is going to be affected, and we find the net results of our deliberations and regulations are perhaps more to the concern of the large feed companies than in any other area.

A part of this matter, of course, was that the regulations brought in under Quebec legislation were tested in the Supreme Court of that province and upheld. This is already a part of the discussion that took place in the previous question period in the Legislature here a few days ago. Similar regulations, in fact in some particulars identical regulations, passed under the authority of the government of Manitoba, were rejected, however, by the Supreme Court of that province and there is now—

Mr. Singer: And the Court of Appeal

Mr. Nixon: And the Court of Appeal, the member is right.

There is now pending an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. Certainly there is a tremendous division in the views of our eminent judges at the provincial level, waiting for, I suppose you would call it, the supreme decision of the national court. The minister opposite knows that in fact what we are attempting to do here this afternoon may in the future be judged illegal or beyond the powers of this Legislature. But he, in his presentation, has said that he intends to go forward in spite of that very real possibility. I think Mr. Speaker, it would be useful if I read you the judgement of Mr. Justice J. A. Dickson, delivered in Manitoba in this particular reference. I quote:

I hold the view the proposed legislation is bad on the grounds it infringes the exclusive federal power given by section 91 (2) of The British North America Act. It is not within section 92 of The British North America Act and would have the effect of impeding the free flow of trade between the provinces, and therefore runs counter to the section 121 of The British North America Act. Clearly, if a province can effectively prohibit the entry of eggs, it can prohibit anything else, any other product of farm or factory inevitably leading to the disappearance of a truly national economy.

That certainly is a strong and effective statement of one side of the argument. The minister, I think, in his presentation here has upheld the other side but we are not concerned with that approach. We are concerned with the protection of our own farmers. That means that this is essentially a sensitive subject indeed because we have to recognize that this minister, as Minister of Agriculture and Food of Ontario, must consider that as an important responsibility and he must also take a broader view.

I, for one, have often felt that Ontario must lead the other provinces in a moderate and judicial approach to legislation which the minister knows is certainly examined, if not copied, by other jurisdictions. The approach that he is taking through this legislation will undoubtedly lead to further escalations in what has become a trade war among the provinces, and particularly between Ontario and Quebec.

There have been reported threats, and there is no other word that can be used, on the part of the Minister of Agriculture in the Province of Quebec that if Ontario proceeds with this restrictive legislation—the powers to seize and impound and destroy if necessary—he will be forced to take similar steps to protect the egg industry in Quebec. This is what we are facing. The minister raises his eyebrows. He perhaps knows of no particular statement on the part of the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec in this regard, but we can only go by what his reported words are in the responsible press; not only of this city but in farm journals in Canada.

It surely would be the role of this Minister of Agriculture and Food and this government to provide a different form of leadership than that which is inherent in this bill—the kind of leadership which could convene a meeting of the Ministers of Agriculture and the Minister of Agriculture for Canada, maybe just the three who are directly concerned with this problem; or a broader conference if need be, in order to try to calm down the rising feelings on the part of the farm community, and particularly among the Ministers of Agriculture who have the same responsibilities that the minister sitting opposite exercises at this present time.

There are these alternatives: that we are not satisfied on this side that there has been proper communication; that we are convinced that federal legislation will contain within itself the power to solve this problem and that it may very well be available within a few short weeks. For this reason we feel there were alternatives to this course of action open to the Minister of Agriculture and Food of Ontario.

Certainly if he was going to regard this as a Canadian rather than simply as his responsibility in this province, it could have been and should have been his responsibility to take an initiative other than this—to go to Quebec again if necessary, or to Ottawa, or to any other place and meet with his opposite numbers in the other provinces who feel the pressure rising upon them.

Now we know that the economy of the farm community is in as serious a situation as it has been for many years. The price of eggs is precisely the same as it was in 1931 and the minister opposite knows in detail where the break-even price lies. I have referred to this in my remarks previously in the House on the no-confidence vote that we brought before you a few days ago, Mr. Speaker.

We know that hog producers and others are facing the kind of problem that seems to be insoluble, where they have followed all of the advice of the experts representing the minister's economic branch, the experts in the extension branch and from the University of Guelph, the Ontario Agricultural College. They have consolidated their lands; they have concentrated on one form of production, whether it be eggs or broilers or beef; and still they are facing almost insurmountable problems.

Many of them have loans from the Industrial Development Bank of Canada or farm loans at the federal level which has given them a commitment to a process which in fact they now find does not return them sufficient funds even to meet their day-to-day payments. This in the face of the fact that their feed bills went up by an average of $1 per ton per month over the last many months.

These are the problems they face, and the minister and I and others in the House are as aware of them as anyone. But surely there has to be an approach of co-operation among the provinces rather than the exclusive exertion of these very extraordinary rights and powers which are requested in the legislation which is before us.

We feel that the minister has acted precipitately. We feel he had alternatives in negotiation which he has not examined and that there are alternatives in legislation at the federal level which can and should be expedited. We hope that they may be and will be. For these reasons we cannot support the legislation as it presently is.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member—I have been following his speech with interest—what are those suggestions at the federal level that can be implemented now? What are they? The hon. member says there are things we can do at the federal level.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly one of the suggestions—and I have particularly tried to avoid this—is for the Conservatives at the federal level to stop impeding the legislation. That is precisely—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: We are getting the catcalls from the member for York North (Mr. W. Hodgson) up in the back seat. He knows, specifically, that this legislation has been in limbo for many weeks because, specifically, of the Conservative opposition to the legislation which his own minister here in the province has said specifically he supports. That is what is holding it up.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Do not blame the Conservatives in Ottawa. Blame the majority in Ottawa.

Mr. Nixon: I would suggest to the hon. member who is interjecting—

Mr. W. Hodgson: If they want to pass the bill, all they have got to do is pass it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, that may be the way the Conservatives in Ontario like to do democratic business but it is not the way the government of Canada proceeds, and the hon. member should know it.

This, of course, is the alternative, but even ahead of that there is the leadership of the Minister of Agriculture and Food here, who is one of, I would say the senior minister of Agriculture—is he not?—across Canada in point of tenure.

The hon. minister has met these men as they have come and gone over a number of years. I would say, Mr. Speaker, that these provinces have looked to Ontario for leadership in this area. For us to respond with this kind of legislation, I feel, is inadequate. There are no other words that can be applied. It is inadequate. It does not meet the needs of the farm community of Canada and, I suspect, it will not meet the needs of the farm community of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, there are the alternatives that I have put before you. There is serious criticism of this type of approach, phrased in the report that Mr. McRuer has written, which the hon. colleague of the Minister of Agriculture and Food is reading at this time and which my colleague from Downsview will bring to your attention.

I feel that it must be a matter of careful consideration before this House approves the legislation which is brought before it. It may very well be that when negotiations reach an impasse we will have to have this sort of regulation and power. It may be that, if the delays at the federal level—and we know the cause of those delays—are continued, then action in this Legislature will be necessary. But action right now is precipitate. I think it is ill-considered. I do not believe it is in the best interest of Canadians or even of those Canadians who make their living as farmers.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the member for Downsview that Bill 10 be read a second time on this day six months hence.

Mr. K. C. Bolton (Middlesex South): Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party have examined this bill very carefully. We recognize the urgency that has been—

Mr. Speaker: Order please!

I have an amendment to the motion which has to be put.

Mr. Nixon moves, seconded by Mr. Singer, that Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act, be read a second time on this day six months hence.

Mr. Bolton: Mr. Speaker, we in the New Democratic Party have examined this bill thoroughly. We recognize the urgency of the problem. We believe that this bill does not meet the needs of the day.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked the minister a number of questions which provoked an answer which surprised me. I asked when the bill would be brought forward. I also asked if he would, in presenting the bill, give us the comparative figures of what is exported into Quebec compared to what we import from Quebec.

The reason, of course, this question was asked was that this is, basically, a problem between Ontario and Quebec, with a suggestion that Quebec may wish to retaliate if our attitude here is too stringent.

I also asked the question, which I did with very genuine concern and with no intention of trying to provoke the minister, if he could assure us that there would be no balkanization. This term seemed to inflame the minister, if he will permit me to say this. He accused me of mouthing, which I believe is done more by ventriloquists' dolls than by human beings, the concern of the New Democratic Party of Manitoba.

I took the expression "balkanization" from a letter addressed to the minister himself by an inhabitant, a native of Ontario, a very prominent farmer of this province, who had this to say:

Regarding the so-called "chicken-egg war," why has this matter not been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada and why does the Ontario government allow itself to be a party to the balkanization of Canada by protecting a group of integrators in Quebec, and at the same time allow the federal government to use this "chicken-egg war" as a smokescreen to justify Bill C-176, which in its present form Ontario farmers do not want?

With that specific reference to the merits of this statement, I use the term "balkanization" because I am concerned, not about the balkanization of Ontario—and here the minister misinterpreted me—I am concerned that this is one country of 10 provinces. It is a country in which the primary producer is having an extremely difficult time to make ends meet.

In every province the farmer is caught in a cost-price squeeze. It is vital that the farmers of this country, and the primary producers in general, should ally themselves together and work co-operatively.

If the minister, in speaking to this motion today, were to persuade us that this bill will hasten co-operation and delay the increase of tension between the various provinces, then we would be very happy to receive that assurance. We are not happy about the terms that are being used about this "chicken-egg war"—very generally used and not initiated by us.

In The Farm and Country of Tuesday, March 24, we have a heading:

PLANS BROILER SHUTDOWN

Ontario broiler growers will move aggressively this summer to recapture the Ontario chicken market lost to Quebec growers.

The Ontario Broiler Chicken Growers Marketing Board is setting quotas of $17.4 million, up 20 per cent from last year. And "We will sell them," says John Jantzen, secretary-manager of the board. "This will be costly for Ontario, but very costly for Quebec."

Subsequently—a little history of the warfare—I have indicated March 24, 1971—sorry, 1970.

Now then May of 1970, Quebec, through the federation of egg producers, received permission to handle or license all eggs entering Quebec—the response to the broiler approach of Ontario, one would assume. July, 1970, court case in the Superior Court of Quebec upheld the decision which will be carried shortly to the Quebec Appeal Court. August, EEC gets into the act and sets up a permit system to control the out-of-province broilers.

September, 1970, Ontario government permitted Ontario Broiler Board of Control entry of broilers into the Ontario market by requiring a permit at retail level of out-of-province broilers. And along come New Brunswick, Alberta, Nova Scotia and other provinces. Alberta and Manitoba both asked the federal government to rule on these violations of the right to free provincial trade. This was not acted upon until, as you have heard, October of 1970.

Manitoba applied and was told the Supreme Court could not make a ruling at that time. So then Manitoba introduced its own regulation, and then has a ruling pending on that.

Mr. Speaker, others of my colleagues will speak on the legal problems inherent in this Act. I just want to reassert my question, initiated the other day: Can the minister give us the comparative figures as between Ontario and Quebec? Can he assure us that this Act will help to relieve rather than increase the tension between the provinces? These are considerations which are vital to our acceptance of this bill.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, it is a very difficult problem to try and understand the thoroughness with which the government embarks on courses such as the one which the Minister of Agriculture and Food would have us follow. In the question that we put to him about this Act, he made the strange admission that he had not sought the opinion of the law officers of the Crown. Nor did he intend to seek the opinion of the law officers of the Crown in Ontario.

However, this minister is a knowledgeable man and he was familiar with what had happened within the courts of Quebec and the courts of Manitoba, and certainly he was as aware as anyone was, probably more aware, of what the Manitoba Court of Appeal had said, and had said unanimously, and was aware of the judgement which my hon. leader read in part just a few moments ago.

I have to question, Mr. Speaker, and I have to question just as strongly as I can, how a responsible minister of the Crown in the Province of Ontario can, in fact, bring before us legislation about which there exists substantial doubt as to its validity. Certainly one cannot dismiss with a wave of the hand the unanimous opinion of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba. They may be wrong, but certainly they are a responsible judicial body and there was no doubt in their minds at least, that when the Province of Manitoba asked for similar powers, the province did not have that power in accordance with the interpretation by the court of appeal of The British North America Act.

One would have thought it would be almost axiomatic, Mr. Speaker, that before embarking upon this course, the Minister of Agriculture would have gone to the legal officers, the law officers of the Crown in Ontario, and asked for their opinion. But I suspect that he was afraid to. I suspect that he was not anxious to receive the opinion of those gentlemen who advise the Crown in the Province of Ontario, because I suspect that he had a pretty good idea that had their opinion been sought and had it been given they would have come down on the side of the exercise of judgement by the Court of Appeal of the Province of Manitoba.

Whether they would have or not, we are not able to tell because their opinion was never, in fact asked, and that is just beyond my understanding. Now, if it was not asked, and the minister goes one step further and says he has no intention of attempting to intervene before the Supreme Court of Canada when it hears the appeal from the Court of Appeal in Manitoba, he knows, or he should have been advised by his own Department of Agriculture legal advisers, that the Province of Ontario has a right to intervene before the Supreme Court of Canada when a constitutional point is being raised.

If the minister is, in fact, sure that his position is correct and the Court of Appeal of Manitoba is, in fact, wrong, surely another elementary step that he should have announced to the House was, "We, the government of Ontario, think that the Manitoba Court of Appeal is wrong. We have instructed our law officers to appear at the hearing of the Supreme Court of Canada, to intervene on behalf of the Province of Ontario and to sustain the position that we, in Ontario, want to take." But he has not taken that second step.

Mr. Speaker, we heard in the one speech in the Throne debate, that has been given by a cabinet minister, by the Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), fulsome and well-deserved praise of the efforts put forth by James Chalmers McRuer when he tabled his very comprehensive and very useful and very effective work on civil rights in the Province of Ontario. I suppose it is just by fortuitous coincidence that today we had volume 5 of that work tabled, and in volume 5 Mr. McRuer devotes chapter 112—page 1756 all the way to page 1802—to the Farm Products Marketing Board.

He concludes by setting out some 37 recommendations, which criticize—in the strongest terms that he uses throughout any of the five volumes of this report—the present provisions and procedures of the Farm Products Marketing Board and the procedures used under it, and so many of them are pertinent to the legislation that is presently before us.

So perhaps, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why the Minister of Agriculture neglected to get the opinion of the law officers of the Crown, because on looking through this report I note that the letter of transmittal, signed by Mr. McRuer when he transmitted this volume 5 to His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario, bears the date February 22, 1971.

That is almost two months ago. One would well imagine, and I think validly conclude, Mr. Speaker, that by the time this Act was ready to be introduced the law officers of the Crown might have had some intimate knowledge of the provisions of chapter 112 of the McRuer report; and had they been asked what they knew about the decision of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba, and had they been asked in light of their examination of chapter 112, I at least would conclude, Mr. Speaker, that their report about this Bill 10 would have been hardly a complimentary one.

In fact, it would have been my opinion that the law officers of the Crown, had they looked at Bill 10, looked at the decision of the Court of Appeal of Manitoba, and looked at chapter 112 of the McRuer report, would have come to the conclusion that Bill 10 is badly drafted, negatives so many of the proposals set forth by Mr. McRuer, is an invasion of civil rights, and probably is beyond the constitutional power of the Province of Ontario.

I am going to refer at some length to some of the provisions, some of the recommendations and some of the comments made in chapter 112.

In listening to the minister's introduction, he talks about the necessity for swift action and I wonder if the minister and his advisers have thought this matter through?

Here we have a bill whose constitutional validity is in doubt from its very inception. Here we have a bill which gives very, very arbitrary powers to officials of the board and of the local boards. And here we have a bill that if it is enacted and if it is attempted to be enforced, is undoubtedly going to be challenged by those people who are going to be affected by it—particularly, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that there is serious doubt as to its validity.

So I ask the Minister of Agriculture, notwithstanding the fact that he was in such a rush to get this thing through, must it not be obvious that if it quickly becomes a part of the law of the Province of Ontario that almost immediately he is going to have to meet a challenge in the Courts of Ontario as to its validity? And the courts of Ontario are not going to give any ruling as to the validity of this bill until the Supreme Court of Canada has in fact disposed of the matter that is pending before them.

So, what in effect is going to happen? The minister is presenting to those people who want to challenge this bill an opportunity to continue to evade it, even if it is valid, until the definitive decision comes from the Supreme Court of Canada.

Now, wherein lies the necessity or the practicability for the hurry, for the rush, for the precipitous action the minister talks about? I think by reason of his indication that he wants this precipitous action he is just begging for trouble and he is putting Ontario into the position where it is going to have to wrestle with the validity of this bill for an indeterminate period, at least as long as the Supreme Court of Canada takes to deal with the Manitoba legislation.

Mr. Speaker, as I looked at the bill and compared it with certain provisions of the Act, the question of order which I raised at the commencement of the minister's remarks occurred to me as being a very important matter. Because if you look at the bill, the bill apparently intends to introduce a new section—only one new section—12*b*, to The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Section 12*b*, being a new section as I understand it as a lawyer, stands by itself. And section 12*b* purports to give certain powers to the farm products marketing force. However, by the time we get down to subsection 4 and again to subsection 6 of this proposed new section 12*b* the draftsmen have varied from their reference to "the board"—which means the Farm Products Marketing Board—and begin to talk in those two sections about the local boards.

So what is envisaged here is a delegation of authority from the main board—from the farm board to the local board—without any power, in fact, being given to allow such delegation. That is why, Mr. Speaker, I wondered whether or not the draftsmen might have in fact made a mistake and did really intend to introduce this new 12*b* as a further subsection to section 8.

Section 8 has a number of subsections in part 1, but in part 5 of section 8—8(5)—and the arithmetic is very difficult to explain logically in 8(5) there is power given and there is existing power for the main board to delegate its powers to the local board.

I would think, in addition to all the other points that I have raised, the fact that the Act presently before us, Bill 10, provides no power in the new section for the main board to delegate its authority to the local board, would indicate that it is unworkable. And had it been inserted as a new subsection in the existing section 8, then subsection 5 of 8 would have applied and in fact then the theme or the scheme that the department envisages could have been carried out.

But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that because it has not been done in this way—and that is why I ask the specific question—then the bill as before us falls on its face because it envisages a power to subdelegate. Certainly it is trite law to say delegatus non potest delegare—the person who is delegated power by the Legislature cannot delegate it further on. And section 12*b* as in this Act purports to do this, and certainly there is no legal doubt that this is an impossible feat to be accomplished by the Legislature without its specific words. And that in fact has not been done.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): What does Mr. McRuer say about that?

Mr. Singer: Well, I am going to read it to the members at some substantial length.

Mr. J. Renwick: Please do.

Mr. Singer: I am just saying—and I am sure that someone as intelligent as the hon. member for Riverdale can understand this very well—quite apart from the ability to delegate there as to be a specific power in the statute allowing it.

The point I am making now, if the hon. member for Riverdale was listening, is, as this section is presently worded there is no such additional power to delegate. There is such additional power in 8, subsection 5, but this amendment does not form a part of section 8. So therefore, on its face, Mr. Speaker, the Act is in fact bad.

Now, let us see what Mr. Justice McRuer does say. As I say, he starts to talk about the Farm Products Marketing Board at page 1756 and on page 1757 he says:

The references in section 2 of the Act to "the marketing within Ontario" and to "the producing and marketing within Ontario" are reflections of the province's incompetence to regulate the production and marketing of products in interprovincial and export trade.

That is the very thing they were talking about before the Court of Appeal in Manitoba and that is the very thing, Mr. Speaker, that I would have thought the hon. Minister of Agriculture and Food would have sought an opinion of the law officers of the Crown about. But he did not.

And Mr. McRuer refers to the case "Reference re The Farm Products Marketing Act (1957), 'Supreme Court Reports' at page 198"; and specifically to Mr. Justice Rand at page 210 where the court said in that case:

The producer is entitled to dispose beyond the province without reference to a provincial marketing agency or price, shipping or other trade regulations.

Well now, if what Mr. Justice Rand said in the 1957 case means anything I would think, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest humility, it must mean that this Act is not a valid Act. What else can it do? Mr. McRuer went to great pains to point this out.

Again, Mr. Speaker, at page 176, at the bottom of the page, Mr. McRuer questions some of the things that are in The Milk Marketing Act, and the same errors again are produced here:

The device of extending the definition of "farm products" to "such other natural products of agriculture as are designated by the regulations" is, also, objectionable. The definition of "farm product" contained in the first part of the clause and the potential consequences which may ensue to the producers and marketers of a non-included product if it is brought within the ambit of the Act, are such that the Legislature itself, and not an appointed body, should decide what the Act is intended to cover.

There we have it again, Mr. Speaker. Bill 10 delegates this power either to the main board—the Farm Products Marketing Board—or to the local boards, but the Legislature will not now, if this bill passes, make the decision. Either the main board or the sub-board will make the decision. And Mr. Justice McRuer says in unmistakably clear language “the Legislature itself, and not an appointed body, should decide what the Act is intended to cover.”

But apart from all the other criticism, Mr. Speaker, if the minister's concern is about broilers, then why does he not deal with the question of broilers in the statute? Why does the legislation itself not say that?

These provisions in this new section 12b are so broad that the appointed board and the appointed sub-board are going to make all of the decisions and the Legislature none of them. What in fact the minister is asking for is an absolute blank cheque where people one or two times removed from this body are going to make decisions and not this Legislature.

Well, Mr. McRuer's comment speaks probably better than my comment in relation to this matter, and again at page 1796 where he talks about subordinate legislative powers and I commend that immediately to the minister's urgent reading list. From page 1769 on, that whole section—talking about subordinate legislative powers, he talks about section 8, subsection 5, and that is the principle of delegatus non potest delegare—a delegate cannot delegate. The minister purports to do it without even bringing in a companion piece, or a similar piece to 8(5). As I said earlier, I do not think his section is valid insofar as it purports to give any power to sub-boards.

This is what Mr. McRuer says:

Under section 8(5) this power may be delegated to a local board. This provision, in fact, enables the power of delegation to be exercised without laying down any standards or guide for the local board in making laws with respect to any matter coming within the ambit of the Act and affecting wide areas of the economic life of the province.

Later on, on the same page, Mr. McRuer says:

It serves to shield loose definition of policy and imprecise draftmanship.

Well, as loose as it is in 8(5), it is looser and more imprecise in the new proposed 12b because they do not even tell us how it is going to go from the main board to the local board. So as Mr. McRuer finds fault with what already exists, what is presently intended is much worse.

Again, on page 1771, Mr. McRuer is still talking about subordinate legislative powers. He says in the paragraph about three-quarters of the way down:

The powers with which we have just been dealing are of an expropriatory nature.

And those are the powers that the minister presently envisages.

Their exercise, whether in their present form or in the form of a power of adjudication, as we recommend, should be dependent on the satisfaction of definite and objective conditions precedent. For example, the powers should only be exercisable for some definite reason, such as the financial mismanagement of the affairs of the local board in question.

Or in this case, such as dumping or deliberate price undercutting or something. The point Mr. McRuer makes again is patently obvious that where this kind of unusual confiscatory power is given by the Legislature, surely it should be spelled out in clear and unmistakable language the conditions precedent on which this kind of power is going to be allowed to be exercised. But we find none of that, sir, in the bill that is in fact before us.

Again, sir, on page 1773, Mr. McRuer says:

It is essential that the form and content of marketing laws should be subject to political control.

It is very important—political control.

We therefore recommend that both board regulations and local board regulations should not come into force until approved by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. The adoption of this recommendation will substantially meet the objections and criticism which we have made with respect to the power of sub-delegations.

Insofar as I have been able to ascertain in my quick reading of this chapter in McRuer's volume 5 and the existing Act and amending Act that is before us, I see no scheme whereby the regulations that will be made by the local boards are subject to anybody's review. And this is something that Mr. McRuer points out is anathema to anyone believing in the theory of political responsibility.

The whole question of regulations of this industry gets so far beyond us that we in the Legislature, Mr. Speaker, are unable to know about what is going on, are unable to control what is going on and are going to be unable to debate what is going on, let alone the people who are going to be affected by the legislation. Because there is really no place that the people who are likely to be affected by the legislation are going to be able to go to find out what regulations are being passed by the local boards because they do not even have to be published in the Ontario Gazette.

Now where would one ascertain what are the regulations of the local boards? I do not know, Mr. Speaker, and Mr. McRuer makes a point that if this sub-delegation is to go on, which he abhors, then there should be some provision for their publication and their gathering together in a central place where in fact they can be found.

Mr. McRuer goes on—and he has a substantial section of this chapter, starting at page 1782, dealing with appeals; and look as I might through this new bill there is no provision for any appeals where the local board or the main board has gone in and seized and detained and disposed of products belonging to somebody else. There is no provision for appeal at all, and again one would think in this day when the Attorney General says Mr. McRuer has given this yeoman service to the Province of Ontario and established the principle of civil rights, that at least the Minister of Agriculture and Food would pay a little heed to his words. But there are no provisions for appeal in so far as these matters are concerned.

On page 1786, Mr. McRuer says:

The Farm Products Marketing Board should not be the final arbiter on the legal issues involved in these decisions. Where the decisions are predominantly of an administrative . . . nature a right of appeal should lie from the board to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

And where they are of a legal nature then there should be provision for judicial review.

But in these new procedures, which are separated as I say from the procedures in section 8, there seems to be no such provision at all.

Mr. McRuer, in dealing with the powers exercised in relation to tobacco matters under this Act, and under section 4, I think it is, of the Act dealing with the right of inquiry and inspection, makes three observations.

First, that "they permit entry and inspection of a private dwelling." Well in this case there is not entry and inspection of a private dwelling but you can enter and inspect anything else other than a dwelling and he says that there should be some safeguard against this almost unbridled right of entry and inspection.

His second point is:

There is no restraint on the use of information that may be obtained on the inspection. The members of the local boards are those engaged in the production of the regulated product. Under this legislation, they and their inspectors are in no way restrained from using or communicating to others the information they obtain . . .

He recommends there should be such restraints in the event information is obtained. And the same thing in regard to books and records.

A question about penalties: He refers generally to the penalty section of the main statute and has great criticism about the way that section is drafted. For instance on page 1792 his recommendation is that the legislation should be amended "to define expressly what are the orders and directions referred to in section 13," which is the penalty section. It should:

—provide that they should be in writing; to provide that the orders and directions should be brought to the attention of the person concerned before their contravention can constitute an offence, and to provide that the orders and directions should state on their face that a violation thereof constitutes an offence and may be prosecuted . . .

One would think that that is sort of basic, Mr. Speaker. Those are positive recommendations made by Mr. McRuer in volume 5 dealing specifically with this Act, and here we have these new and arbitrary powers, with none of these safeguards at all, and all of this information lay within the knowledge of the law officers of the Crown, lay within the knowledge of the Attorney General, and was available to the Minister of Agriculture and Food if he had only bothered to inquire and find out what Mr. McRuer thought about the general principles that underly The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Well Mr. Speaker, I have marked several other parts of this chapter 112. Let me just refer to one or two briefly.

Mr. McRuer comes close to his conclusions on page 1797 and says:

The legislation — that is, The Farm Products Marketing Act — however, offends against many principles of orderly law enforcement and the rule of law.

There is no good reason why this legislation should not conform to ordinary rules of just procedure. The decisions which are required to be made pursuant to it appear to be primarily of a judicial nature and it would appear fair and logical that a person whose tobacco is sought to be destroyed—

And here he seeks to destroy broilers—"that a person whose broilers are sought to be destroyed," let me interpolate, "should be heard before such an order is made."

A very positive recommendation, but the Minister of Agriculture and Food hears nothing and sees nothing and does not change his ways at all.

Finally, sir, at the bottom of page 1797, Mr. McRuer says this:

As we have said with respect to similar provisions in other statutes, we can see no reason why members or employees should receive any wider protection than is afforded by the common law for those acting under statutory authority.

Because you note in the theme of this Act. Mr. Speaker, the people who are allowed these unusual and arbitrary powers can exercise them almost at their own whim and they are, or purport to be, given protection. They do not have to, according to this, provide any justification if in fact they were wrong. The other thing, Mr. Speaker, is that all of the activities, whether proper or improper if this statute became law, are exercised at the expense of those persons whose products are being taken.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very sad commentary really on the performance of this government, that it brings in such a badly researched bill, and that it has not made the necessary provisions of The British North America Act.

There it is—sections 91 and 92—and the minister knew about them and he did not even take the basic step of making inquiry from the law officers of the Crown. What is the precipitous action that is so necessary and that is going to be affected? As my leader said, certainly we take second place to no one in having concern about the protection of the agricultural industry and all phases of it. We are concerned, Mr. Speaker, that it is very hard for many, many farmers to make even a reasonable living under the conditions that presently exist. One would expect from the Minister of Agriculture and Food something better than Bill 10.

We urge him to take it back and take another look; to read Mr. McRuer's comments about The Farm Products Marketing Act in particular; to read the decision of the Manitoba Court of Appeal.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: And the Quebec Court of Appeal?

Mr. Singer: And the Quebec Court of Appeal and evaluate them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They are opposed—

Mr. Singer: Exactly, they are, but I suggest, sir—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: But the member has conveniently forgotten—

Mr. Singer: It does not lie with the minister to arbitrarily decide that Quebec is right or Manitoba is wrong. When he is aware of this substantial difference in legal opinion, surely the most obvious place to which he must go is to his own law officer? Is the minister afraid of going to his law officer? Why did he not? Why will he not now? If he is so sure that he is right, why does he not intervene in the case presently before the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It is not before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Singer: It is pending—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Pending, yes, next December, next January.

Mr. Singer: It is pending, yes. If the minister is going to intervene he is not going to intervene on two minutes' notice. He is not going to be able to tell his lawyers that tomorrow morning he supports the Supreme Court of Canada.

An hon. member: So that the broiler producers of this province are wiped out.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is what the Liberals want to happen in this province. That is exactly what that party's position is today.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister is so unhappy.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Let Hansard record it, Mr. Speaker, that the Liberals want the broiler producers wiped out in Ontario.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I have aggravated the minister a wee bit, that his temper is on such short fuse.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I was just telling the member the truth. He is a lawyer, I am a farmer.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Speaker, one would think that it would be one of the fine criteria of any minister of the Crown, that where there is doubt he would at least inquire and use the facilities that are available to him to inquire. There is a lot of high-priced help over there, and pretty good ones too, whose job it is to give legal opinions. But there is no legal opinion from the law officers of the Crown.

Now sir, I would think that the minister should take to heart not the pat phrase that he uses—that we are against the farmers—there is nothing that is more untrue than the words he has just uttered. The only thing that is more untrue, perhaps, is that all the faults that belie the province of Ontario have their origin in the government of Canada.

Those two blatant falsehoods do not justify lack of action or improper action by this government. We, here at Queen's Park, can expect surely that when this government wants to act, wants to protect an important segment of our community, that it will do it in a way that will be effective. Our suggestion, sir, our caution, is that this bill will not do what I think all members of the House in fact want it to do. Therefore please, Mr. Minister, take the bill back, get opinions, read McRuer, bring us in a better bill, one that will stand up; and we will be amongst the first to support it.

Hon. Mr Stewart: And let the broiler growers go down the drain in the meantime, which is what the member wants them to do.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, if the minister will desist from his grandstanding, I will get on with the debate.

Mr. R. Haggerty: Is the member a farmer?

Mr. Lawlor: No, I am one of those legalists he does not like and there will be more legalisms imposed in just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. minister thinks about the human beings in the Province of Ontario, but it has struck me that generally speaking he has an ongoing attack and harassment of the animal population, dead or alive. It was not so long ago that we had to deal with cats and dogs under particular penalties and we will all remember that somewhat disagreeable experience. Now he is attacking—either before birth, the embryo, the egg (back to the egg says the minister) or after death in the post-mortem phase of the chicken, after it has been properly embalmed. He does not wish to see it imported into the Province of Ontario.

I think this is carrying things pretty far in terms of the animal kingdom, and since they are unable to speak for themselves I think some member of this House ought to presume to speak on their behalf, again, dead or alive.

Sometimes one wonders in the course of the debates here, despite all the accolades that are rendered as to whether the law officers of the Crown really have spent any time reading McRuer and embodying the recommendations there into the heart of these bills. This minister, particularly, Mr. Speaker, has offended against that principle time and again. He just seems to be oblivious to the import of the nature of civil liberties and this legislation is a living spokesman in that particular regard.

May I commend the member for Downsview. The report had hardly arrived on our desk—it is still warm as though the hen had just laid it, so to speak—and he is able to quote at length and into its interstices, pointing out over many pages just where the hon. minister falls short in recognizing the newest report.

As most things are done in this Legislature, Mr. Speaker, it is an offhand compliment, and a backhanded one too, because it does show to what extent and with what assiduity the hon. member has studied this bill in terms of the overall ramifications in McRuer. The amount of time that must have been spent in this study strikes one as the work of a great scholar.

Now there is much more in these passages I was able to peruse while the hon. member was speaking which are directed to the central point of this bill. I am not going to go into its interstices at length, because you could speak here for quite a long time as to area after area. The minister, through his office and his department, has given a half-hearted or blinking cognizance of McRuer here and there, but on the whole has missed the spirit and not really embodied the true tenor of that document in this legislation.

Albeit the legislation is, from his point of view, of great urgency and necessity, and it has to be brought before this House at the earliest possible moment, its drafting obviously was done under the impress of some expediency and the way in which it is set up here thoroughly proves that. It was not given proper review. It was not in the light of the principles of the common law given any severe scrutiny, and for that reason it fails in numerous regards.

For instance, in the right of entry on to property; the first in order of time and perhaps in order of a logical priority on to a property. There is no safeguard that the people so making this entry must do so under some qualifications or restrictions; they have the widest possible power. McRuer says there that it must be subjected to the restriction of reasonable grounds or reasonable cause at the very least, as a minimal requirement in this particular regard.

Now in the slothful way in which this legislation has been set up, at the next step of the road to seizure, once the entry has taken place—out of the blue, so to speak, and without any safeguards—then he writes the safeguard in with respect to the seizure, in that seizure must be done only when “the person making the seizure believes on reasonable grounds an offence against the Act or the regulations has been committed . . .”

Thus far, that is good. But on the first it fails, whereas on the second point a proper and a just respect for the legalities, much as one may find them irksome, are given cognizance to.

There is not in this legislation, again, the proper respect for the domicile. It inserts a phrase in the course of the legislation, “other than a dwelling,” which gives lip service to McRuer, but it does not give protection to those other buildings and personal property of a real property nature which, on reading McRuer, should be equally safeguarded in this particular respect.

Then when you do go on to movables, to various other forms of containment other than the private dwelling house—“a vessel, a boat, or car or truck . . .” Again, no provision in that particular entry is set up or are any safeguards written into the legislation to protect the civil liberties of individuals as has been recommended in the old volumes of McRuer, over and over again. McRuer says at 410 of the second volume:

The basic right of the individual is to be free from physical trespass to his property and to be free from interference with his privacy.

Then at page 413 he says:

While powers of entry are a necessary part of many types of modern legislation, they ought to be sparingly dispensed by the Legislature and always with proper safeguards.

That is the basic contention of McRuer under that head.

Let us look at another provision which runs helter skelter through the centre of civil liberties. It is a rather minor matter perhaps, but it gives some feeling of the way in which this legislation was done.

There is perpetuation in this legislation of a provision specifically outlawed by McRuer, and that has to do with the business of the risk being on the side of the owner. It says here: “Any regulated product seized and detained under this section is seized and detained at the risk and expense of the owner.”

Let us see what McRuer, at 424, has to say about that sort of provision:

It is an unreasonable trespass on the rights of an owner that the detention should be “at the risk of the owner.” There seems no reason why the ordinary rights of bailee and bailor should not apply. The owner has no means by which to protect the products that are detained, insofar as the detention may be continued until the owner of the farm product complies with the Act and regulations. This is an extraordinarily vague section of a penal nature. No one appears to have authority to determine when the owner has complied with the Act and the regulations.

In the course of making these rather penetrating statements, McRuer is, curiously enough, referring specifically to legislation before us today.

At the top of the page he gives section 61 of The Farm Products Marketing Act. No, I am sorry, The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act, in that particular case, which falls directly under the minister’s jurisdiction too.

Then he does mention examples of the same legislation as in The Live Stock and Live Stock Products Act and The Milk Act. So it is rather endemic in this particular department that the blatant disregard of that particular right of the citizen is not only maintained but perpetuated in the present legislation.

I would ask the minister if, in all fairness, and in light of the explicit remarks of the former Chief Justice, whether or not they should not consider deleting that. Throw a crumb to the opposition. Be in line with virtue and light and concede the point that that ought not to be in there. That would be the very least I think we would do in the context of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, there are two other points that I want to bring attention to. One is this business of sub-delegate power as set forth in this legislation.

You see, Mr. Speaker, under the legislation power is given to the marketing board to make regulations. Now the marketing board in turn is sub-delegating that power to local boards to make similar regulations, coming under The Regulations Act and so being published in the Ontario Gazette, are all pertinent and apply and should be provided for before this legislation goes through this House, by way of amendment or otherwise, or by way of concession from the minister since again the point is perfectly obvious. But in doing that, there rises in our minds, not just as a mere legality, that the minister's passing powers down the line in this particular way to lower bodies obviates and traverses the role of this body, in the sense at least, that the ministerial responsibility is not properly arrogated and attachable.

With that in mind, I would again to quote from McRuer, volume 1. Here he says—this is at 350, under the term “Sub-delegation.” He is referring in this case precisely to The Farm Products Marketing Act again:

The Attorney General makes such regulations as he deems necessary for the purpose of this Act.

Then:

If the Attorney General deemed it necessary to confer upon other persons subordinate power to make rules, it might be within his authority to do so.

The authority to sub-delegate power—

this is the important point:

The authority to sub-delegate power to make regulations should not be conferred, except in relation to the exercise of emergency powers.

It goes on with respect to the powers of the parent Act, but the sentence is carried over into the purport and the weight of the remarks made subsequently in the volume before us today, volume 5 of the McRuer Report.

I would ask emphatically that the minister be good enough, as a man sworn to uphold the law of the province, to give safeguard and recognition to what has been said under that head in this particular legislation.

There is only one other point I wish to make, Mr. Speaker, arising out of the legislation. It is, as the member for Downsview has pointed out to this House, true that the right of this one statute, this single statute, has been carved out from other legislation specifically by McRuer in the latest volume. He has 37 different points where he takes grave issue with the way in which it is drawn, the couching of terms, the liberties that are not safeguarded and the general tenor of what this legislation means.

Instead of obviating that—instead of making those traductions of the legislation less onerous than they are, the minister is perpetuating them. It is going from bad to worse and, in bringing forward this particular section that he has before us today, it is a reaffirmation of an insensitivity—to say the least—to what McRuer has recommended.

I would just read from one recommendation of McRuer which has reference to the legislation before us, and that is No. 12:

Board regulations, and local board regulations, should be subject to the approval of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, which would make them subject to the provisions of The Regulations Act.

How about a little thing like that? Surely concessions can be made on that particular point, one out of 37 touching the issues involved, and the minister then could come before us on these grounds, to expect to elicit from us sympathy and support when he seems so regardless of—what is it—report commission by his own government; of which he as a cabinet minister must take cognizance and give effect to, to the full weight of his power instead of going constantly against ignoring and being possibly ignorant; which he ought not to be and cannot be permitted to be by this opposition with respect to the kind of legislation he is bringing before us.

The legislation is a warp and woof of loopholes, of traduction. You can drive a cart and four through it, so far as any safeguarding of basic human rights is concerned. Surely over against dead poultry, a little modicum of civil liberties might be preserved, even under this legislation?

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): In joining this debate on this bill, I would like to join with my leader in the proposal that he has made and hope the Minister will agree that this bill does need a little more consideration.

The member for Downsview has dealt with the legal aspects of this bill, and I would like to deal, from a farmer aspect, with the practicality of this bill. The minister has mentioned to us that we on this particular side of the House are not interested in the farmers of this great Province of Ontario and that we in effect are against the broiler growers. Now he knows that this not—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Very obvious this afternoon.

Mr. Innes: He knows—

Mr. R. K. McNeil (Elgin): The federal government looks after the member.

Mr. Innes: I just want to say to the minister that we want to look after the interests of all the farmers of the Province of Ontario and we have weighed our decisions fairly in the way we have made the proposal.

I want to say to the minister that we have had good relationships with the—

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): That is going to cut off the beef.

Mr. Innes: —with the people in the Province of Quebec. I only mention the Milk Marketing Board that currently has 200 producers from the Province of Quebec enjoying the facilities of our Milk Marketing Board. The milk producers in Quebec see the good relationships and the good legislation that we helped put in the Milk Marketing Board; and these people are utilizing this board and we co-operate with them.

I mention the Tobacco Marketing Board. Currently, the Tobacco Marketing Board is processing upward of 10 million pounds of tobacco which comes from the Province of Quebec. The Province of Quebec utilizes or imports somewhere in the neighbourhood of, I would think, about 20 million pounds from the Province of Ontario.

The member for Middlesex South was mentioning the balance of trade. Well really I do not have specific figures, but I do know by the figures that I have arranged to pull together we do have the plus factor at the moment. I would say somewhere in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent more trade goes to Quebec than comes from Quebec to Ontario. I think this is somewhere close.

Mr. Gaunt: That is right. The member is right on.

Mr. Innes: The minister has mentioned that the legislation is required to protect farmers from the Quebec integrators, but I want to remind him that there are integrators in the Province of Ontario too, and that some of them have quotas from two to four million birds per year. You will ask me why this is. Why are these integrators—who are in most cases the same integrators in the Province of Quebec as in the Province of Ontario—sending their birds over here at the moment?

I can tell him why: Because the Province of Quebec gives them a subsidy on their interest rate, that is through the farm credit corporation; and you know it was this minister who wiped out the junior farmer loans in the Province of Ontario, whereby they were getting a little bit of a break on interest rates at that particular time and this is why the integrator, who is the same integrator in the Province of Ontario as the integrator in the Province of Quebec, is taking advantage—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Not in all cases.

Mr. Innes: Well not all, mind you, but he will be fair and say that some are.

Mr. Nixon: The big ones.

Mr. Innes: The big ones are the same. He knows that. And he must admit that this is due to the cancelling in some parts of the junior farmer loans legislation. Only as recently as this morning The London Free Press, which is a paper that might be known by the hon. member for Middlesex North, has this to say: "Hatching of Interprovincial Problems"; This refers, of course, not to the hatching of eggs I suppose, but to a different kind of hatching. It says:

Sources in both Ontario and Quebec, and indeed in other provinces, may find that any short-term gains they may seem to make from interprovincial restrictions of service and trade will be overbalanced by losses in the long run.

This is what I am concerned about, Mr. Speaker, the long run.

When we mention the various products that are currently being utilized in Quebec that come from the Province of Ontario, the number of farmers who are involved is quite conceivably 20 times 20 more than the broilers. But I am not saying that we are not concerned about them. We are concerned about them, but let us not do it to the detriment of the people in the province. You will notice just recently in the press, in the editorial here:

The ban which is being sought on Ontario labour going into Quebec for construction jobs has already drawn a warning from union officials in the Hull-Ottawa area. This could work in reverse and hit Quebecers with jobs in Ontario.

These are the little frictions that are currently there, and we are sort of setting up another little friction area. I say to him that I, as a Canadian, like to feel when I walk from Quebec to Ontario there is no border, and that I hope that he will continue to encourage his Conservative friends in Ottawa to hurry up this national marketing bill and then we can get on with the business.

It goes on to say:

The free movement of goods and people within Canada is natural for a viable nation and in the final analysis will prove mutually beneficial. The farm products marketing bill now before Parliament but locked in controversy over some of its ramifications is an attempt to assure the development of markets but also offering some safeguards to producers within a particular region. More than that may be required to effect a satisfactory flow of interprovincial commerce.

I do not know that I have too much to say—we have other members that are going to speak on it—but one of the prime reasons why I would like to see this held up for a while is that we will concede that national marketing is going to be the solution to our marketing problems across Canada. And as such, if we will give it an opportunity to be passed without putting too many stumbling blocks in its way after it is passed, that we are looking to the interests of all Canada and not just to our own little province of Ontario.

So these are some of the reasons that I feel I would like to support my leader and have this bill hoisted for six months so we can have a look and let national marketing do the job that it is intended to do and hopefully will do if we all get behind it and make sure that it will work.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this Bill 10 giving more power to the broiler board to seize and detain broilers coming into the Province of Ontario from Quebec. I might say that when I first heard the bill I was greatly interested in it, but of course since the bill has been introduced there has been considerable interest developed across this province.

Certainly there are different boards, in support of this bill; there are large numbers of egg producers in this province who are against it—the egg board, as I understand it, is for it—and I must say that I have been called and asked to attend meetings. These barriers between the provinces are a serious matter. We know the broiler people are in difficulties, but we know many other products in this province are in difficulties. We know the pork industry has problems. We know that the egg producers have problems. These barriers between the provinces are not a good thing—and the minister has admitted this. Also the beef producers are very concerned that we are passing a bill that is going to put another barrier between one province and the other, and also the corn producers in this province are very concerned.

As the hon. member for Oxford has said, we ship a lot of agricultural products to Quebec. A few days ago the minister said that Quebec will not retaliate—but there is a great concern they will after this bill is passed. Those producers in Quebec will agitate the government to take some action against some of our products entering Quebec. As I understand it, 2,500 hogs go into Quebec every week; as I understand it, they buy a lot of our corn. Also a lot of egg producers market their eggs in Quebec. And it has been brought to my attention that this is a serious matter and if Quebec retaliates on the broilers, more power to our broiler board so that they will be able to seize and detain.

And so I rise to support my leader's motion, Mr. Speaker because it is such a serious matter. Agriculture has very serious problems across this province. We ship so much into Quebec, that I would say that I would like to see this bill go before the committee on agriculture and let those men who have voiced their objections to me—and I suppose to you and many other members in this House—appear before the agriculture committee and express their views, give them an opportunity to speak.

I know other members of this party have expressed their views. I would like the minister to reconsider this. Give it a six-months' hoist, and then I would say that the federal government's bill C-176 will be passed, we hope.

These are my comments, Mr. Speaker. I am not against the broiler board whatsoever, or the broiler producers, but I will tell you if they retaliate in Quebec it will be a serious blow to the other segments of agriculture here in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Huron-Bruce.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): Not the member for Huron-Bruce, too. Unbelievable!

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments with respect to this bill. It has been said that the broiler industry has pressured the minister to act in this fashion, and I believe that is so. I understand that the broiler producers, through their marketing board in the Province of Ontario, have indicated to the minister that, as far as they are concerned, they want some protection from what they term the powerful Quebec integrators who have something like 87 per cent of the broiler production in the Province of Quebec. I just want to look at that for a moment. My colleague from Oxford mentioned it and I just want to deal with it further.

Obviously, we have some of the same integrators in this province that they have in Quebec. For instance, in this province we have Maple Leaf Mills which holds a 2.5 million bird quota per year; Purina Feeds, 1.2 million bird quota per year; Jim McGrath, Purina Feeds, five million bird quota per year; Canada Packers, 500,000 per year; Campbell Soups, 400,000 per year. Some of these people obviously operate in the Province of Quebec. For instance, Purina Feeds—

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): How about the other 700 small ones?

Mr. Gaunt: —operates in the Province of Quebec. Canada Packers operates in the Province of Quebec. These people are integrated to the same extent in the Province of Quebec as they are here, maybe even to a greater extent.

When our board here says, "We have to have protection from the integrators in Quebec," what they are really saying is, "We want protection for our integrators here in the Province of Ontario."

The other fact that has been mentioned is that the Quebec industry greatly increased its production over the past number of years. Of course, this is true, Mr. Speaker. There is no question about it. Quebec broiler production over the past number of years has increased dramatically. There are many reasons for this: the integration that has taken place in the industry; the cheap money that my friend from Oxford mentioned; and the fact that the government in the province was, to my knowledge, promoting the broiler industry and encouraging, not only the broiler industry but the agricultural industry generally.

However, I think there is a point here that we should remember, the fact that we in the province, having recovered from the first impact of the tremendous increase on the part of the Quebec broiler producers, then decided to recapture our own market. Last summer in the months of May, June and July we were up something in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent in setters. Those broilers would come on to the market in September. This was an attempt on the part of our broiler producers to recapture some of the market that was lost to us here in the province by way of the tremendous increase in production in Quebec.

The minister has indicated that we can absorb—and indeed we have to have—around 250,000 broilers coming into this province per week in order to fulfil our market requirements. He has also indicated that if we get in the neighbourhood of 700,000 to 800,000 per week then we have a tremendous backup of birds and our own broiler producers suffer. That is quite true.

I just want to point out, and I think it bears in a very pertinent way on this particular Act, that the broiler producers in the Province of Quebec have now undertaken to engage in a supply management programme. In other words, they have agreed to quotas; they have agreed to control their production and to bring some order out of the chaos which they have been creating. I make that point to illustrate that, in my view, with this commitment on behalf of the broiler producers' board in Quebec, the pressure on the Ontario market will not be as great in the months ahead as it has been in the past number of years.

Whether in fact there was an arrangement made whereby the federal government, in providing its $400,000 export subsidy, made some arrangement and got some commitment from these people to the effect that they had to do this type of thing if they wanted the federal government to participate in this export subsidy programme, I have no knowledge. I do not know, but if they did, I think it was a good thing and I underline the point again, that given the fact that Quebec has now entered into a supply management programme, I think the pressure on our markets will not be nearly so great in the months ahead.

Hence, I really cannot see the pressing need for this type of legislation when it is balanced over and against what it can do in terms of balkanization, in terms of reciprocal action on the part of Quebec, whether it be by way of eggs or by way of some of the other products. It has been mentioned this afternoon that our trade balance between the two provinces is in our favour, and my colleague used the percentage of 20—20 per cent in our favour—and to put it another way, I think it is roughly 10-to-7 in our favour. In other words, we shove into Quebec 10 agricultural products to every seven they shove back in here. So the balance of trade, when judged one against the other, is definitely in our favour. I feel, if we take this kind of action at this particular point in time, we are only inviting disaster to the rest of our agricultural community and I do not really feel that it is necessary at this time to do so.

Having said that, I realize that at one point in time our broiler producers did need this type of protection, but I have already said that I do not think the pressures are going to be as great in the months ahead.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Is the member for or against it? Is he for the farmer or against him?

Mr. Gaunt: Now as to this legislation, Mr. Speaker, I am on record—

Mr. Nixon: Why does the member for Renfrew South not pay attention? When is he going to speak?

Mr. Gaunt: I am on record as supporting my leader, and I think it would be rather obvious from that comment when I stand in relation to the bill.

Mr. Henderson: Go to the farmers.

Mr. Gaunt: But I am saying to you, Mr. Speaker, that as far as I am concerned this bill—

Mr. Yakabuski: He is talking on both sides of the question.

Mr. Gaunt:—may offer some very short-term advantage—

Mr. Henderson: That is Trudeau talk.

Mr. Gaunt:—but in the long term I think it would be detrimental to agriculture in this province.

Mr. Nixon: All right. Are the members opposite not going to speak? Are we not going to hear from the big beef producers?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Justice): Do not get personal.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I want to spend a little bit of time on the bill because it has produced a serious problem of government. The bill itself, of course, reflects the incapacity of the government to deal with the serious problem which has arisen. Therefore, I am going to try in a few minutes to place before the House some of the aspects of the problem that require the kind of attention which I would expect the government in this province to give to a serious question with many ramifications to it.

The bill, as presented by the Minister of Agriculture and Food, clearly reflects the incapacity of the government to isolate a problem and to deal with it in an effective manner. I want to draw to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, that the bill itself does not refer at all to interprovincial trade. It does not make any reference whatsoever to the Province of Quebec. It makes no reference whatsoever to the broiler industry, to the egg industry, or to any particular area in which there is a threat to the economic life of certain of the persons engaged in the agricultural industry in the Province of Ontario.

That is the first point I want to make; that while it may be significant from the Minister of Agriculture and Food's point of view to draw a smoke cloud over the problem by providing wide legislation, what he has done, in the absence of the comments of the minister and the existing problem in the broiler and egg industry involving the provinces in Canada and particularly the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba, is to introduce legislation which deals with the capacity of local boards under regulations made by the Farm Products Marketing Board to seize and detain any regulated product within the province. There is no limitation on that.

I bow to those who know more about the structure of the agricultural industry than I, but I believe there are something like 18 or 19 local boards in the Province of Ontario. We are being asked in this Legislature to deal with that specific problem. We are being asked to provide widespread power of the grant of regulatory power by the Farm Products Marketing Board to each and every of the local boards to permit them to seize a particular regulated product.

Let me emphasize that point. We are not dealing with the broiler and egg industry in isolation under any circumstances. And in many ways this again points out the abdication of the government when faced with a specific problem—the only way they can purport to deal with it is to throw the net so wide that inadvertently we will grant powers to many local boards over all regulated products in an amendment to a statute which is not going to disappear from the statute books of this province when the federal Act comes into force. Certainly there is nothing that the minister has said which would indicate his intention at any time to repeal this particular section, if and when the federal Act comes into force.

I want to say that that is the first reason why we are going to vote against the bill when it comes before the House on second reading.

The second reason—and let us now put it into the three areas which are basically concerned. I know that the Minister of Agriculture does not like legalisms because he always thinks that legalisms are devoid of social and economic problems. What we are faced with, whether we like it or not is that by law, and therefore involving legalisms, the minister is attempting to deal with an economic problem. We in this party recognize the economic problem which is involved in the introduction by the minister of this bill. We recognize that regardless of the state of the industry as a whole—regardless of the relative degrees of integration in the Province of Quebec as opposed to the Province of Ontario, regardless of the corporate intrusion into the broiler industry in the Province of Ontario—we recognize that there are individual farmers in the Province of Ontario engaged in these particular forms of specialty activity who are being hurt because of the conditions reflected by the inability, to this date, of this government to contribute in an overall way over the past 27 years to the establishment of an effective national marketing policy in which this government, in co-operation, would participate.

Following along on the same point, I think it is very significant to show the inability of the government to isolate and to understand a problem of economic threat to the life of some portion of one segment of the industrial capacity of this province, namely, one segment of the agricultural industry. It is the Minister of Agriculture and Foods who is introducing a bill which relates to and has something to do with trade and has very little to do with the question of agriculture. Of course, the Minister of Trade and Development is not really a Minister of Trade and Development because we are talking about trade and everybody who has spoken has been speaking about trade—and the Minister of Trade and Development is not in the Legislature.

I want to draw to the attention of the House, Mr. Speaker, a very pertinent statement made by one of the present judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, Mr. Justice Laskin, one of the acknowledged constitutional authorities of Canada—if not the acknowledged authority—on the question of the joint responsibility for agriculture under the constitution of this country. I am saying to the government that this bill reflects the incapability of this government, in the attitude which it has on constitutional matters, to work out a co-operative federalism in one of the clear cases where, under the constitution of this country, there is a joint responsibility.

Before reciting the particular quotation by Mr. Justice Laskin about this question of agriculture as such under the constitution, let me, Mr. Speaker, put on the record the sections, as I believe them to be, which we are dealing with under a constitution which is designed not to solve legal problems but is designed to provide a framework in which the economic, social and political development of this country will take place. In this particular instance, we are talking first of all about the provisions of section 92, which deal with the question of property and civil rights, and that is in fact the major head of power under which The Farm Products Marketing Act of the Province of Ontario was upheld at the time it came before the Supreme Court of Canada in 1957.

It may also be upheld under that particular head of section 92 which deals with a matter of a purely local nature. That is an intra- as distinct from an interprovincial character. Those are the two heads which are related to the provincial power, apart—as I will come to later—section 95 of The British North America Act on the question of the joint responsibility for agriculture.

Then we are talking about what is in substance the national Act, which the minister states will solve these problems if and when it is passed, as if he had no responsibility for the vacuum which has existed for many years in Canada in this whole field. He talks not about the joint exercise of the agricultural responsibility under the constitution, but he talks about the specific legislative head of power granted to the federal government under section 91(2), relating to the heading of Trade and Commerce, and that is where the bill is being supported and make no mistake about that.

It is not being supported by this minister under any suggestion that it is a matter dealing with the joint responsibility of this Legislature and the Parliament of Canada to deal with agricultural problems.

Then we come to section 121 of the Act—before I come back to section 95—which states, and again I do not intend to enter into any long dissertation as to what it means but it is perfectly clear what was the intention of those who established this constitution for Canada that all articles, and I quote the section of The British North America Act, section 121, “that all articles of the growth, produce, or manufacture of any one of the provinces shall from and after the union be admitted free into each of the other provinces.”

Now I know, Mr. Speaker, that it is rather trite to say that, of course, that means there cannot be customs barriers between the provinces. But in any living constitution the meaning of the word “free” in that section of The British North America Act does not simply mean that there are to be no custom dues as between the provinces. That, I think, is a significant section in The British North America Act.

I particularly want to come now to the section dealing with the joint responsibility for questions relating to agriculture. We have in section 95 a section dealing with agriculture and immigration. This government, under one of the former ministries, did in fact assert the provincial power with respect to immigration, but this government, which has for many years prided itself upon being the spokesman for the farm community in the Province of Ontario, has never asserted a co-equal responsibility to discharge its responsibilities in co-operative federalism pursuant to this particular section. This section says, and I quote section 95 of The British North America Act:

In each province the Legislature may make laws in relation to agriculture in the province and to immigration in the province and it is hereby declared that the Parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to agriculture in all or any of the provinces—and I repeat, “in all or any of the provinces”: —and to immigration into all or any of the provinces, and any law of the Legislature of a province relative to agriculture or to immigration shall have effect in and for the province as long and as far only as it is not repugnant to any Act of the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Laskin in his book on the constitutional law of Canada has this to say about the erosion of section 95 of The British North America Act—and I quote from page 354 of the second edition of his book. There is a later edition; I do not happen to have it with me, but the substance of these remarks has not been altered in the subsequent edition.

Among the least illumined areas of constitutional adjudication is that concerned with the scope of the concurrent power in relation to agriculture given by section 95 of The British North America Act. Here, as much as if not more than anywhere else in the Act, was an invitation to a working federalism by which problems in the field, if not adequately serviced by provincial legislation, could be taken up or solved through national legislative policy.

The possibilities represented by section 95 have so far foundered on a construction of the agriculture power which has drained it of substance both as a source of provincial legislation and of federal legislation. Neither the Privy Council nor the Supreme Court of Canada had on any occasion to consider the agriculture power during the first half-century following Confederation. Such lower-court decisions as were given on the matter during the period touched what may be reasonably termed the periphery of that class of subject.

And I skip one portion of it.

When opportunity arose for a wider assessment of agriculture as the potent force that it was and is in the Canadian economy, there was a curious refusal to square legislative power with legislative fact. None of the considerations which moved the courts to a narrow view of both the general power and the trade and commerce power were operable in respect of section 95. Yet the resulting construction of the agriculture power juxtaposed to that of the trade and commerce power created a definite hiatus in regulatory possibilities.

On the one hand the former would not support regulation of trade in natural products although it might support control at the production stage, while the latter could not embrace production and was limited in respect of trade regulation to interprovincial and export aspects in their strict sense.

The expansion of the trade and commerce power, of which evidence is slowly accumulating, may very well make it unnecessary to rely on revitalization of the agriculture power to support national marketing policies respecting products of the soil. If this happens—and I emphasize this:

—it will provide another instance of a rather unnecessary reduction, not to say obliteration of an express power.

And I am saying to the minister in substance that what Mr. Laskin was saying, what we here are saying, is that the minister is talking about trade and commerce; he is not talking about agriculture. And this department, this government, has failed and has contributed to the gradual obliteration of the joint possibility of a working federalism between the federal and provincial government in this whole field of national product marketing.

I know the minister is going to say, "Oh well, we are going to co-operate." But does he not realize that in his co-operation he is co-operating not under section 95 with respect of the joint exercise of that agricultural power, he is co-operating in abdicating to the federal government the responsibilities of this government with respect to trade?

Once this government permits the federal government to accept total responsibility for the trade across the country in respect to farm products, without a co-equal assertion by this government of its right in the field of agriculture, then this government is contributing to the default in the capacity of the government to develop a working federalism.

What Mr. Laskin has said I repeat that this was an invitation to a working federalism in section 95 and this government is abdicating its responsibility under that section of the constitution and permitting the federal government to occupy the whole field under some guise that is going to solve the problems of the broiler producers in the Province of Ontario.

There is no indication whatsoever of any interest by this government in the passage of that Act which would say to the House of Commons in Ottawa, "We in Ontario, under the power to deal with agriculture which we share jointly with you under section 95, want you to know that in the assertion of that power we expect to have an overt requirement of co-operation and mutual support."

Otherwise, I say to the minister that what he is putting before us, as a measure by which the broiler producers in the Province of Ontario will be protected, will turn out to be, once that federal Act is passed, an opportunity for the federal government to further move in its destruction of the inherent federalism of the country.

I want the minister to understand that we in this party are committed to a federal system. We in this party object to a government which does nothing to assert the power of this government under a joint agricultural programme to work out in a sound way within a working federalism, supported by law, solutions to the economic problems facing the agricultural industry across the country but specifically, so far as this assembly is concerned, facing the agricultural industry within the Province of Ontario.

I say to the minister, and I venture to prophesy, that it will not be very long until the Conservative government, should it remain so long in office, will be fighting the federal government again, as it does in constitutional matters, as it has in taxation matters, under the guise of government, and will be engaged in this internecine warfare which has been non-productive, which has resulted in the province coming to a standstill insofar as its industrial productive capacity is concerned. It will not be long until the Minister of Agriculture and Food of the Conservative government will be standing up fighting the federal government over some policy adopted under this national farm products marketing provision in the national marketing Act, in which the minister now thinks all solutions are to be found and which precludes him from intervening in the Supreme Court of Canada, as he has the right to do and as this government has the right to do.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is my hon. friend suggesting that the national bill, C-176, now before the House of Commons, is not a proper means of proceeding to resolve the very issues of which he speaks? What is the member's position on that?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I thought I was making it perfectly and abundantly clear that—and I will try to make it even more abundantly clear—there is a power in the federal government to regulate trade. It is under the exercise of that power that bill is being passed in the House of Commons. If this government permits it to go unchallenged under that head of the federal power, it will result for many, many years in the inability of this government ever to give any vitality or life to the co-operative federalism which was designed to be worked out in the field of agriculture and in the field of immigration under section 95. That is the point which I am making. It is an abdication to the federal government of the responsibility of this assembly.

I am not suggesting for one moment that the government of Canada does not have an area of responsibility under section 95, because that is what it says. It is not exercising its authority under section 95 except as a backstop to the exercise of its power under the trade and commerce power of section 91.

What I am saying—and I am trying to state it in non-legal terms; I am trying to state it in the substance of the economic problem with which we are faced; I want to put it in direct political terms—is that there will be a Minister of Agriculture and Food forced to stand up in this House and attack at some point some decision of the federal government in the exercise of the powers under that bill when it is passed. It will be almost impossible to attack it on any sound grounds except to rail against it, which is the stance of this government in its substitution for government in all matters related to the federation.

What I am saying to the minister is that some form of bill—not necessarily this bill because we are going to oppose it for the reasons which we have given, it is too broadly drawn—I do not think it is exclusive to say that it is possible for the Minister of Agriculture and Food, after proper consideration with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of the province, after proper consultation with whomever else they want to consult with, can devise a bill which will meet the present emergency problem insofar as it affects certain persons in the Province of Ontario in the broiler and the egg industry, principally the broiler industry.

It is possible to devise that kind of interim emergency bill, and it is also possible at the same time for this government to get its head out of the sand and to intervene in the case in the reference which is going to the Supreme Court of Canada as the result of the opposing decisions of the Quebec Court of Appeal and of the Manitoba Court of Appeal. Those are not mutually exclusive and we urge upon the government that they take that course.

That is, they do not press the passage of this bill which is drawn in much too wide, many too-wide terms to deal with this specific problem; that it introduce the kind of a bill which is within its province to pinpoint this specific economic problem with which we are presently faced; and, concurrently with that, indicate, as the leading province in Canada—or one of the leading provinces in Canada—that it has a vital concern before the Supreme Court of Canada in a constitutional matter which has been before the courts on many, many occasions since the Confederation in 1867.

I might say that in the time of Sir Oliver Mowat as Premier of this province—and God forbid that I should praise any Liberal at this late date, but there was no New Democratic Party at that time—in one of the crucial constitutional questions related to the trade and commerce power, the Premier of this province, Sir Oliver Mowat, appeared in person to argue the case.

It had to do with insurance, it dealt with the trade and commerce power, and it was one of the evolutionary cases leading to the decision in 1957 which upheld a very limited question placed on a constitutional matter about the present Farm Products Marketing Act.

Now I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that this particular problem of which this bill is the government's meek response merits exactly that kind of attention by the government of the Province of Ontario. In my judgement—and it may be something which cannot be communicated to the farm community in the Province of Ontario—but in my judgement if the government fails to intervene in that reference before the Supreme Court of Canada in this matter of vital concern to Confederation, of vital concern to the distribution of legislative power, of vital concern to the farm community or a portion of it—and make no never-minds this particular one may be only significant to one part of the farm community, but it is of vital concern to the agricultural community in a federal system over the long period of time—this government will have forfeited the right to the support of the farm community.

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member find this a convenient point to break his remarks?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Speaker, it is a shame because I was going along so well, but perhaps at 8 o'clock I could continue.

It being 6 o'clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 15, 1971

The House resumed at 8 o'clock, p.m.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at six o'clock the hon. member for Riverdale had the floor. Will he please continue.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Try and stop him.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner recess the government was tottering, and it is obviously having great difficulty recovering at the present time. But perhaps the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart) would tell me just exactly where I was in the course of the argument that I was putting to him about the bill.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): The member has not said anything yet. Read on.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The member opposite just did not grasp it.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am glad to see the member for Lambton here because he is going to pay very close attention to what I have to say as well as the hon. member for Armourdale (Mr. Carton) of course, and my friend the former Minister of Justice (Mr. Wishart).

Mr. Speaker, what I was trying to say before dinner—and I would like to recap very briefly—was that the government has abdicated any support to which it may have been entitled in the past from the farm community in the Province of Ontario because of its incapacity to understand and deal with the nature of the problem before it.

It is confronted by the interprovincial war going on with respect to broiler chickens and eggs. At least the government of the Province of Quebec and the government of the Province of Manitoba are making some effort to deal with the problem in an intelligent, sane and wise way.

Recapping, I simply pointed out to the House, Mr. Speaker, that the minister had brought in a bill purporting to deal with this problem and pretending to deal with this problem of the broilers and the eggs, and he has drawn it so wide that it is going to be a piece of permanent legislation on the books of the Province of Ontario dealing with all of the products which come under the jurisdiction of The Farm Products Marketing Act.

I am saying that because of that, amongst many other reasons, we will oppose the bill on principle on second reading.

More important, I was indicating to the government very clearly that to the extent they think that the Act being passed by the federal parliament is going to solve the problem they are kidding themselves. They are kidding themselves because of the joint jurisdiction of the federal and provincial government over matters dealing with agriculture as set out in section 95 of The British North America Act, which I placed on the record before the dinner recess.

The point is very clear and very simple. As Mr. Justice Laskin, as he now is, a professor in constitutional law before he was elevated to the bench, had to say, what in fact is taking place is that the federal government under the exercise of the power of trade and commerce under section 91(2) of The British North America Act is preempting from this government, without any intervention by this government, the whole field with respect to the regulation of trade in agricultural products.

I am glad to see that the Minister of Trade and Development is here because the bill which is before us is a matter dealing with trade, not agriculture. The Minister of Agriculture and Food has abdicated his responsibility with respect to the provincial jurisdiction in the field of agriculture.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Do I take over the broilers now?

Mr. J. Renwick: It should have been a bill introduced by the Minister of Trade and Development. It may well be that the Minister of Trade and Development is incapable of grasping it—he strikes his head with his hand.

Mr. MacDonald: He deals only with swine.

Mr. J. Renwick: It is a very visible symbol of the inability of the government to deal with a problem of trade. He is dealing with it through the Minister of Agriculture and Food and he does not think it has anything to do with him. He thinks he is here to build houses. He is the Minister of Trade and Development.

Mr. Lawlor: He does not even do that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister arrived just in time.

Mr. J. Renwick: But the Minister of Trade and Development perhaps should recognize very clearly that he is talking about inter-provincial trade.

Hon. E. A. Winkler (Minister of Revenue): The member for Lakeshore is much too kind.

Mr. J. Renwick: The Minister of Trade and Development does not understand that the responsibility of this government, with respect to the broiler and the egg industry, is one to which he should direct his attention. He is obviously not going to do it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: How does the member know I am not?

Mr. Lawlor: It is him.

Mr. J. Renwick: I can tell. The minister was not here this afternoon. He did not even understand that the bill had anything to do with him.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is because I was directing my attention to this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's capacity for empire building is well known.

Mr. Lawlor: We know he is disinterested in broilers from way back.

Mr. J. Renwick: I will come back to the constitutional question in a few minutes. I want to deal with two other aspects of the bill, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Winkler: The member thinks broilers are something to do with the plumbing industry.

Mr. J. Renwick: The second aspect of the bill is that the government again is using the McRuer report as a camouflage to introduce legislation which is an intrusion upon civil rights, and which does not contain the kind of provisions which should protect the ordinary citizen of this province against the grant of these rights.

Mr. Lawlor: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. Renwick: Let us be perfectly clear. Disguised as an endeavour to protect a certain limited area of the agricultural industry in the Province of Ontario, the bill provides for the seizure and detention of persons' property. There is nothing to indicate that it has anything to do with the Province of Quebec, the Province of Manitoba or any other province. It is a power which we are asked to grant to the government to seize and detain any regulated product under any of the local boards established under The Farm Products Marketing Act. When we in this assembly are asked to approve of a bill with respect to the seizure and detention of other persons' property by Act of the government, we are entitled to have a very clear and explicit statement as to why that is necessary and whether the bill contains the protective provisions which are required to protect the individual's property in this province.

This bill fails in that regard. It fails on a number of counts. The first of the counts is that it fails because it is a sub-delegation—as the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) tried to indicate today from the most recent of the McRuer report which was tabled in the House today—it is a sub-delegation of power and there is no provision for anyone to know what the regulations are which the local board promulgates under the authority of the statute of the Legislature.

That is the first thing. There is nothing, so far as I know, and the minister can disabuse me if I am wrong, which requires any publication of any of the regulations by any of the local boards which are made pursuant to the authority which we are asked to give to the government.

The second point is an intrusion of civil rights. If it is necessary to seize and detain property one would think that the government, having gone through the McRuer report and picked out all the isolated recommendations and assiduously implemented them, would give some thought to the spirit and intent of the McRuer report. That simply said that in the future, if this government exercises or purports to exercise, through legislation which they alone can pass, arbitrary powers, there would have to be certain fundamental and basic protection.

There is nothing in this bill which indicates any procedure which can be taken by the person whose property is seized, any procedure which he can take by which he can secure the release of that property.

Mr. Lawlor: Right!

Mr. J. Renwick: I want the House, Mr. Speaker, to pause and understand what that means. "Any regulated product," for practical purposes means each of the products which is regulated—by how many, 18, 19 or 20 local boards in the field of agriculture—having nothing to do with inter-provincial trade at all, necessarily, they can be seized by the local board if they make regulations. They can be seized by the local board and there is no procedure spelled out in the statute by which action can be taken so that the person can go before some kind of a body.

At this particular point in history in the Province of Ontario, I say to the government, is there any kind of a body to which it can put forward its position—the person's position whose property has been taken and establish whether or not it has been done legitimately and wisely? The very seizing authority happens to be an officer or a delegate under the appropriate section of the Ontario farm marketing programme.

Mr. Lawlor: The minister is a bigger socialist than I am; he will not even give compensation.

Mr. J. Renwick: They seize it—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Why does he heckle the hon. member?

Mr. J. Renwick: —and the person—

Mr. Lawlor: I never heard of anything so arbitrary!

Mr. J. Renwick: And the person has no recourse, Mr. Speaker, no recourse!

If one looks at the second section of that bill, it is up to the local board to decide. If the local board is satisfied that the owner of the regulated product complies, it can be released. There is no body to which an appeal can be made. There is no way in which that arbitrary decision can be overturned.

For that reason, I believe the third or the fourth reason, the bill is defective. The bill is a fraud on the people of the province.

I am not going to stand here in this Legislature and hear the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) in his contribution to the Speech from the Throne debate, extol what this government has done to implement the McRuer report, while standing on the order paper in the name of the Minister of Agriculture and Food is a bill which allows for the arbitrary detention and seizure of property. With no provision for appeal, no reference made, only really lip service, as my friend the member for Lakeshore has pointed out, only lip service to the McRuer recommendation.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is the one. It says there is reasonable notice, reasonable evidence, belief on reasonable grounds that there has been a contravention of the statute, or that the private residence cannot be entered for the purpose of seizing the product. There is some provision that any of the regulations of the local board must be approved by the Farm Products Marketing Board. That is schoolchildren's compliance with the McRuer report. It shows no evidence whatsoever of any ability to comprehend the crisis that this government was in when Mr. McRuer was appointed for the purpose of reviewing the question of protection of civil liberties in this province.

If one will read the bill I cannot possibly understand how any member of the government, at least any member of the party that supports the government, can in any way, shape or form support this bill without substantial amendment to the provisions which are included in it. Then, they have the nerve, if I may coin a phrase, the unmitigated gall—

Mr. Lawlor: That is a good phrase.

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): Unmitigated plagiarism the member means.

Mr. J. Renwick: I may have stolen it from the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) who has used it on occasion. They had the unmitigated gall to say that any regulated product seized and detained under this section is seized and detained at the risk and expense of the owner. They seize it. On the question of the arbitrary seizure, the owner has no way of dealing with the question of the arbitrary seizure, and then they say it is at the risk and expense of the owner.

I speak to the members of the party which supports the government—how can they support such a bill in the light of the report which was tabled today in the name of Mr.

McRuer as part of the contribution of this government to the protection of civil liberties in the Province of Ontario?

Mr. Lawlor: Just how?

Mr. J. Renwick: If members will go back, not to the instant learning of the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer)—and I wish he was here today—not to the instant learning of the member for Downsview, but to the original report which my colleague the member for Lakeshore spoke about earlier this day. I just simply want to point it out for the purpose of underlining it that Mr. McRuer, in chapter 23 of volume 1 of his report, when he was dealing with the problem of the sub-delegation of regulatory authority under legislative sanction of this assembly, made this point. I repeat it solely for the purpose of underlining the crucial paragraph in what he had to say.

The authority to sub-delegate power to make regulations should not be conferred except in relation to the exercise of emergency powers. It does not appear that the scheme of the parent Act—

And he is referring to The Farm Products Marketing Act—

—would be frustrated or impaired in those cases where there is sub-delegation of regulation-making power if the regulations were subject to the approval of a political authority.

I say to the minister: How can he possibly defend the bill on the basis of implementation of the McRuer report when the McRuer report says two things which the minister has not spoken about. One is that there is an emergency which requires the sub-delegation of these powers to the local board. The second point of which is that if such regulations are made, they are to be subject to the approval of a political authority.

He has paid specious attention to the McRuer report by making the regulations of the local board subject to the approval of the Farm Products Marketing Board. The Farm Products Marketing Board is not in any sense the approval of a political authority. The Farm Products Marketing Board is appointed by this government. That is an appointed board, but that does not make it political. A political authority is a responsible minister responsible to this assembly or collectively the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council responsible to this assembly for that purpose. And that is another reason, Mr. Speaker, why we will not support the bill on second reading in this House.

We are also concerned, as an economic matter—and others in this party will deal with it—but we are concerned as to whether or not the minister is in fact inviting retaliation from other provinces within the country because of this persistence in this government of always fighting back.

There is a place and a time for fighting back but it is not an appropriate occasion to fight back in this way if on balance the retaliation against the agricultural community engaged in this part of the agricultural industry is going to be unnecessarily hurt by reason of the legislation which we may pass.

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, to the minister that he is in fact inviting retaliation, and he is inviting retaliation for the same fundamental and basic reasons that I tried to enunciate earlier, that the government does not understand how they should go about coping with an immediate problem in the agricultural industry pending the proper decision about how we are going to have an adequate working, co-operative federalism as established and inherent in the provisions of section 95 of The British North America Act.

I want to conclude my remarks on the second reading of this bill by reverting, not in any unnecessary length, to the constitutional question. The minister must know—certainly the Minister of Justice must know—that the whole story of the evolution under the constitution of this country from the time it was established to the present day, that this question of the marketing of farm products is part of an evolutionary problem.

It is part of a process which will become an effective process if this government does not abdicate its position. One need only go back—you can go back—you can talk about the Severn case in 1878; you can talk about the Parsons case, the one to which I referred before the dinner adjournment, in which Sir Oliver Mowatt intervened personally to argue the case; you can talk about Hodge and the Queen, and Russell and the Queen, and McCarthy and the Queen; you can talk about The National Farm Products Act in 1937; you can talk about the reference of this very bill; The Farm Products Marketing Act which went through for constitutional review in 1957; you can talk about all of the later cases which are involved in—

There was an interjection by the minister from Forest Hill (Mr. Dunlop) which I did not hear.

Hon. E. Dunlop (Minister without Portfolio): I said the member must have been reading Mr. Laskin's case book.

Mr. J. Renwick: Not only did I read it, I had the privilege of studying under Mr. Laskin.

Mr. MacDonald: And furthermore, he understands him.

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right.

I happen to be one of the persons who does believe that in this assembly there is not proper attention paid by this government to the wisdom which is involved in the constitutional law of this country as enunciated by Professor Laskin, as he then was.

Now let us get it perfectly clear. If that was in any denigrating sense, I want the member for Forest Hill, the Minister without Portfolio, to understand that what Professor Laskin, as he then was, was saying has come true; that this government is abdicating its constitutional responsibility by failing to engage in the on-going process of constitutional evolution by not intervening in this case in the Supreme Court of Canada on the reference between the conflict of the Court of Appeal in Quebec and the Court of Appeal in the Province of Manitoba.

That has got to be done. If it is not done, then I am simply saying that this ministry will end up—as they always do under the guise of trying to make federalism work—will end up fighting.

That is their only response. We have listened to it, disguised under all sorts of canopies, over many years now, but every time when the chips are down their concept of a working federalism is to fight the federal government, not to co-operate.

Mr. Lawlor: He is right.

Mr. Renwick: Now this party, the New Democratic Party, is engaged in a belief and a confidence in a federal system, a belief in the workings of the federal system.

Mr. Lawlor: They are really secret separatists all of them.

Mr. J. Renwick: We are simply saying, Mr. Speaker, to the government as it is now constituted, that it will be a serious, fundamental, basic mistake if this government does not intervene in the evolutionary process of the constitution of the country by intervening in the case before the Supreme Court of Canada.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Nobody said we are not going to intervene.

Mr. J. Renwick: Fine!

Mr. MacDonald: Well where has the government been for the last year when they have been in the courts?

Mr. J. Renwick: Is the government going to intervene?

Mr. MacDonald: Why did the government not support Manitoba in its reference to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): It has not gone through there.

Mr. MacDonald: The original reference. Where was the government then?

An hon. member: He has not said he was not going to intervene.

Mr. MacDonald: He has never said it up until now. We provoked it out of him at this point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There has been no reference to the Supreme Court of Canada yet.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, perhaps my attendance has been reasonably good in the House, but I take the minister's interjection to be that in due course he is in fact going to intervene. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We will determine that in the fullness of time.

Mr. Makarchuk (Brantford): That is an original phrase!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the minister not remain silent if he has nothing to say?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, in all due respect to my hon. friends across the floor, they are suggesting that the reference to the Manitoba Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Manitoba has already been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. MacDonald: We are not suggesting that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well, that is what I take out of what they have been saying all day. That is what they have been saying. We are suggesting that when the notice of leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada is sent to the Attorneys General of the various provinces on the matter of constitutionality, which involves this matter of Manitoba, then we will deal with the situation at that time. It has not come to that stage yet. We do not know whether it is going to proceed to the Supreme Court of Canada or not. All we know is what is in the papers.

Mr. MacDonald: Where was the minister when the original appeal was made to the Supreme Court of Canada?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am quite content with the Minister of Agriculture and Food's comment, and that perhaps is a good note on which I can sit down and depart from the debate. I take that to mean that in substance and in fact the government of the Province of Ontario will reverse its determination not to intervene and will intervene when the case comes before the Supreme Court of Canada. If so, we are happy and content.

We will oppose this bill on second reading for reasons which I have given, which are the constitutional reasons—the invasion and intrusion of individual civil liberties, disguised as compliance with the McRuer report; and the inability of the government to deal with the isolated special but important economic problems produced by this war between the provinces on the question of broilers and eggs.

On those grounds we will oppose the bill, but we are delighted to have the concession of the government that it will intervene in due course, in the fullness of time, when the matter comes before the Supreme Court of Canada. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I said nothing of the kind and I do not want the hon. member to sit down putting words in my mouth. I simply suggested to him the facts of the case are that it has not yet been referred to the Supreme Court of Canada. When it is referred—and when we are advised that it is referred—then we will take the matter under consideration as to what our position will be. I want to make that abundantly clear.

Hon. Mr. Crossman: That is the way you run a government.

Mr. D. A. Paterson (Essex South): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Before the minister replies, the member for Essex South.

Mr. Paterson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a few remarks to this Bill 10, without too much repetition, and to stay away from the legal angle that has been going on in regard to the constitutionality problem of which we are confronted.

In my own mind, I feel that the minister has been caught in a very nasty situation. I think all of us are aware that this impasse in the broiler business has been one of the real thorns in our marketing legislation in this province. In the minister's wisdom, and on certain advice, he has proceeded with this particular bill. I think we in this party feel that possibly he has received bad advice in the introduction of this particular bill.

The Province of Quebec has a bill on the statutes of that province, but I believe that at the present time they are winking at it. They are not enforcing it and much of our regulated product is flowing into that province. It must be the concern of egg producers and suchlike in eastern Ontario to have these large markets in Montreal with which they make their living.

Personally I can support such a bill if it was going to be directed against United States imports during our growing season. This I would like to see; I know my farmers would like to see something like this, but I realize that this is outside the jurisdiction of this province. I do not know whether it has any application whatsoever in the thinking of the minister and his officials that these products could be regulated in a manner such as is suggested here.

On checking in my riding in Essex county and in Kent county I find that the bulk of the egg producers and the broiler producers in our area are not in favour of this legislation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Broiler producers are not in favour of it?

Mr. Paterson: The ones that I have talked to in the Essex and Kent area do not seem to favour this. Certainly the producers of other agricultural products in Essex and Kent counties are quite concerned about this, for fear there might be some reciprocal action against some of their products. I would hope that this would not come about. This was what prompted the question I placed on the order paper several days ago requesting the dollar value of these various commodities that we ship into Quebec and, conversely, that they ship in to us.

The fear of the specialized agriculturalist in my area is that if the Quebec government—and that is a big "if" and we hope it does not implement it—does take reciprocal action against certain Ontario products that it will enlarge its acreage in onions or in some other products that it is now moving into on a much larger scale.

And when this federal legislation comes down and the courts decide on this matter—and if everything is thrown out in this Ontario bill—the consumer or the producers of these products will be faced with a much greater acreage in the Province of Quebec and Ontario, thereby flooding the market.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is already going on now.

Mr. Paterson: We feel that this bill is going to heighten it.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Just nonsense.

Mr. Paterson: This is the talk in the concessions in the rural areas in Essex and Kent counties.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is just nonsense.

Mr. Paterson: I do not feel so, Mr. Speaker. I have always admired the minister's tenacity to work and I have respected his actions on behalf of the farmers—not always his judgement, but certainly his willingness to work on their behalf.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the member mean the way the minister fought for crop insurance for the Essex farmers?

Mr. Paterson: Not in that—on other matters he has been—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh! I thought the hon. member always admired the way the minister fought for him.

Mr. Paterson: —a very hard-working minister with this government.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member must never admire anybody on the government side.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Paterson: That is right. But this is a minister with whom I have had very good co-operation on a great number of products, but I feel that he is barking up the wrong tree on this particular bill.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): He is milking in the wrong pasture.

Mr. MacDonald: Or in the wrong chicken shed!

Mr. Paterson: The people that I have talked to this past weekend feel that possibly, by taking action on this bill, specifically in relation to the broiler industry—and I guess I have got to put the words that are given to me—that the minister is, in fact, protecting the very large producers of eggs or broilers in this province, and some of the medium-sized and some of the smaller producers, who in fact are owned or controlled by the feed companies.

This is a feeling in the rural areas, in many cases where they have lost control of their own destiny because they are so far in debt to the major feed companies.

This is the word that is coming off the concessions. It appears to a great number of people, and I hope that this is not the case, that this is the basic reason for this bill—and I hope it does not have the repercussions that many of these people have expressed to me and that might jeopardize the total of the agriculture production in our province and its relation to Quebec and the eastern markets of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am still a little overwhelmed by the profound knowledge of my colleague from Riverdale on the question of eggs and broilers. It just goes to show that when one approaches even such lowly forms of life from the intricacies of the law, profound wisdom flows.

Seriously, however, he raised a number of points which I think this government, if it is going to protect the interests of agriculture and if it is going to play a constructive role in building one country, has got to pay some attention to. I suspect that it is just possible, to borrow a phrase from the Prime Minister, it is just possible that "the germ of an idea" has been handed to the Minister of Agriculture and Food that he might ponder.

My remarks are not going to be lengthy, because I think that most of the things that need to be said have been said, and well said. Therefore a brief recapitulation on one or two points and then one or two relatively new points that I want to add.

I do not think the minister himself can deny the fact that this bill raises the prospects of a serious escalation of the inter-provincial trade warfare that is going on in this country at the present time. He has not denied it. Indeed there is no point in denying it because the bill is to give powers which will result in an escalation of that interprovincial trade warfare. The net result is going to be some further contribution to the balkanization of Canada.

Now the minister defends his position in saying that he has an initial paramount responsibility to defend his farmers, those who happen to be producing broilers. But I think there are a lot of other factors which I hope I can weave into the picture as I am dealing with it.

The minister has the choice, faced with this kind of situation, of either heating up the situation or cooling it down. Now we know, having watched the minister for many years, that if he gets into a rather tough fight he relishes it. He has a capacity for explosive breaking-out in every direction, and this bill is a legislative personification of that characteristic of the minister. Instead of sitting down, instead of working it out, as has been suggested by earlier speakers, with the two provincial Ministers of Agriculture and, if necessary, with the government at Ottawa, he is willing to heat the whole situation up. Indeed, he is going to make a bad situation worse.

When you combine with that the fact that on this issue we have become bogged down in a constitutional morass in Canada, and again it is going from bad to worse. The minister the other day interjected, when we raised some aspect of this situation, that the government in Manitoba had introduced politics in this and gone off on the wrong road in dealing with the problem, when it went directly to the Supreme Court of Canada.

Surely, in retrospect, that was the thing to have done, if the Supreme Court of Canada could have been persuaded to have dealt with the issue, because now we have a situation in which the highest court in the Province of Quebec has said that the powers as exercised by the Quebec government in its legislation are valid, whereas the highest court in the Province of Manitoba has said that the exercise of those powers by the government of Manitoba is invalid.

Now the conflict has got to be resolved; it has got to be resolved at the highest court in the land. I would have hoped, instead of getting up on his little political podium the other day, that the minister would have devoted some of that energy in getting this government to move, as I think it might have moved, in making representations along with the government of Manitoba, in the original reference to the Supreme Court of Canada, which would have resolved the issue to begin with, instead of having to go back by the devious route of the various courts in Manitoba and Quebec and, then, ultimately back to the Supreme Court of Canada.

In other words, the government of Manitoba took the initiative to resolve the issue right at the outset. Now many, many months—indeed, it may be a year or two later—we will get it resolved by returning to the same Supreme Court of the land. Now the unfortunate thing about this, Mr. Speaker, is that the minister is a member of a government which is reiterating its strong, continued support for the Robarts approach to constitutional problems and for building one Canada. Surely, it becomes a bit of a mockery that a minister of this government should, on one hand, be paying tribute to the former Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) and the kind of approach he took to the constitution and dealing with constitutional problems, and then, on the other hand, coming into the House with this kind of legislation, which inevitably is going to lead to a further balkanization of Canada.

So there is one serious aspect of this bill—from the Canadian point of view. We should look beyond the Province of Ontario, our immediate concerns and our immediate obligations to the broader obligations of Canada because, if I can paraphrase rather freely the comments of the hon. member for London North (Mr. Robarts), on a number of occasions, what is good for Canada has to be good for Ontario. This is not going to be good for Canada and therefore ultimately it is not going to be good for Ontario.

However, let me narrow my concern for a moment to the Province of Ontario. I am, quite frankly, not in the position to speak with the kind of authority I would like on a key issue—what is the trade flow between the Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec on agricultural products? I was interested in the assertion this afternoon of, I think the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Innes), who contended that Ontario exported to Quebec—if I may use that terminology—about 20 per cent more agricultural products than it imported from Quebec. I think the hon. member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Gaunt) said it was a 10-to-7 ratio.

Quite frankly, I do not know and the intriguing thing is that in Canada nobody knows.

The Dominion Bureau of Statistics has never gathered the statistics on interprovincial trade. I have talked to some of the statisticians in the minister's department as I tried to get some ball-park assessment of this situation a few days ago, and I certainly was left with the impression that the flow of Ontario agricultural product to the Province of Quebec, as compared with the reverse flow, is far greater than a 100-to-80-percentage ratio as was suggested by the hon. member for Oxford. I heard some people contend that it is as much as 10 times as great from Ontario to Quebec as it is from Quebec to Ontario.

I do not know what the appropriate and the accurate figure is and I trust that this government, in conjunction I assume with the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, is going to get these statistics, because they are fundamental to a real assessment of the problem we are getting ourselves into.

However, let me add another dimension to it. If the flow of Ontario agricultural products to Quebec is that much greater, as is suggested by many people, what the minister, in effect, is doing is heating up an interprovincial trade warfare in which it is impossible for the Province of Ontario not to be more greatly hurt than Quebec in the long run. If we have far more of our agricultural produce going into Quebec than Quebec has coming into Ontario, if the government challenges them to this kind of a tit-for-tat retaliatory kind of approach, we are going to suffer.

In fact, the thing that intrigues me most, and I say this in the presence of all too few members from that solid land of eastern Ontario which is represented by Tories in this House—

Mr. Yakabuski: The member's party has not too many over there itself.

Mr. MacDonald:—just listen for a moment. In counties like Prescott and Russell, I am informed by people who are very knowledgeable about the picture, as much as 90 per cent of their produce goes to the province of Quebec. As far west as Grenville and Dundas, 70 to 80 per cent of their produce goes into the Province of Quebec. As far west as Leeds, still as much as 50 per cent of their produce is going into the Province of Quebec.

Somebody said 60? Well, 50 to 60 per cent.

Which simply means this, Mr. Speaker, that by "heating up" the interprovincial trade warfare in which we in the Province of Ontario are exporting so much more of our agricultural produce, and thereby inviting retaliatory action, the minister is going to hurt the whole of the agricultural industry in the Province of Ontario. He is going to deal a devastating blow, particularly to the eastern part of Ontario because such an overwhelming portion of its produce goes to the Province of Quebec.

This is why I cannot understand what the minister is up to.

He says that he is going to protect the broiler industry. Well, I am not going to repeat everything that the hon. member for Huron-Bruce said this afternoon, but I would like to have a bit more knowledge as to where the thrust came from for the minister to intervene at this point and fight for the broiler industry.

Mr. Sargent: From the big feed companies.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, that has been said and I want to repeat it. He poses as a champion of the little broiler producer, but may I suggest to the minister if he examine it in his heart of hearts, the thrust for this whole thing came from the board. And the dominant and the influential people on the board are the big quota holders. And the big quota holders are invariably people who are tied in with the feed industry.

It is nonsense for the minister to try to pose as the champion of the little broiler producers against those big integrators in Quebec, when in fact he is responding to the pressures and the lobbying of the big integrated broiler producers in the Province of Ontario.

What the minister is going to do, Mr. Speaker, in protecting a small segment of the agricultural industry in the Province of Ontario, is sacrifice the overall welfare of the agricultural industry across the whole province. With that flow of agricultural produce to the Province of Quebec—in inviting retaliatory action—he is really going to create a very serious problem for the farmers of this province.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Sargent: Pull the bill!

Mr. MacDonald: For that reason, Mr. Speaker, we are going to oppose second reading. There have been many other solid constitutional arguments that have been advanced in terms of the continued invasion of civil rights while this government prates about royal commissions and the implementation of their recommendations to protect civil rights. But those only bolster the essential economic argument, and on that I rest my case and I think the case is conclusive.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want briefly to bring up two areas of the minister's position concerning this bill that really concern me.

The first one that did surprise me was a point that he reiterated a few minutes ago—that he had not yet stated the position he will take if and when—and we believe it is just when—this case comes before the Supreme Court of Canada. It seems to me that, knowing this government's interest and the minister's interest—that we are Canadians first and Ontarians second—there is no question about the position the minister will take, and take as vigorously as he can, to support those who are upset with great reason with this whole measure of balkanization of agricultural markets within Canada.

Every effort this minister should be making through the courts and every effort he should be making politically to the government in Ottawa should be that of endeavouring to break down those barriers which have been thrown up, artificially balkanizing our agricultural markets in this country. Surely we should be emphasizing and fighting for that first and foremost and announcing our position as the major province in this country, and such an important agricultural producer that we are, for Canada, a Canadian market and perhaps even a North American market.

Above all, we should demonstrate we are not encouraging and playing tit-for-tat with any other province which chooses to take this very short-term and very unenlightened approach to our Canadian agricultural market.

The second point I wish to bring to the attention of the House is the matter of what we do when we introduce a temporary, short-term measure. Tonight there was a party in the pages' quarters for a couple of lads who are having birthdays and among the candles on the cake were a couple of trick ones. The boys thought they were blowing out the candles and suddenly the fire kept on coming up in two and three spots again. It was almost impossible for them to extinguish the blaze.

This is the sort of situation we are going to find ourselves in by resorting to very short-term—and we in our hearts know incorrect—approaches to dealing with a problem that all of us regret our producers in this province are facing. A few specialized groups particularly are facing these problems.

Surely we cannot resort to these short-term procedures? In business we know it is a great mistake, and in agriculture we know it is a great mistake.

If the minister is a chess player, he will know that he has to see the moves a long way ahead or first thing he knows, he has lost the game. I think—in fact I know—he is going to find this bill is going to lose him the game; and lose the game, not just for him, but for the farmers of this province.

I urge the minister to think of the position, not just as a temporary stopgap but to take a longer-term view of the whole situation and withdraw the bill and fight for once again having an all-Canadian approach to the marketing of agricultural products.

Mr. Speaker: Any further speakers before the minister sums up?

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, just a few points on the same thing.

Earlier today the Minister of University Affairs (Mr. White) announced that there will be a history written of the Premiers of this province, and probably one of the things that will be written about this Premier of the province is the fact that he presided over the great egg and broiler war.

It will be a short chapter I must admit.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): A short history.

Mr. Makarchuk: It will be a short history; a short chapter in the book. I hope the book is an on-going thing after that.

But it is a very silly situation to bring in, that we have to be involved in this kind of a battle, the results of which, of course, would be to the detriment of the country. I think the minister realizes that it is an economic problem. It is an economic problem resulting from the fact that the farmers have not been getting a fair return for their produce. It has been argued in this House on numerous occasions. We have asked the government to investigate the prices that the farmers have to pay for the inputs. We have asked the government, or the party in power, and we are asking them to investigate, whether the farmers have been getting a fair return on the outputs on the produce they sell, and on all occasions the government refused to act. Now a situation develops and it brings in this particular band-aid measure which will only inject and extend the whole situation into something ridiculous.

This matter, Mr. Speaker, was raised in the House by myself in questions of the Minister of Agriculture and Food when the problem developed in Manitoba. I asked the minister then whether he would try to find out, and perhaps get involved at that time, to see if he could defuse the situation, or take sides and perhaps call a conference of the various agricultural ministers in the country with the federal minister to try and defuse the situation. He refused to act at that particular time. Now he comes in with this particular bill. He has embarked on a course that is going to hurt the farmers. It is certainly going to hurt the people of this province, and eventually it will hurt the country as well. We have no choice; we have to oppose this particular bill.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate too long as a number of speakers have covered almost all of the things that need to be covered, I would suppose. Maybe we wonder why we get into these positions that we are in. It is a matter, I suppose, of over-production in some areas of our country, and the broiler industry, certainly, was over-produced in Quebec in the last few months or the last couple of years. I see that they have exported three million pounds of poultry to Japan and they were bailed out apparently by the federal government to get an export market. The word is now that they are going to be better boys and not produce so much.

But I just do not think that we can live in a province like Ontario and not think we are Canadians—at least I always felt that I am a Canadian first. I was born in Canada, so I think I am a Canadian first and an Ontarian second. Whether everybody agrees with that principle or not I do not know, but I think I do.

I worked in the customs and immigration service for a couple of years and never thought the day would come when we might have to have such things on the borders between each province. Of course, we know that The British North America Act allows no custom duties between provinces, but this just does not seem right at all for a country like Canada—a growing country with a large area, a small population but great potential yet—to start having barriers between each province. I think that there are other ways of conquering this. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture in Quebec and the Minister of Agriculture and Food here and whatever other provinces which are felt necessary should be able to get together—I think the minister said the other day he was not fluent in French but his deputy minister was; but I am sure that he can find someone who is very fluent in French and get his point across—surely that is not too much of a problem, and I do not think that this is proper legislation at this time whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker: Any further speakers before the minister sums up? The hon. minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with a great deal of interest this afternoon to the various points that were put by the respective speakers concerning this legislation.

Mr. Sargent: No support over there at all.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I would have to say, Mr. Speaker, that I am more than concerned with the attitude that has been taken to this legislation. I was as surprised as anyone to see the McRuer report presented this afternoon—I did not even know it had been submitted to the government—and for the hon. member for Downsview who absents himself from the House this evening to suggest—

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): He will be here.

Hon. Mr. Stewart:—that I knew that the report was out and that I should have consulted with whoever had the report, to me was less than dignified as far as a member of the House is concerned. I suppose it can be expected of that member, but I do not think it was quite the thing to do.

I listened with some interest to the Leader of the Opposition when he suggested that there were alternatives open that we should have pursued, and I would have liked the Leader of the Opposition to have been in the House this evening to have heard me explain that discussions took place on innumerable occasions—in fact, he mentioned one of the occasions when he referred to the meeting of ministers held in Regina in 1968, when it was I who raised the question there with the new Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Olson, that something had to be done to resolve the issue that was developing as far as poultry products were concerned in interprovincial trade in Canada.

There had been discussions held on innumerable occasions before that between myself and my deputy and the minister and his deputy in the Province of Quebec. There had been discussions held between myself and other ministers in Canada at previous agricultural ministers' meetings to that one held in Regina in 1968, to which the Leader of the Opposition referred.

It was as plain as the nose on anyone's face that we were faced with a real problem as far as the marketing of poultry products is concerned in Canada—and there is a very simple reason for it: Poultry products can be multiplied and produced in abundance virtually overnight. You cannot do this with beef. Much less can you do it with hogs. But you can get into mass production of poultry products overnight relatively, and of course the problem built up. There is no question that it built up. We recognized it. We could see it coming.

We saw the virtually uninhibited production of eggs developing in Ontario. We saw what was happening in the Province of Ontario. We saw what was happening in the Province of Manitoba, with large corporate interests moving in, some of them with half a million birds producing eggs in the Province of Manitoba today—not owned by the farmers, owned by corporate interests.

We saw the same thing happening in the Province of Quebec as far as broiler production was concerned. Our broiler producers, if I can recall for the benefit of the members of the House, Mr. Speaker, in the early 1960s were suffering from prices that were at almost disaster levels. They decided to do something about it by voting in an agency marketing plan which would provide for supply management in broilers. They did this themselves. They established quotas, they established price, and they increased those quotas based on what the market would demand and based of course on the increase in population and the increase in the popularity of their product on the market. But while they were increasing production, say by six per cent in a given period, in the same period Quebec increased by 26 per cent. I just point that out as an illustration. There was no quota restriction in the Province of Quebec; there was no quota restriction in most of the other provinces, but we did have it here.

Now we have recognized the problem that we could not say to our egg producers in Ontario, "You are shipping eggs into the Province of Quebec—cease and desist." That was their right. They were doing it, and Quebec obviously needed those eggs. As the Quebec Minister of Agriculture himself told me within the last few weeks, "We require and need at least 30,000 cases of eggs from the Province of Ontario every week." Now what is wrong with them shipping them in there? But he goes on to say, "I do not want those eggs to come in at prices that will put our producers out of business."

The big egg producers of Quebec voted a number of months ago the establishment of a plan—it was finally introduced last year—which provided for the establishment of a central selling agency for eggs in the Province of Quebec. It was implemented, I believe it was, in May or June of 1970, and required that all eggs—not only produced in Quebec but marketed in Quebec from outside—had to be sold to that agency, and that agency would disperse them throughout the province and the agency would pay the producers for them.

It caught our producers completely unaware. I recall the great distress that many of them exhibited here in the Province of Ontario because they did not know whether they were going to be allowed to participate in this new plan or not. But the law was the law, and as far as we were concerned, Quebec had decided that this was what they wanted to do for their egg producers; many of our producers got permission to ship in through FEDCO.

The unfortunate part of it is that FEDCO, in my humble opinion—and this is only an opinion, but I have expressed it to the minister of Quebec and I express it here—perhaps had established the price ratio too high to make the plan really effective. When you set a price differential between Toronto and Montreal, of the kind of difference that was established, then it simply encourages people to ship eggs into the Province of Quebec other than through FEDCO. And this happened, obviously it happened. Black-market eggs went into Quebec, and I am told by some producer-packer-shippers in Ontario that they are shipping them in there and are not observing the law as far as the Province of Quebec is concerned.

But it is up to the Province of Quebec to enforce that law if they want to enforce it; that is their prerogative. They have the teeth; they have the right. It is their job to do it. Our job is to be responsible to the producers of the Province of Ontario.

The broiler producers of Canada outside of the Province of Ontario are required to have marketing permits to sell broilers in Ontario. We have not said to them that they cannot ship broilers into Ontario. We have not said to them that they cannot store broilers in Ontario. We have not said to them that they cannot send them through the Province of Ontario to sell in other markets. We have simply said that when they sell broilers in Ontario they require a marketing permit to do so. And in my opinion—and this opinion is shared by many people, both at provincial and federal level—this is not ultra vires of The British North America Act.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Where are the free-enterprise boys?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: So here we are. I find it interesting, Mr. Speaker, that no one rose on his feet when this House opened to criticize what we did in giving the broiler producers of Ontario on September 3, 1970, the right to issue these marketing permits. No one said a word. The Opposition apparently approved of what we did; they raised no objection. Now we simply introduce a section in The Farm Products Marketing Act which provides for enforcement through seizure and detention of products, which applies to all products; we are not discriminating against anyone. We are simply putting that legislation forward because it is in many other statutes that the members of this House voted unanimously to put in. There it is.

Now why the opposition to this from my friends across the aisle? They voted for meat inspection, we have it there; they voted for The Beef Cattle Marketing Act, we have it there; they voted for many such Acts. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to call to memory that The Farm Products Marketing Act was passed in 1937 by the Liberal government of that day. Here the Liberals are today saying that we are doing the wrong thing in protecting the interests of the farm people of the province.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is what they are saying, my friends; that is what they are saying. As for my hon. friend from York South, I have always listened to him with great interest because I think, even though he is not a farmer, he has forgotten more about the agricultural industry in this province than all the rest of his caucus ever knew. I would suggest this—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That does not say that he knows very much, Mr. Speaker, but it does say he knows a lot more than all the rest of them put together.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): He is magnificent.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: He talked about the possible escalation of the provincial trade war and how Ontario should have joined Manitoba in referral to the Supreme Court. Nobody has said, as I said earlier, that we are not going to. He talked about supply management as not being good for Canada. The former leader of the socialist party, the member for York South, was saying in this House that supply management is not good for Canada. Mr. Speaker, history has been made here tonight, really it has.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is what I got out of it. He said it is not good for Canada and, therefore, it is not good for Ontario. Well, there it is.

Mr. MacDonald: Wait until Pat Chefurka gets the minister.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: As a matter of fact, I am looking forward to that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand what happened to the member for York South. He came up to Middlesex North to have a meeting of the farmers. By Jove! He was going to tell those farmers what a terrible guy that fellow Stewart was.

Mr. Breithaupt: They already knew.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Many of them maybe did know a great deal, but he was going to reinforce their knowledge. He introduced one of the eastern Canadian editors of a national farm magazine as the next candidate in Middlesex North.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Well now, that is the report that came back.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister's spies at that meeting were off-base.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: They came back and said that was the chap who was introduced. I could not understand what happened, for all of a sudden that guy just disappeared.

Mr. MacDonald: They came back, but I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is that not too bad, because I cannot understand why he did not say that? He persuaded that particular person and his family to come to Toronto as the delegates from Middlesex North to the leadership convention of the ND Party.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, the Minister of Agriculture and Food must know that I do not, nor does anybody else, appoint delegates for any riding association. They are elected by that riding association. He thinks that democracy always operates in a Tory fashion.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The NDP nomination meeting in my riding was held in a telephone booth.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have that matter clarified. I wondered what happened to that fellow for a long time. Now I know. Let me get back to this legislation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What will the young NDPers say? Tell us about them.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have been wondering what all of the discussion has been.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, if anyone thinks that I, as Minister of Agriculture and Food for the Province of Ontario, have not turned every stone that I can think of turning to develop a national programme of marketing in Canada, they just do not know the story. I have done everything that I can possibly think of doing to generate some way of sitting down around the table and working out these matters of great complexities.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Why clutter it up now, though?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend says, "Why clutter it up now?" I suggest to him that what he is saying and what has been said by many others this afternoon and this evening is simply this, that we are ready and we are willing; we want to support national marketing legislation where it applies to commodities where there are problems with interprovincial trade.

But when is this going to come about? We do not know. We have been waiting for months to get this legislation through the House of Commons. We all know the reasons. I am not pretending to anybody nor am I throwing bricks at anybody but we know what has happened.

We felt, quite frankly, that the answer does not quite lie in the referral to the Supreme Court, because heaven only knows when that report will come down. And what are our broiler producers to do in the meantime? Are they to be thrown to the wolves? Are they to go down the drain? Are their investments to be thrown away, or are we to say to them, "In the meantime we are going to look after your interests"? We will continue to work, Mr. Speaker, for the development of the bill at the national level. That is our objective and our purpose.

Mr. Speaker, when somebody says to me tonight that all I am interested in are the large producers—the people associated with the feed companies, with the processing companies—that they are the only ones I am protecting, they just do not know the story.

Here I have, I sent out for and got—I did not know until tonight what quotas the broiler board members have—the board members. I have them right before me.

Mr. MacDonald: We are not talking about the board members.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: We are talking—the hon. member referred to the board members—yes, he did.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: If the minister wants to clarify this point, let him clarify it. I was not talking about the board's members. I was talking about the top six quota holders.

Now, will the hon. minister give us the figures for the top six quota holders, because none of them is a member of the board?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is not what the hon. member said, Mr. Speaker.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, it is not what the hon. member said.

Mr. MacDonald: I have them all here.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The hon. member said that I was supporting the members of the board who were integrated operators with the feed companies who held big quotas.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the hon. member intended to say, all I know is what I heard.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: They pay the freight company anyway.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: The figures that I had given to me of the board members' quotas—and since it was raised I think it is fair to report them:

Gerald Tedford, the chairman of the board—a 25,000-bird quota, four times per year.

Mr. McLeod—I believe that is Ken McLeod—15,000, Stapleton 80,000, Woods 32,000, Tisdale 30,000, Person 7,000, Hepburn 20,000 to 30,000, Enns 28,000, Martin 25,000.

Mr. MacDonald: What about Jim McGrath and the others?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not know. He is not a member of the board.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the hon. minister does not know about them?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not even know the man.

Mr. MacDonald: These are the front men on the board. How about the big boys behind the scene?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have no idea about them because I have—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the hon. minister would not know! The hon. minister has not named the top six quota holders.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have no idea who they are.

An hon. member: Are they members of the board?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, they are not. All I do know, Mr. Speaker, is that I have—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please!

Mr. Lawlor: Does the hon. minister know or does he not know?

Mr. Stewart: I find it difficult, Mr. Speaker, to understand why the hon. member for York South takes such extreme exception to what we are trying to do to protect the interests of farmers in Ontario. He has always said that we should not be breathing over the shoulder of the farmers of Ontario in marketing legislation—we should let them run it themselves and not take that paternalistic attitude. These are the words he used before and tonight he has really taken the other approach. I just do not understand that at all.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister has taken four different approaches in the same speech.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: There was reference made to the fact—with great eloquence by my friend the member for Riverdale—that there was no provision for appeal in this marketing legislation.

I would direct his attention—and I assume that he has not read The Farm Products Marketing Act—to section 10(a) which is the appeal section of the Act. It covers two pages of the Act, Mr. Speaker, in outlining every method of appeal that is “open to any person deeming himself aggrieved by any order, direction or decision of a local board.”

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Riverdale just lost his QC to the Minister of Agriculture and Food.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I have to ask, why would a man make a statement like that? I just do not understand that at all. So that deals with that situation, I think, quite effectively.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. minister has missed the main point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: My hon. friend suggests that what we are doing is ultra vires of The British North America Act. We challenge that very definitely. We do not believe that it is.

Reference was made to a decision of the Manitoba Supreme Court which was in direct opposite opinion to the same court in the Province of Quebec—based, I believe, on almost an identical plan referred to both courts. Here we have a difference of opinion.

But those plans are not the same kind of a plan that we have in the Province of Ontario. There is no difference between the Quebec and Manitoba plans that I can see. Maybe there is something the lawyers can see, but I do not see the difference. But it is entirely different to what we have in the Province of Ontario.

We are simply talking about marketing the product in the Province of Ontario. The purposes of The Farm Products Marketing Act as described in section 2, Mr. Speaker, are: "to provide for the control and regulation in any or all respects of the marketing within Ontario of farm products." There it is.

Surely what we are attempting to do is to help the people, but the Opposition members do not seem to want to help. That, to me, is a revelation that I am astounded to realize and recognize in this House today. I really am.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Shame!

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): The member for Huron-Bruce must be embarrassed.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Where is the leader of the NDP if this is so important a matter of civil rights? Where is he?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will bet that he is at the hockey game.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I know he is at the hockey game.

An hon. member: He is not at the hockey game.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order, please!

Mr. Sargent: Would the minister accept a question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: So important a matter as civil rights!

Mr. Sargent: Does the minister not think it is completely inconceivable that we have to set up trade barriers within our own country?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh well!

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would say that it would be preferable if we could resolve the matter around the table of negotiation. I have suggested this time and again to people in Quebec, in Ontario, in Manitoba and in many other provinces of Canada. Since we cannot resolve it around the table until we have a national marketing Act—similar to The Canadian Dairy Commission Act which acted really as a catalyst for the various dairy boards within the provinces of Canada to work under—I think we have to take the next best course of action.

Quite frankly, in this legislation that we are providing here, we are not just saying seizure of a product coming here from some other province. We are not discriminating against producers from other provinces. We are saying that this is general seizure and detention legislation that applies to all products.

Supposing broiler producers within the Province of Ontario decide to ignore their quota and go on and produce far beyond their quotas and attempt to market them just as producers in other provinces are attempting to market. Are we to do something about that? This is what this legislation is intended to do. It is not designed, it is not directed, at such other places specifically.

It is similar legislation to what we have everywhere else and quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I fail to understand why we have had such opposition to this particular legislation. We think it is proper; we think it is right. I do not know what my hon. friend from Waterloo South (Mr. Reuter) has suggested, I have no idea, but I do know that on March 26 this year, in meeting with the federal minister and the other ministers from across Canada and their deputies at Ottawa, the matter of national marketing legislation came up. It was generally agreed by all of us that the proper way to solve this thing is around the table.

But unless you have something to work with, unless you have a vehicle, there is just no way to resolve it, because people say "There is no authority here; we ignore it." This is what has happened. In the Province of Ontario since September 3, there was a sort of a gentleman's agreement that people abided by the marketing permit regulations.

Now there are people who are saying "We are ignoring that and we are going to challenge your legislation. We are going to pour broilers in here." There are chain stores saying "We are going to sell those broilers and you try and stop us." They know full well that in the marketing legislation we have in the Province of Ontario there is no effective teeth to do it.

The legislation of the Province of New Brunswick—and I have it right here—and the legislation of the Province of British Columbia does have those clauses. We are simply introducing this amendment. My guess is it will never be used in this province. I think it will effectively control the whole issue. We will put the fire out. We will contain the issue and in my opinion, and I hope beyond hope, we will have that national marketing legislation.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude this brief reply to hours of debate this afternoon I would refer to my presentation to the standing committee on agriculture in the House of Commons. I believe my hon. friend, the member for York South, attended those hearings; I am not sure whether there were other members there or not. But on page 3, and I quote, Mr. Speaker,

I suggest to you that the question facing this committee is not should we or should we not have national marketing legislation but rather it is how soon can we expect to have national marketing legislation to bring order and stability to the industry. We can scarcely stand idly by and allow our producers who have adopted supply management programmes to become buried under the unplanned production of other areas that is literally dumped on our markets. Until a national marketing Act has been developed and proclaimed, provinces will be forced to use whatever measures they can develop to protect the interests of their producers. It is possible that voluntary agreements can be established, but our experience has indicated little success by this method.

That sums up the position of this government, Mr. Speaker. I suggest to all hon. members of this House that we support this legislation; that we provide the protection that is necessary; and that we lend all the support that we can in this government—

Mr. J. Renwick: The minister had better rally them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —to the passage of that national legislation. Bearing in mind the comments made by my friend from Riverdale, we are not in any way selling out the farm people of the Province of Ontario through national legislation. We are simply saying that we as people, responsible people in this province, will sit down around the table with federal people and our counterparts from other provinces to work out this complex and difficult situation—

Mr. J. Renwick: The government will have lost its constitutional power.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —for the benefit of all producers of all Canada, including Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The minister has got my vote.

Mr. Makarchuk: Never has so much eloquence been wasted on one egg.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Who are you?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Mr. Sargent: That about defines the member's position on agriculture, too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Was the member for Riverdale wrong about the appeal?

Mr. Speaker: Order! Hon. Mr. Stewart moves that bill—

Hon. J. H. White (Minister of University Affairs): The member will be sorry.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Mr. Stewart moves that Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act, be now read a second time.

Mr. Nixon moves that the motion be amended by striking out the word "now", and adding thereto the words "this day six months hence".

Now, by our standing order number 46A, the first question to be decided, of course, is whether the bill shall now be read the second time.

The House divided on the question, shall the bill be now read a second time, which was approved on the following vote:

Clerk of the House: House in committee of the Whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

House in committee on Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Mr. Chairman: Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act. Are there any comments, questions or amendments to any section of this bill? If not, shall the bill be reported?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, as usual, the government either does not know what the business is going to be or it moves precipitously to force a bill through the House. I have not yet had an opportunity to write the amendment to the section which is required at least to indicate our concern about it. Therefore, perhaps, Mr. Chairman, if while I am commenting I also write at the same time, I may be able to move the proposed amendment.

Mr. Chairman: What section does the hon. member wish to amend?

Mr. J. Renwick: It is clause 1 of the bill, which would be section 12*b* of the Act, which would be subsection 6 of section 12*b* of clause 1, and the motion which I would like to move is that the word "board" be deleted, and in substitution for the word "board" the words "the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council" be substituted, and that the further words be added to the clause, "and that any such regulations, before coming into effect, would be published pursuant to The Regulations Act of the Province of Ontario." That is the substance of the motion, Mr. Chairman, and if I could have a moment to write it out, I will do so.

Mr. Chairman: If the hon. member will take the time now to write out the motion, we will hold up proceedings.

Mr. J. Renwick: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Mr. J. Renwick moves that the word "board" be deleted and the words "Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council" be added, "and that no such regulation—it says "that the word 'board' be deleted and the words "Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council"—does the hon. member mean be substituted therefor, because he does not say anything in the motion at all?

Clerk of the House: Mr. Speaker, the "ayes" are 47, the "nays" are 26.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Stewart moves third reading of Bill 10.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, may we suggest that the bill go to Committee of the Whole House at the appropriate time?

Mr. Speaker: Yes, the Speaker, of course, inquires to know whether the bill goes to third reading or not.

Shall this bill be ordered for third reading?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Committee of the Whole House?

Some hon. members: Yes.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, I gather it is not the intention of the minister to send it to what used to be the agricultural committee, now the natural resources committee.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the House leader that we move the House into Committee of the Whole and deal with the bill.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I intended that the word "board" be deleted and the words which I have inserted there be inserted in lieu of the word "board".

Mr. Chairman: In lieu thereof.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: "And that no such regulation come into force until it is published pursuant to The Regulations Act."

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think the purport of the amendment is perfectly clear. It is an amendment to subsection 6 of section 12b of clause 1 of the proposed Act. It is designed to meet two of the principal recommendations of the McRuer report. One is that any regulations which have this kind of drastic effect with respect to the rights in property of persons in the province should be first of all approved, not by a board but be subject to approval by the government, that is the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, before they come into force. And, in addition, before they come into force, they should be published in the Ontario Gazette so that everyone in the province is given notice of the terms of those regulations.

I think it is a perfectly reasonable and proper amendment. It is consistent with the remarks which we made on this particular point on second reading and is certainly consistent with the spirit and indeed the precise recommendations of Mr. McRuer, both in his most recent report and in his earlier report to which reference was made earlier this afternoon.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The hon. member is right, but it will not sell.

Mr. M. Gaunt (Huron-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that we, in this party, will support the amendment. I gather, under legal language, the amendment, and the purport of the amendment, means that the delegated power cannot be redelegated.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): Does the member for Huron-Bruce understand it? Does he understand the amendment?

Mr. J. Renwick: It has to at least come back to the government.

Mr. Gaunt: It has to at least come back to the government, and we support that principle. My friend from—

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Trade and Development): Downsview?

Mr. Gaunt: —Downsview (Mr. Singer) this afternoon made some lengthy comments with respect to the delegation of powers under the Act, and I think that this amendment makes good sense.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Abundant good sense!

Mr. Gaunt: Abundant good sense.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): For that reason, the government will turn it down. It makes good sense.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister wish to comment on the amendment?

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): Mr. Chairman, on the surface the amendment appears to be quite reasonable. However, I believe from a purely legal standpoint of the terms and regulations of The Farm Products Marketing Act that when the hon. member recognizes that subsection 6 reads: "No regulation made by a local board . . ." a local board is an elected board. These are the people who are producer-members elected by their peers in the country; fellow producers of the commodity involved in such regulations do not have to come back to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

If the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, in other words the government, had appointed the local board, then any regulation they make, or may make, has to be returned to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council for approval. But because this is an elected board, that is not required. They simply report their regulation to the Farm Products Marketing Board, which is a board appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The minister should not have told them.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is as I understand it. Am I correct in this description? I am told that I am, and this is the reason why it is not necessary that this be done.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Does the hon. member for Huron-Bruce not think that it makes abundant good sense?

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. J. Renwick's motion?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, if I may just comment on what the minister had to say, that the local board may well be an elected board.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Sure, what is the difference?

Mr. J. Renwick: That is quite fine. It does not indicate in any way that this government can shuffle off the responsibility for regulations which are made under statute enacted by the assembly. What we are simply saying is that if what the minister says is correct, then there is no need for the provision that they have to be approved by the board.

All we are saying is that the Farm Products Marketing Board is an appointed board; it is not a politically responsible board, and therefore in substitution for the board, as Mr. McRuer said in the first volume of his report, "it should be responsible to a politically responsible body," and I assume the politically responsible body is either the minister himself, or the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Mr. J. Renwick: I notice that the minister did not comment at all about the question that any such regulation should not be a clandestine matter. He did not comment on that. Any such regulations should be published in the Ontario Gazette before they are of any force in effect.

Now surely, Mr. Chairman, if we require other regulations under other statutes which are not an exercise of sub-delegated powers to be published in the Gazette, there is every other reason why a sub-delegated power to seize and detain a particular regulated product should be subject to publication in the Gazette before anyone is subject to the enforcement of that regulation. It seems in all good sense that we should have some public notice of regulations made by any one of the local boards. So far as I know there is nothing in The Farm Products Marketing Act which requires any local board to make any publication of any such regulation. I do not think it is sufficient for the minister to stand up and ignore that part of the problem.

I am asking the minister, in the light of the McRuer report, in the light of everything which has been said, to accept the kind of amendment which we propose tonight or else to answer the question as to why the matter should not be published so that there is public notice of those regulations.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister have any further comments?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I can understand my hon. friend's concern, but I would say this, that if we adhere to his suggestion and we approve his amendment, it means that The Regulations Act would have to be amended. It is as simple as that.

I recognize the reference he makes concerning Mr. McRuer's suggestion, and we will be, of course, reviewing The Farm Products Marketing Act in the light of the report that was tabled today. If it appears that this is the thing to do, we will have to take the necessary steps so to do, as has been done with other legislation which, it has been already announced, will be changed in accordance with the McRuer reports.

The publication of any regulations of the local board or any other regulations, even of an appointed board, as is the Farm Products Marketing Board, is governed by The Regulations Act. It is as simple as that. For us to accept that amendment tonight means that we have got to amend The Regulations Act to do what we want to do, and I do not think we want to do that at this particular time.

Mr. J. Renwick: Why? Ask him why.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Is the minister sure of that?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: This is what my law people tell me.

Mr. Lawlor: I am getting a copy of that Act now.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in supporting the amendment by the hon. member for Riverdale, the federal plan is in the area of the elected officials at this point. The minister has assured the House tonight that, in essence, this may never come about. I gather that from his discussion, this will never happen, but it gives the minister more or less a lever, or a threat, to say this could happen. But I am concerned about the fact that we are once again getting away from the elected people, with powers to seizure and detention by a board—it says any local board. This goes the whole gamut, Mr. Minister, it could be very involved, and insofar as the—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: With no disrespect for my hon. friend, may I suggest that, while it may go to any local board, it can only go there on the approval of The Farm Products Marketing Board which is appointed by the Lieutenant - Governor - in - Council which in turn is responsible to this Legislature. That is the connection, so the Farm Products Marketing Board is responsible to an elected political body, such as this group right here.

The government appoints them, and they are the ones who grant the extension of powers to the local board. They do not grant those extensions of powers unless there is very good and valid reason for granting any extension of powers to those boards.

Mr. Sargent: I will go along with that. The only point I have is that, at this point, the whole area is in the hands of elected people for discussion at federal level now. If they are withholding their decision, we necessarily would not need this, if they were doing their job and giving a national plan. But it is now being decided by the elected officials and the government is tossing it back to a board, which I do not think it is proper should be given these powers. I agree with the hon. member for Riverdale; it should go back to the Lieutenant Governor and the cabinet.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. J. Renwick's motion will please say "aye".

Mr. J. Renwick: Before the matter is put, it is always rather tiresome to reiterate to this government point after point after point. But the point that we are trying to make is that regulations made by a local board under this Act should be published in some way so that the people in the Province of Ontario know that such regulations have been promulgated. Surely that is a very simple and elementary part of the process that we have developed in the Legislature. This is not some regulation, minute regulation, under one of the other statutes of the province, which does not have any impact, where publication is required. This is the power of an elected local board, which has special interests, to seize the product in which they have a special interest and to detain it. The fact that it is an elected board does not eliminate their special interest.

Surely the minister, if he is saying to us—and I do not know if he is correct; my colleague from Lakeshore is trying to ascertain the correctness of his statement that The Regulations Act must be amended—surely before the Lieutenant Governor gives royal assent to this bill, it would be possible, for whatever minor amendment is required, for The Regulations Act to come to the assembly. We would certainly expedite its passage.

I want to reiterate to the government that this party is not prepared to vote for the principle involved in the bill as it is before us in committee, under this section which permits powers of seizure and detention of any of the regulated products to be done under the statute without the regulations, in fact, being published. Can we ask the government, can we beg the government, to adopt that simple process of saying that there must be publication of regulations where the private property of a regulated product of any person is, in fact, seized by a governmental authority? Is that too much to ask of this government or not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, in reply to that suggestion, of course I recognize the validity of the hon. member's argument. I have already given the undertaking that the complete Farm Products Marketing Act will be reviewed in the light of the report which has been submitted this afternoon.

Now if we are to make this piecemeal regulation change, as I am advised by my legal counsel, an amendment to The Regulations Act is required to publish the regulations and to return the regulations first of all to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council for consideration and approval, and then to publish them, because they are an elected board. They are not an appointed board. As I understand it, The Regulations Act only pertains to regulations passed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council. This is my understanding. If we have to delay this legislation to bring in an amendment to The Regulations Act, to my way of thinking this is undue delay because we have, as I pointed out earlier, Mr. Chairman, in many pieces of legislation already approved and in effect and in operation in this province, the right of seizure and detention. I have not heard one hon. member stand in his place today and say that those powers have ever been abused. I simply suggest that we are asking for the same power here.

Mr. Lawlor: On two points!

The first point as to The Regulations Act. I cannot bring myself, acute as the pain may be, to agree with the minister that he is correct, if he would look at section 1 of The Regulations Act.

If I may just depart from that for a moment; you know, pulling this kind of debate and forcing it on coercively is not fair to the opposition nor fair to the government itself in terms of interrogation or of the dissection of the legislation, or bringing this kind of technical point forward at this time of the night. In any event, in other words, I have not had a chance to check the statutory reviews down through the years. But taking the statute as it appears in the 1960 statutes, and I am sure it remains the same to this day, section 1(d) says:

"Regulation" means a regulation rule, order or bylaw of a legislative nature, made or approved under an Act of the Legislature by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council, a minister of the Crown, an official of the government, or a board or a commission, all the members of which are appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

It does not include a series of bylaws or regulations under a number of Acts, none of which have any reference to The Farm Products Marketing Act before us tonight. This particular Act is not excluded, therefore, to give even some kind of whispering lip service to the contentions of McRuer. There should be no reason in the world why the minister would not bow before the request of my colleague and embody that in his legislation.

Let us take a situation: You make a seizure of some poultry product coming in from Quebec, and the individual involved—from whom this has been taken so high-handedly—approaches a lawyer in Grimsby, in some small town, and says, "What are our rights under the existing legislation?" The lawyer says, "I will go and look up the regulation", because that is what the Act talks about, but where are the regulations? They are nowhere to be found. You are left relying completely and gratuitously upon the local board as to whether out of the charity of their hearts they would be prepared to let you glance at their local regulations which are published nowhere.

Surely that is an affront to any concept of justice that we ever had in this province. Surely you are flying in the face not of McRuer but deep-seated principles of British common law. We cannot let that pass. This minister has the authority and the power; please exercise it.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, one other point. A few moments ago, in a very specious way, the minister argued that, "We only got the McRuer report this afternoon. We will take a look at it and, in the light of that, we will amend the whole Farm Products Marketing Act." They have had the first four volumes of the McRuer report, and if the minister and the government have not grasped the essential principles of the first four volumes, quite apart from the fifth one, they will never grasp it. It is our job to see if we can get this little point, this germ of an idea, across the floor of the House. The Prime Minister has come in; maybe he can grasp it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have been here all night.

Mr. MacDonald: No, the Premier has not been here all night.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I heard the member's speech earlier.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the thing that disturbs me about this minister is that he comes in and on occasion he can become so dissembling in his approach—he is so benign, he is so gentle and conciliatory. He came into this House one time and said, "Give me this power. I will never exercise it." Remember what happened—the time came when he, in his misconceived appreciation of the situation, went down like a Peruvian South American coup and took over a whole marketing board while the directors of it, namely the bean board, had been misled off into the hotel down in London.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why is the member singling out Peru? What have they done to him?

An hon. member: When?

Mr. MacDonald: When? What I am saying is that this minister says, "We will not exercise this power. We will regard it with care." I will tell you, Mr. Chairman, our problem is that we have got to protect this minister against his own tendencies on occasion. And his own tendencies—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Treasurer): The member's leader should protect him over the dinner hour. Really that is the big problem we are facing now.

Mr. J. Renwick: Oh, come, come. If there is anybody who does not understand democratic principles it is the Treasurer of the Province of Ontario. He has no regard for them whatsoever.

Mr. Pilkey: What does the minister think this is, a banana republic?

Mr. MacDonald: Having eaten my dinner tonight in the J and J dinery, I do not know what protection I needed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Where is that?

Mr. MacDonald: The Premier should visit it some time and find out what the rest of us live with.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What has the member got against Peruvians?

Mr. MacDonald: I shall not drag it out. All I am saying is that this minister should learn from his own experience. He was the one who got his fingers burned on earlier occasions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did he?

Mr. Pilkey: Is that an American banana republic?

Mr. MacDonald: Sure, the thing backfired and then the growers re-elected the same board and put the same man back in as chairman of the board.

Mr. L. C. Henderson (Lambton): But on a much different basis. Tell all of it. Tell the other half of the story.

Mr. MacDonald: Pardon?

Mr Henderson: Tell the other half of the story.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought I had told the whole.

Mr. Henderson: You have not.

Mr. MacDonald: I have not?

An hon. member: The member for Lambton will get a chance!

Mr. MacDonald: The minister interjected a while ago with a rather left-handed compliment—that I had forgotten more about agriculture than the rest of my colleagues knew. As I was pondering that comment, it occurred to me that he certainly has forgotten more than the whole of the rest of the government know about agriculture but that is not speaking very well, either for him or the rest of the government. Particularly the hon. member for Chatham-Kent.

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): The member did not need to say that now.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I will tell you, I have really made my point but I am trying to fill in time to assist the minister, the deputy and his solicitor. The “germ of an idea” is sinking, the idea is getting across, they are consulting on it over there. It is just possible that they will bring it back and we will be able to protect the people of Ontario against the intentions or the nomenclatures—

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member mind speaking to the amendment?

Mr. MacDonald: I guess I have run out.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments?

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am anxious to hear what the minister has to say about this technical question of interpretation. I am not myself, and this party is not prepared, to be put off on this kind of an issue. We expect the government to say either that The Regulations Act now covers the situation or that it will accept the amendment. If necessary, even from our point of view, we will delete the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council provided we can get the publication.

The minister will tell us in this House now that either The Regulations Act is adequate or, if it is not adequate after consulting with the Minister of Justice and Attorney General (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), undertake that before this bill receives royal assent that there will be an amendment to The Regulations Act introduced into the Legislature which will cover the point. We are not going to be put off about some grandiose view that The Farm Products Marketing Act is going to be reviewed and changed and altered. We are simply saying here that this party stands on the principle we will not agree or consent to the grant to any local board, whatever its constitution, of the right to pass regulations to seize and detain a regulated product, unless those regulations are published in the Ontario Gazette and are therefore available to the public, before they come into effect.

Mr. MacDonald: The government's proposition is offensive.

Mr. J. Renwick: Now that is a question of principle. This party stands on that principle; this party demands the undertaking of the government that this will be done before this bill is given royal assent. That is what we are asking; we can ask no less. We could ask a lot more; we ask no less. We want that undertaking. We expect to have it; we will stay here until we get it.

Mr. Chairman: Does the hon. minister have any comments?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have. I can appreciate the position taken by my hon. friends—

Mr. MacDonald: This is another piece of sloppily prepared legislation.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, it is not sloppily prepared legislation; it is completely consistent with every piece of legislation that we have in which this same power is contained. It is there. Now I suggest that if we pass this legislation, we in effect provide the cure for the problem which exists. What my hon. friend has suggested is that we delay the passage of this legislation, which is badly needed—

Some hon. members: No, no.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh yes, they do, because they say that unless we amend The Regulations Act to provide that this amendment can be published, they will—

Mr. MacDonald: Put it in this Act; it should be done in this Act.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, it cannot be done in this Act.

Mr. MacDonald: Why can it not?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: It has to be done in The Regulations Act. I am told by my solicitors that The Regulations Act has to be amended in order to provide for regulations that are passed by a local board to be submitted to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Stewart: No, I will not permit a question at the moment. I will listen to the member's questions later, but let me explain the position as we see it.

The Farm Products Marketing Board, as all government boards that are appointed, must return its regulations to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council for consideration, approval and publication. The appointed board in this case, the Farm Products Marketing Board, delegates authority to pass regulations to the local boards, which themselves have to be returned to the appointed board, which is the Farm Products Marketing Board in this case, for consideration. And if they approve of those regulations, then the secretary of the local board keeps them on file and advises all who are affected—that is, the producers affected—by the regulation.

That is the situation, but I can see the wisdom of my hon. friend's suggestion and I am quite sincere in that, as far as I am personally concerned, I am quite prepared to recommend that this regulation be amended and changed. But what he is asking us to do is to delay the passage of this bill for an amendment to The Regulations Act. That means it has got to come back here for first reading, second reading, all through the piece.

Mr. Martel: How long would that take?

Mr. MacDonald: My question is simply this, the minister has hung his whole argument on the proposition that The Regulations Act refers to appointed boards, and so he argues the Farm Products Marketing Board is an appointed board, therefore The Regulations Act applies to it, but not to the local boards that are elected. Surely it follows that the local boards are therefore outside the purview of The Regulations Act.

Why cannot you amend this, since it has reference to any regulations that may be passed by the local boards, and say that they will not become effective until they are published? In that way you would cover those areas excluded from The Regulations Act. It seems to me that this is just plain layman's common sense. I do not know what sort of legal trap or maze we are wandering around in. An amendment in this Act refers specifically to what the government is dealing with. It has no reference to all of the other range of appointed boards and The Regulations Act. This is where we want to cover it, in reference to the exercise of powers that the government is bringing in here.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Grey-Bruce had wished to speak before.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to ask the minister what is the panic at this point? All these years we have had this situation; what is the panic tonight?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: We have an amendment before us.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: May I answer the question? As I explained to my hon. friend earlier today, we wanted this legislation through to deal with the particular situation and the point that he has raised in my opinion simply delays by a week to 10 days the passage of the implementation of the legislation that we have given approval to today. He says that it has got to be published in the Ontario Gazette. How long will it take to get that done? My guess is 10 days.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I have pointed out that I am calling for an amendment of this Act which means that at 10:30 when we rise the minister could prepare an amendment and bring it in tomorrow. It would then be introduced into the bill before we finish the committee stage and go to third reading. Now where is the delay? All it stipulates is that a regulation passed under this particular Act must be published in the Ontario Gazette or elsewhere.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: That is the very point. I am concerned with what can happen between now and when that regulation is published in the Ontario Gazette. If the hon. member understood the urgency that can develop in this particular case—literally tons of broilers can be in this province in a matter of hours. It is just as simple as that.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister is playing with something that is going to backfire and blow up in this government's face more than Bill 99.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I do not think so.

Mr. MacDonald: He is playing with fire and does not even know it.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, it seems that the minister is playing a game of some kind, because it says under subsection 6 of section 1, which is pertinent to the amendment that we have made, that no regulation made by a local board under subsection 1 comes into force until it has been approved by the board.

Now let us be fair. That could take a week, 10 days, two weeks, two months—any length of time. We do not know how long it is going to take. And to say at this point that you are not going to take the additional matter of hours in order to make sure that it is published and available to the people who must operate within the provisions of this Act is, at least, treating the people who are supposed to operate within this Act in a very shabby manner.

Surely the government cannot tell me that under subsection—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is the member concerned about the citizens of this province or not?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Of course we are.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He would delay it by 10 days to two weeks.

Mr. Deans: All right, that is fine, Can. the Premier assure me that the—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure it will. How can you get it published by then?

Mr. Deans: That is ridiculous, absolutely ridiculous. Is the Prime Minister saying that every piece of legislation introduced into this House to meet an emergency situation must go into force before regulations are published simply because it takes time to publish them? Is that what he is saying? That in order to meet an emergency situation you do not publish regulations because it takes too long? That, in other words, the people of the province must be governed by regulations over which, or under which, or during which, or by which they have no opportunity to become aware?

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. Standing orders indicate that the House must rise and adjourn at 10:30 p.m. and the committee should rise and report since it is now 10:30. There is no authority under the standing orders to continue unless by government motion to do otherwise.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the House continue to sit until further notice for adjournment.

Mr. Chairman: I believe this has to be done in the House. I do not think this can be done in committee. It should be done with Mr. Speaker in the chair. So I will entertain a motion to rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves the Committee of the Whole House rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the Whole House begs to report progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that pursuant to rule 3 the House continue to sit until there is a motion to adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any debate on the motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): There were no "ayes."

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): That was sloppy procedure, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It was quite obvious to Mr. Speaker that there was a larger voice vote for the motion than against the motion.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How can you hear something you did not ask for and did not get?

Mr. Speaker: I have no objection to putting the motion again. The motion is that the House continue to sit.

Is it the pleasure of the House the motion carry?

In my opinion the motion is carried.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Wishart moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: House in Committee of the Whole; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

House in committee on Bill 10, An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: When the committee did rise and report progress, the hon. member for Wentworth had the floor. He may proceed.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The point I want to make is that when it suits the government's purpose, it seems to be prepared to bend the rules of the law. When we were debating a bill dealing with the layoffs—

Mr. Chairman: I must ask the hon. member to stick to the motion before us—

Mr. Deans: I am.

Mr. Chairman: —which is an amendment to section 6.

Mr. Deans: I am talking to the amendment and the government's answer that they cannot possibly wait until the regulations are printed. When we debate matters of increased pensions, or when we debate matters of provisions for layoffs, or when we debate any number of other things in this House dealing with the effect of legislation on people, we cannot have it put into force until the regulations are printed, and that is always the big cry. We cannot get the regulations through. We cannot get the regulations printed.

So why is it in this case that suddenly that does not become of any consequence? Why is it in this case that people are going to have their produce that rightfully belongs to them confiscated without knowing under what conditions they have had it confiscated? How can you possibly have a law drawn up by some individual that affects the individual properties of people, without having some opportunity for those people to at least read the regulations?

This is the whole problem with the Act. You cannot tell me that it is not possible to have in printed form, printed in the press of Ontario, the regulations of this Act within 24 hours of the time that they are approved by the board.

Hon. W. A. Stewart (Minister of Agriculture and Food): That is not what the hon. member said.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Has the hon. minister read the amendment?

Mr. Deans: Of course, that is what we said. All we are asking—

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Is that it is in the Gazette.

Mr. Deans: No, it does not say the Gazette—it says "published". All we are asking is that the government agree that the regulations, prior to going into force, will be published—"published" could well mean in the local newspapers in the Province of Ontario—so that they are on the public record, so that the people who have to operate within the Act have access to the regulations, so that they know under what regulation it is that their produce, which is rightfully theirs, is being confiscated. Surely that makes sense?

Mr. P. J. Yakabuski (Renfrew South): There is the next leader of the party. I can see it now.

Mr. MacDonald: That is more than we can say to the member opposite.

Mr. Yakabuski: The member for York South is a has-been.

Mr. MacDonald: That is better than a never-has-been.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, the minister is obviously discussing something, I would like to—

Mr. Chairman: Yes, but the hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Deans: Yes. I just do not want to keep repeating it until after I hear what he is going to say.

Mr. Chairman: I will call the member to order if he does.

Mr. Deans: I realize that.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Deans: Is it not possible that the minister can agree to that very simple proposition that makes it entirely and abundantly fair to the people who must operate within the Act? Surely that kind of agreement is not difficult to obtain, and surely we can get it and carry on with the Act and get on with the business of providing some kind of protection?

If the minister can agree to that then we can continue. Is there no way that that can be agreed?

Hon. A. A. Wishart (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): I do not have the wording of the amendment before me, but I distinctly recall—and the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) will confirm—that when he stood on his feet he expressed very clearly that his amendment required, and that he was asking—demanding, in fact—that the regulations of the board, he said clearly, be published in the Gazette and be not effective until published in the Gazette. Those are the words of the hon. member for Riverdale. I think the Minister of Agriculture and Food has clearly indicated this. Perhaps the hon. member for Wentworth does not understand that—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: —the Ontario Gazette is an official government publication which used to be, I think, published once a month. I believe it is now published every two weeks.

Mr. Deans: I get it sent to me every week.

Hon. Mr. Wishart: But it would take, let us say, two weeks to comply with the request as expressed in the amendment, and the minister has clearly explained that in that time great havoc could be wrought to the producers of broilers in this province, and we cannot brook that delay.

Mr. Deans: That explanation sounds very reasonable. Now what we are saying to the government is this: We are prepared in the amendment that was offered to concede that the time may be somewhat delayed. We are saying that we are prepared to accept publication.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I want to revert to what a former colleague of ours would often say, that we here are not engaged in all the pendency of the semantics of drafting regulations. The former member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) used to make this point.

We will accept any amendment We will let the government propose the amendment. We will withdraw it, provided we get an agreement to publish in the Ontario Gazette.

One learns things instantaneously in the course of these debates. The Official Notices Publication Act—and I draw the attention of the government to that Act—seems to me to deal with the time problem which has now been raised by the government—the time problem to which my colleague the hon. member for Wentworth refers.

The government indicated that there would be a time lag from the time when the Ontario Food Products Marketing Board approved of a regulation until it was published in the Gazette, and that that time lag might amount to anywhere up to three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine or 10 days, and that the persons that the minister is going to move to protect under this bill would thereby suffer unless he could do it almost instantaneously.

I am simply saying to the government that this Official Notices Publication Act appears to me to say that the Ontario Gazette,

Being the official notices publication of Ontario, authorized by chapter 6 of the Statutes of Ontario, 1868, shall be published by the Queen's Printer at the times and in the form and style as the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council may order.

It would therefore appear to me to be quite possible, as was done with the Canada Gazette in wartime, to publish a single sheet, special edition of the Ontario Gazette instantaneously with the decision of the board to make the approval provided in the statute.

Therefore I am simply saying that if the order-in-council of the Lieutenant Governor is effective it could be drafted in such a way to eliminate entirely any time lag between the time when the Ontario Food Products Marketing Board approved of the particular regulation and the time when it was published.

I have spent, as most members have, some time watching the display in the Ferguson Block or the Macdonald Block—whichever it is—about the great improvements in the Gazette and the printing of it. I am simply saying it is quite possible for this government to meet our requirement by saying that there will be a special, single-page edition of the Ontario Gazette published in such a way that there will be no time lag from the decision of the board to give the approval.

We will accept whatever amendment and language is necessary; we will recess now while they draft it. We will ask that it be done now; we ask that it be brought back tomorrow morning.

We really do not care as long as it is done and done in this bill. We demand that it be done, we ask and beseech the government to agree to give us this undertaking and to do so.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, I simply suggest to you that to do this would be a complete departure from normal procedure in doing these things.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): That is exactly the point.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: I am quite willing to undertake—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Oh, I listened to what my hon. friends said, maybe they would do us the same favour.

We are quite willing to undertake to publish, by letter, to anyone requesting the information, the regulation that would be drafted by the local board.

My hon. friends are setting up a situation hypothetically that would appear to affect thousands of people. Quite frankly I doubt if anybody will be affected. There may be the odd person who seeks to thwart the regulation which is now in effect—

Mr. MacDonald: Sometimes your hypothetical situations become realities.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —the regulation that is now in effect, which requires the marketing permit. If so, I want to have this legislation in effect to stop that kind of action. So I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we proceed with the approval of this legislation as drafted and we will undertake to provide the information to anyone requesting it.

Mr. Deans: I just want to make a point with the minister. This bill has sat on the order paper for at least a week. The time that he is talking about and the printing of the regulations that he is talking about is a week or 10 days. He was not concerned a week ago when he first introduced this bill as to whether or not the people who were supposed to be benefiting from this bill were suffering during the interim period. He suddenly became very concerned and I wonder how much of his concern is real and how much is political.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, we still have not heard from the minister any explanation as to why the procedure suggested by the member for Riverdale cannot be used—that is, the new means of putting out a special edition of the Gazette for publication. The whole speech made by the minister with regard to just sending it to those who appear to have some interest is meaningless. What we should be doing with all these regulations, in principle, is getting them out and published in the formal way that any regulation should be, and that is through the Gazette.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Mr. Chairman, may I explain to my hon. friend from York Centre that despite the interpretation made by the member for Lakeshore, section 2 of The Official Notices Publication Act from which he quoted a moment ago shows what documents can be published in the Gazette, and the local board regulations are not listed in that section. In effect, we have to amend that Act in order to do what we want to do.

I do not think there is anyone in this House who disagrees with the principle that is being debated. Certainly these regulations should be published. We agree. But we simply cannot do it without amendments to various statutes. The McRuer report was handed down today dealing with this very point, and as I indicated these Acts must be re-organized, looked at again—amended if necessary—to take into consideration these very valid points that have been made by Mr. Justice McRuer and supported by members of this House. But in this situation we cannot do it, because we simply do not have the legislative authority to do what our hon. friend suggests should be done.

Now surely my word—spoken in front of the Prime Minister (Mr. Davis) and the House leader, and this government and this hon. assembly—to undertake to do these things, I hope is sufficient to indicate—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is not sufficient.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: —that our intentions are in the right place and so rightly directed. We want to get on with this legislation tonight.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, there are obviously a number of alternatives open to the government and they have dug their heels in and they are getting stubborn. As usual, when the hour gets late, we are going to be punished because they will not accept a reasonable proposition.

The minister stands up now and refers to section 2 of The Official Notices Publication Act which opens with the phrase:

Unless another mode of publication is authorized by law, there shall be published in the Ontario Gazette all notices, orders, regulations and other documents relating to matters within the authority of the Legislature that require publication.

There are alternative methods available.

First of all, we solved the time problem. There is nothing to prevent, by order-in-council, provision being made for special issues of the Gazette to meet the requirements of publishing these regulations.

We are now dealing with the next point that the minister raised—that somehow The Official Notices Publication Act does not require it. It gives the alternative, “unless another mode of publication is authorized by law”. This is going to be a law. If we change the amendment to say, “published in the Ontario Gazette” we take it out of this particular section 2 of the Act and we come under section 1. The time lag is met and the public knows what the regulations are.

Mr. MacDonald: Or published as the Lieutenant-Governor-in-Council sees fit, but published.

Mr. J. Renwick: You can do it any way you want to do it. I question very much the arguments that the government has put forward to defeat this particular amendment. I question very much the good faith of the suggestion that we are going to wait for some overall amendment of The Food Products Marketing Act.

An hon. member: The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Mr. J. Renwick: The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Prime Minister): The member should not.

Mr. J. Renwick: Or of The Regulations Act. Is it because there are other statutes which contain it, that that, in some way, makes this right?

Mr. MacDonald: Every roadblock you have raised has been eliminated.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not, it is not.

Mr. J. Renwick: You are just destroying your own credibility on this question. I am simply saying to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, I am saying to the Prime Minister of this province that it is a fundamental principle that delegated legislation by regulation is published so that the people of the province know what the law is. It is just as simple as that. There is no time lag. There is no way, in any way, shape or form in which—

Hon. Mr. Davis: No one is debating that.

Mr. J. Renwick: —anyone is going to be hurt. Now let us get the amendment; let us get it accepted; let us get, at least, that minimum principle established—

An hon. member: There is nothing to it.

Mr. J. Renwick: —and stop this ridiculous nonsense of keeping us here to fight these nonsensical points.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. J. Renwick's motion will please say “aye.”

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I am not prepared to let the matter go forward.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. In any event, I have two other amendments to two other completely distinct and separate subsections of section 1. I would not want it to be, if this matter is pushed through, that it would obviate or eliminate the merits, which I am sure will be wholly acceptable by the government in this case, of the two sub-amendments that I have to make.

Could I have a ruling on that please, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: It has been the procedure in committee that, when we are dealing with any particular section of a bill, we deal with the subsections or clauses of that particular section in order and that, if there are any subsequent amendments to any subsequent section, it would be in order to accept it. However, we are dealing with the last item in section 1 of the bill.

Mr. Lawlor: By happenstance, if I may point it out to you, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member started at the beginning, which is normally a good place to start, but with the force that you drove it through, he was getting to the end rather quickly. In other words, while he was on his feet, in a single speech he went from the business of delegation and sub-delegation powers over to other—there was no breach in the middle. I suggest to you that it would be highly legalistic on your part to insist upon that.

Mr. Chairman: Might I say to the hon. member for Lakeshore that I did ask the hon. member for Riverdale which specific section he wished to amend and he particularly recited clause 6. However, I am not going to be that restrictive in this particular case.

I would ask that this particular amendment we are now debating, to the last clause of section 1 of the bill, be deferred in order to permit any previous amendments to come before the committee, because we cannot dispense with number 6; that carries a section if it is defeated.

Mr. J. Renwick: Without entering into the argument, Mr. Chairman, we would certainly agree to the deferment, because, during the deferment period, the government might very well be able to come in with an amendment which we would be prepared to accept.

Mr. Chairman: I think, under the circumstances, I want to be fair about this. If the hon. member for Riverdale will defer dealing with his amendment, then I will accept an amendment to a prior section from the hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the amendments which I wish to move—I will deal with them one at a time—will soften up the hard heart of the government sufficiently and, seeing the light and bowing their heads, they will enter then into the peaceful valleys of what regulations should be made available or not.

The amendment I wish to make is moved by the member for Lakeshore that subsection 2 of section 1 of Bill 10 be deleted.

Mr. Chairman: Is that at the top of page 2, the second paragraph?

Mr. Lawlor: That is at the top of page 2; subsection 2 at the top of page 2, which reads: "Any regulated product seized and detained under this section is seized and detained at the risk and expense of the owner."

Now surely—

Mr. Chairman: May I put the amendment, please? Moved by Mr. Lawlor that subsection 2 of section 1 of Bill 10 be deleted.

The hon. member for Lakeshore.

Mr. Lawlor: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. As I was saying, surely there can be no question but that this ought to be accepted by the minister if there is any good faith in the government at all. If he gives anything more than lip service to the recommendations of McRuer—it is all set forth, and I am sure that the minister has in front of him the power and the glory, the words of the decalogue in terms of McRuer himself. If he has not then—ad nauseam if it may be—we will repeat what was said at 424 of volume 1, report 1, which has been out for many years now. There has been plenty of opportunity to look it over, plenty of opportunity to embody its phraseology. It did not come before us as a revelation at 2 o'clock this afternoon. It has been around for an awful long time, and it says:

If the right of stoppage is to be given, the officer should at least have reasonable grounds to believe that the vehicle contains a farm product.

And then comes the important part:

It is an unreasonable trespass on the rights of an owner that the detention should be "at the risk of the owner." There seems no reason why the ordinary rights of bailee and bailor should not apply.

That is someone who has taken over a chattel from somebody else and is responsible to that other for his control and possession of that.

The owner has no means by which to protect the products that are detained, and the detention may be continued until the owner of the farm product complies with the Act and regulations. This is an extraordinarily vague section of a penal nature. No one appears to have authority to determine when the owner has complied with the Act and the regulations, and that last sentence is equally applicable to this present legislation as it was to the anachronistic old legislation. No one seems to have this final determination of authority but that is a secondary point—one which we have not relied upon or brought into debate to any substantial degree today, but do look at that section. By what reason, in the light of what I have read from McRuer, can the minister possibly maintain a section that flies in the face of obvious civil liberties to the extent that this does? Will it take any skin off his back, or for that matter off the top of his head, if he deletes that section? Just what detrimental effect does it have? Surely, as I said to begin with, he ought to give at least that much cognizance to what McRuer has set forth and if he does not do that, then a pity it is because then, in my opinion, this government sitting over there has very little rapport with, understanding of, or desire to give effect to the recommendations of McRuer.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): In response to the amendment which has been made by the member for Lakeshore, surely in this subsection this government, which is much given above all else for the protection of property in this province, has the obligation now to protect in this sense the rights of the persons who are in effect being circumscribed by this type of legislation.

We have seen time after time, not only in the courts but in the general activities within our society, a situation whereby property rights are being placed, time and time again, over and above certain other civil rights. In this situation, especially for a government that views property in almost a sacrosanct light, it is most important that the charges and costs which are going to be imposed upon someone who is presumed evil or presumed to be breaking the law before the matter is proved should surely concern us here.

In this case any regulated product is going to include a large variety and a great number of products as the years go by. If indeed we are to build up, as it would appear, on the same position of a disarmament conference, the approach from one province to the other of separate rules and regulations which may be negotiated, we are obviously going to be getting ourselves back into the same situation that the Ottawa agreement on tariffs resulted in in the Commonwealth preference problems in the early Nineteen Thirties.

If we are attempting to hedge in our own prosperity so that we are all right compared to what other provinces or other nations may be, then we are going to be building up a forest of regulations and a forest of problems which is going to be a gargantuan task to overcome.

In this case, surely the owner who is involved in the shipping or the ownership of various products—and they will be many if they are all the regulated ones that we presume—surely he should have the protection of the courts available to him and should not have the onus shifted on to him by this portion of the statute.

There are too many regulated products that we can presume are of a perishable nature. If the government is going to involve itself in their seizure, I think there must be some obligation to state that if this seizure does not prove to have been invalid or unnecessary or unwarranted, the costs of the losses which these persons may be put to should be validly the subject of compensation from the government.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, two points—

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, two points; one, the minister says that the legislation was not sloppily drafted. I want to ask if the word “use” and “risk” are interchangeable in his mind? Because in the explanation at the side of subsection 2, it says, “regulated products seized and detained at the use and expense of owner”, while in the subsection itself it is “detained at the risk and expense of the owner.”

If you do not think that is sloppy drafting, I do not know what it is. Anyhow, aside from that, it is a very small point. The whole situation here is that a person could well be in violation of a regulation that he is unable to obtain.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, the minister said he would make it available. We have also said we would be prepared to alter The Regulations Act to solve this problem comprehensively and on a practical basis. Surely this should be sufficient.

Mr. Deans: Some day.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Not some day.

Mr. Deans: In the meantime, anyhow, it is quite conceivable that a person starting the day after these regulations are approved by the board could be in violation of a regulation that he has not had an opportunity to view. His produce could be seized or detained at his risk and expense without his having had the opportunity to view the regulations under which he might operate and must operate. Surely that does not make sense.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Let us be practical.

Mr. Deans: We are being practical. We have offered the government a solution to that problem.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, the opposition did not.

Mr. Deans: Of course it is. It is just as practical as saying that the people who are shipping the produce are going to ship hundreds of thousands of tons of it into the province simply because they have a one-week delay in regulation publication. Every bit as practical.

Hon. Mr. Stewart: Quite possible!

Mr. Deans: I do not think it is right to have a group of people in competition with someone else, to draft regulations that are not published, and then to make other people subject to those regulations without their first having prior knowledge of the content. To hold them responsible for all risk and loss does not make any sense. I think that minister, if he thought it out, would agree with me.
